I dare say that most of us have witnessed the machinations of several of the basketball coaches who operate in our area. We have undoubtedly seen the "lonely, short-distance runner" carrying his message between the bench and the huddle on the gridiron. A goodly number of us have sat at a sports' banquet and heard the "win-at-all-costs" sermon.

What do these three pictures have in common: The arm-waving coach, the messenger, the amateur sermonizer? The common factor is "professionalism." These men, pushed in Madison Avenue style by the pressure of public interest and funds, have become so caught up in the art of winning that they have forgotton the three basic aims of amateur sports: to learn the game, to experience healthly competition, to have fun.

How can Billy Cunningham mature as a man and as a basketball player if he is so concerned about winning that, being the best shooter on the team, he becomes burdened with the responsibility of carrying the whole team on his shoulders? Can Dieter Krause taste the flavor of healthy competition if he is caught in such an ambiance of winning that he finds himself predisposed toward "decking" his now enemy, Art Heyman? Is it within the bounds of amatuer athletics to so work athletes up emotionally for a victory that they cry upon losing? Can Junior Edge become a better field general if the plays are called for him? Gentlemen and coaches, college athletics is a game. College coaching is a business or professional endeavor only in so far as it improves character and continues the learning process.

A coach's job is to teach during practice hours. The players should be given the chance to perform on their own in the games. An amateur football team should have a field general who is learning as he performs. An amateur basketball team should have a captain who runs the team himself. After all, the sports program at UNC is still subject to one of the governing precepts of this university—to learn through performance. If such is no longer the case, then let's separate the athletic program from the academic community and incorporate it into the minor divisions of the professional ranks.

Although the very nature of the individual sport minimizes "outside" interference, coaches of said sports have a tendency to sentimentalize the idea of "character building." The coach, under the pressure of winning, makes the erroneous equation of: winning equals character formation His tactic is usually a fired up speech to the boys about "giving his all." The subtle intimationi s, that if the boy doesn't win, then he hasn't given his all.

In recent days here at UNC, there have been "subterranean murmurs" about grade-changing and Honor Council concessions for athletes. These blatat violations of UNC principles would not occur if the sportsman was not a privileged character who, although having lost the preeminent position held in the last 40's, still maintains an exalted, but questionable, rank in our midst. This rank is spurred on by overemphasis upon winning.

We have seen in the basketball "fixes" how power, which comes to a sport "too big for its own breeches," corrupts. Peripheral measures have been taken but we have not struck at the core of the matter—the philoscphy and method of our coaching. May I remind us that the primary reason for the existence of amateur sports is, not winning, but learning and enjoyment.

Race Relations In Four Years

To the Editors,

For anyone concerned about race relations who has been in Chapel Hill for the last four years, the real poignancy of 'To Kill a Mockingbird' was not so much the touching story as the situation in which the movie was shown. When one reflects back on the Chapel Hill of four years ago when Franklin Street was for all intents and purposes the main street of a white man's colony, he can be proud of the strides that have been made. In 1959 the color barriers were as real and as seemingly insurmountable as any provincial Southern town. The atmosphere was clearly hostile to the Negro, and he lived in the uncertainty of not knowing where he might again suffer that incredibly degrading humiliation of rejection which it is impossible for a white student to imagine.

And in these four years the whole atmosphere has changed through the courgeous work of bith whites and Negroes. Barriers have been smashed everywhere from eating places to movie houses, and remain only in a few disgraceful enclaves. The Negro now is a natural part of the economic and social life of Franklin Street, and no longer feels the tension and discomfort there that he did so recently. It is a great tribute to those who bore public derision in times when integrationists weren't so fashionable to bring this change of facilities and attitudes about.

If only someone would gather together the anachronistic holdouts who still remain in this community, and treat them to a free night at the movies, some closed minds might finally be penetrated. Not only might they realize that they are only more refined Bob Ewells, but also that colored folks can be just as well-dressed, just as clean and orderly as white folks; in fact that they are "folks" to begin with just like us.

Man, Politics And Extinction

To the Editors,

In today's world, the only alternative to nuclear destruction is world disarmament and peace. Kennedy and Khrushchev alike join in acknowledging this fact it is one no thoughtful person will deny. Nevertheless, the tempo of the arms race continues to quicken, the temperature of the Cold War continues to climb. The "peace" is growing increasingly difficult to maintain. Not only are both sides more nervous and less willing to negotiate seriously than they were, the chances of accidental war are multiplying as the number of nuclear devices and nations controlling them proliferate. How many undiscovered General Walkers hold key positions in both armies? The New York TIMES has too often reported misread radar screens that were corrected seconds before disaster. Both sides insist that they will strike first if necessary. What's to prevent a pre-emptive attack by one side or the other at the height of the next crisis while each belligerent is waiting for the other to back down. And doesn't our present diplomatic situation mirror the one that prevailed before World War I, the war that nobody wanted and that couldn't happen anyway?

The only thing new about this drama is the virtual certainty that there will be no repeat performance if we allow it to play through to its historic conclusion. According to a study published in the fall, 1960, issue of the Canadian Army Journal, there have been 1,656 arms races since the year 650 B.C. Sixteen of these ended in economic collapse; all the rest in war. History amply attests that deterrence has never deterred.

We have almost brain-rinsed ourselves into believing that this is not so, but our past experiences prevent any complete conviction. Thus we are earnestly assuring ourselves that if it does come war won't really be all that bad. As the deadliness of our weapons increases, estimates of our probable dead decline. We are vastly heartened to learn that no more than thirty to forty million Americans should die in the first eighteen hours of a nuclear attack. What, though, if weather conditions are not so favorable as those the prediction demanded? What if the size and nature of the Soviet attack were different from the kind of attack these figures anticipate? Gerald Piel, the editor of Scientific American, has said that a 1000-megaton bomb detonated at the height of a space satellite would engulf an area equivalent to five western states in flames. There is no theoretical limit to the size of H-bombs, and Piel's statement has yet to be questioned. Why should our enemies use the relatively puny attack we expect, when without warning, (since such satellites could be shot aloft days or even months in advance without our suspecting their nature), they could cremate the continent. And even if they attacked with only planes and missiles, even if we began to "prevail," (nuclear theorists no longer use the word "win"), can we expect an enemy to capitulate without using his ultimate weapons?

War is an impending reality to which each of us is trying frantically to adjust. The adjustment, eased by projects like the officially approved fallout shelters, will be made if we continue to drug our minds and morals with abstract figures, to permit our government agencies and policy-makers to delude us, and to turn a deaf ear to unpleasant facts. Each of us is fleeing the reality that war will almost beyond a doubt involve his very own death. We react with extreme distrust and hostility when some one tries to make us turn our heads. Yet only in a full awareness of death are we prepared to evaluate life truly. And until as a nation we achieve that awareness, there will be no hope of averting the atomic death that is rushing out of the future towards each of us.

Whole Truth On Powell

To the Editors,

During the last few weeks, news articles and editorials have been appearing in the newspapers concerning Congressman Adam Clayton Powell's recent trip to Europe, which was financed by the Federal government. Mr. Powell has been severely criticized by certain government officials — the most recent one being Senator John Williams of Delaware, newspaper editors, and many other persons serving in various capacities.

These newspaper reports of Congressman Powell's European trip would lead us to believe that his trip was purely for pleasure. A conclusion of this sort would be most erroneous. The fact is that Mr. Powell has recently made a 100-page report to the Federal government on how American foreign all money is being spent in Europe. This should serve as evidence that Mr. Powell did not spend all of his time in night clubs. I have yet to read anything concerning this report in any of the newspapers. (My information was gathered from a leading weekly magazine.)

In the future, may I urge you, along with other dailies, to print all of the facts of a particular issue.

Daily Tar Heel —A History Of Campus 'Gods'

By ED YODER
Greensboro Daily News

Few but college newspaper editors enjoy godliness in their time. One who has since resumed ordinary clay may then be pardoned a salute to his former Olympus. I am thinking, of course, of the Daily Tar Heel, UNC student paper, which last week celebrated its 70th anniversary.

Its editors, remarked an incumbent, "often assume the role of campus god—for lack of any other vaguely responsible element to fill the vacuum." This is essentially true; but the grinding task of issuing a four-page daily with one foot in the classrooms permits little basking in this godliness.

Indeed, it was only when stripped of his thunderbolts and released onto the tennis courts late in the spring of 1956 that this god learned from a charming coed: "Ia lways wanted to stop you as you dashed about the campus—but you seemed so remote, so busy, so important, that I was scared to try."

What power! What infallibility! I should have suspected it in time—recalling how one walked trembling into the DTH's delapidated sanctum in the student union as a freshman. The mirth of the gods, which Homer called inextinguishable, seemed so then. The editor was Barry Farber, a gangling wrestler who spoke, they said, six languages and wrote with a like number of gorgeous Scandinavian girls hovering at his elbow—and who wrote well, too. Another immortal was Chuck Hauser, now an editor of the Charlotte Observer, who seemed the most professional journalist imaginable. Every day he dissected the front page with a red pencil. Also, there was Rolfe Neill, the blunt-spoken, who in the McCarthy era reduced a hard-faced FBI man near tears for snooping on college students. This consortium of reigning immortals, to be sure, lacked no sense of the Daily Tar Heel's majesty—or its infallibility.

* * *

How was one to become a part of it? My first attempt at Daily Tar Heel punditry—a column in the Albert Terhune vein about campus dogs—fell flat. Neill rejected it: "I don't like it; it's no good." (I think he said "no damned good"; profanity was de rigeur.) One accepted this rejection as if it were a kind of journalistic purple heart, considering its source, and lived to write an equally intolerable inquiring reporter column called "pulling the grass roots" and also bad pieces on Tom Wolfe, who as a former DTH editor seemed an appropriate subject, if an unfortunate prose-style model.

Anyway the point is made: Daily Tar Heel editors did fill the godly vacuum. And if the illusion of editorial omniscience has passed, I am glad t he Daily Tar Heel feels chipper on its birthday. It must. It has always specialized in blatant deeds and sayings. One day in my time it loftily observed that the University at Chapel Hill had sunk to "a teapot in a academic tempest." "It is as though," this immortal broadside continued, "our tubes had been tied off . . . We sit here, the calm eye of an academic storm raging elsewhere."

An April Fool edition of the same era revealed that Sen. Joe McCarthy (our standard bete noire) would convoke a star chamber investigation of big-time athletics. A photo of the senator, peering with magnifying glass at the nether end of a horse, adorned the expose. The tradition continues. The other day, the DTH impishly announced the organization of a club with an impossible oriental name, "in honor of he Chinese Communist who stabbed John Birch."

Plainly, the Daily Tar Heel specializes in effrontery. "No one is safe from its barbs," boasts a present editor, "from chancellor to student legislators, from coaches to magazine editors." True—and salutary, I think. In all honesty, the mystery is why Chapel Hill, unlike those timid universities who tightly muzzle their embarrassing student press, benevolently tolerates the Tar Heel.

* * *

I thought I had an insight when Chancellor House (emeritus as he now is) confronted me in the Carolina Inn lobby, just before the year on rarefied Olympus was to end. He noted my impending graduation. "Well, Y—," he asked, "do you think the university can survive without you?" Here the good old man had probed to the deep-most, unthinkable truth: The Tar Heel in its most frenzied tantrums could do no permanent damage; the editorial heavens could shake and thunder, but the campus endured forever.

Most college administrators do not comprehend this amusing truth, and would have avenged their injury by requiring a pound or so of student flesh. That has never happened to the DTH.

Phillips Russell, who edited the paper in 1903 or thereabouts, tells how he was one day summoned by President Venable, who expressed a wish to read DTH editorials before they saw print. Mr. Russell assented; but he told the president he must come to the Daily Tar Heel office to do so. Dr. Venable neved did. N

So the Daily Tar Heel continues to thrive on a double diet of benevolent administrative tolerance and the special illusion of its youthful editors that all questions are answerable from one angle—their own. That is what the incumbent means by "the role of campus god." There are, on the whole, less constructive gods.

Letters Welcome

The editors of the Daily Tar Heel gladly accept letters from students and other members of the University community.

Letters must be free from libel, in good taste, and limited to 300-500 words. They should be typed, double spaced, if possible. Letters on any topic are welcome.

All letters become the property of the Daily Tar Heel, and may be published unless the writer requests otherwise.

No anonymous letters will be printed, regardless of subject matter or worth. Every letter writer should include his signature with a campus address that can be verified.

Printers Agree On Wagner's Terms; Strike Nearing End

NEW YORK (UPI)—Publishers and striking printers Friday accepted new contract terms suggested by Mayor Robert F. Wagner bringing in sight the end of the city's $364 million newspaper blackout—longest and costliest in New York history—three months to the day after it started.

It was expected to take several days to clean up details of the agreement, obtain rank-and-file ratification, settle terms with other craft unions and get the 20,000 newspaper employees idled by the blackout back on the job.

The best "educated guess" was that it would take until mid-week at the earliest and possibly the end of next week to get the newspapers back on Manhattan streets.

Strike leader Bertram A. Powers, president of International Typographical Union (ITU) Local 6, called the settlement a "victory." But he expressed dissatisfaction with the terms when he agreed—some two hours after the ITU Executive Council and international President Elmer Brown accepted Wagner's non-binding recommendation and three hours after the publishers agreed.

"Not Completely Happy"

"I am not completely happy with the economic issues—but I guess no one really is," Powers said. "We think we should have gotten more money."

In Washington, Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, who had taken a personal hand in the dispute during the first six weeks of the blackout, said he found great "satisfaction" and "relief" in the settlement.

The White House had no immediate comment, but Press Secretary Pierre Salinger said President Kennedy might comment later.

The settlement provided for a $12.27 weekly package increase in a two year contract, to begin the day the strike ends.

Amory Bradford, general manager of the New York Times and chairman of the Publishers' Association of New York City, said the settlement was a "compromise" that would not threaten the survival of the newspapers.

"We would not have accepted it if we thought it would force any papers out of business," Bradford said.

Other Strikes

Strikes by the mailers, an ITU affiliate, and the stereotypers still remained to be settled but sources close to the situation felt the issues involved would be cleared up quickly.

Powers said he felt the settlement was a victory for the printers because it provided for a common contract expiration date, which he had regarded as the most important issue, a reduction in the work week from 36¼ hours to 35 hours and job protection against automation.

The settlement also includes a $4 weekly salary increase the first year, an additional $4 the second, and two additional days sick leave in the second year of the contract. Printers now average $141 per week.

The union had wanted its contract to expire on the date the contract with the Newspaper Guild expires. Shortly before the strike began the Guild signed a contract which expires Oct. 31, 1964.

Expected To Agree

Guild members are expected to agree to extend their contract to coincide with the expiration date of the contracts to be signed with the printers and other craft unions.

On the automation issue, the printers got a guarantee that none would be laid off as a result of the use of punched tape to set stock market tables and quotations.

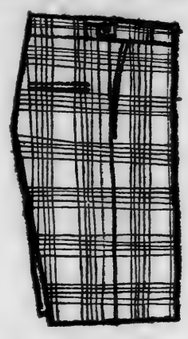
The terms allow publishers to use tape supplied by United Press International and the Associated Press. The tape would be used to activate unmanned linecasting machines setting stock price type. But the terms specify that no printer regularly employed when the old contract expired Dec. 7 can be laid off because of the introduction of tape—and further protects substitute printers who eventually gain the status of a permanent employee.

The printers went on strike Dec. 8 against the Times, News, Journal-American and World Telegram and Sun. Five other papers immediately suspended operations in the city. These were the Mirror, Herald Tribune, Long Island Star-Journal, Long Island Press, and the Post, which last week broke ranks with the publishers and resumed publication Monday.

PRESS CLUB TALK

Mal Mallette, managing editor of the Winston-Salem Journal, will address the UNC Press Club at 8 p.m. Monday on the topic "What the Editor Expects of the Reporter."

Refreshments will be served and Mallette will answer questions after his initial talk. Owen Bishop, president of the Press Club, said the meeting is open to the public.



Bennett To Address Young Republicans

North Carolina Legislator Thomas S. Bennett will speak to the UNC Young Republicans Club at 7 p.m. March 12 in Gerrard Hall.

Carteret County native Bennett graduated from UNC in 1956 with an A.B. and received his LL.D. in 1958. While a student at UNC, Bennett was a member of Phi Alpha Delta Law Fraternity, was on the Men's Honor Council, in the Di-Phi and in the Order of the Old Well.

The meeting is open to the public.

Woollen Gym Hosts ACC Track Show

Field Events Will Display National Stars

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK

Duke's Gesswein, returning here to defend the shot title he won last season at 54 feet, 5¼ inches, will get the big show underway with a performance in the Tin Can at 10 a.m.

Clark Defending Champion

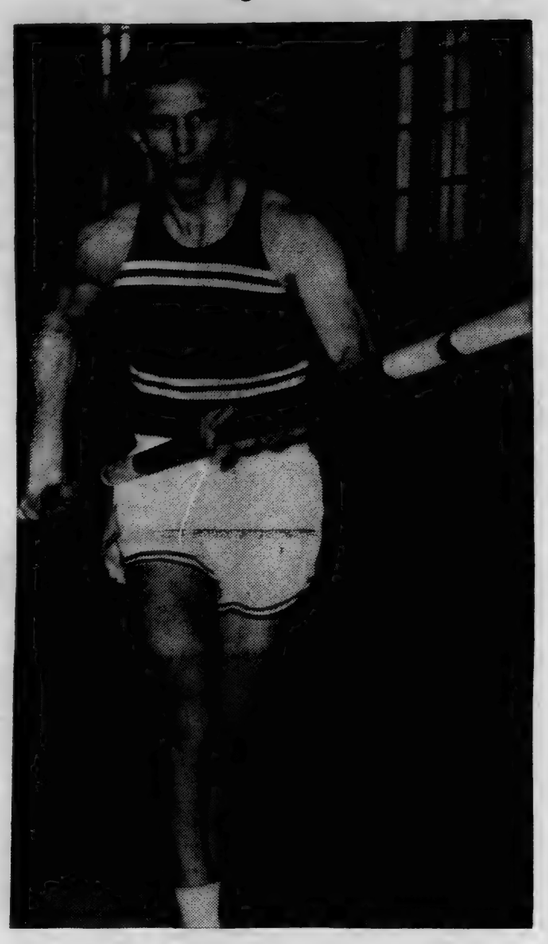
Clark, UNC's talented jumper, also is a defending champuion. As a sophomore last March, he set an ACC record of 6-7¾. This standard is expected to go today, however, for Tommy leaped 6-8 just two weeks ago in the National AAU Meet.

Maryland's Jim Bland and George Leonard are also expected to show well in the jumping event.

In spite of the glowing accomplishments of these above-mentioned field performers and the excitement generated by the mile run and other races, the premier spotligtht in this year's Games will be focused at 7:00 tonight.

At that time, Belitza, one of only nine vaulters to clear the 16-foot barrier, and UNC's Heath Whittle are expected to battle it out for the pole vault title. The two finished one-two last year with Belitza's winning jump measuring 15 feet.

The broad jump, which will also be held in the Tin Can this morning, figures to be a wide-open affair. Defending champion Billy Gambrell will have to sit it out due to his participation in the Blue-Gray all-star football game this past fall.



The South Carolina star, already signed by the AFL's Buffalo Bills, jumped 23 feet 8 inches last season. The meet record—the oldest in the ACC books—is Charlie Hubbard's mark of 23-8¼ set in 1935.

"Most Capable Group"

The field today is called by UNC coach Dale Ranson "the most capable group of track and field stars ever to participate in the Games."

In addition to the conference action (with all eight ACC schools fielding teams), there will also be seven outside teams competing for non-conference honors.

A total of 387 men, including the varsity and freshmen performers, will compete. The outside schools sending entries are VPI, Furman, Richmond, VMI, Davidson, Florida and William & Mary.

JOHN BELITZA—Maryland's gifted pole vaulter is one of only nine men to clear 16 feet. Belitza won the ACC Inudoor Games pole vault event last year at 15 feet. Tonight at 7:00 he will attempt to win another title in Woollen Gym.

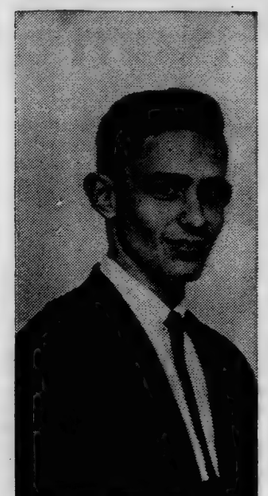
Hart & King Star Entries In Big Races

By LASZLO BIRINYI

Although most of the stars of today's ACC Indoor Championships will be competing in the feild events, the races should provide most of the exciting moments. Starting with the dashes and up through the two-mile, all the events should be very close.

In the 60-yard dash, Maryland's Don Reenen, one of the East's outstanding dashmen, will be facing a strong Clemson contingent led by Wesley King. However, Dave Sime's record of 6.1 seconds does not seem likely to be broken.

King will also be participating in both hurdles events. He won the 70-yard low hurdles last year and set the record of 7.4. King's competition in the hurdles will come from teammate Wynn, Maryland's Stauffer, and UNC's Jim Brown and Milt Bauguess.



Bob Hart, one of Carolina's all-time track standouts, will be hard-pressed to retain his 600 title. Challenging Hart will be Maryland's Chris Stauffer and John Prettyman. This race should be one of the day's closest and Dave Scurlock's record of 1:12.7 may be broken.

The 880 will be the most open race of the day. There is no defending champion in this event. Carolina's Bob Bennett and Jerry Stuver, Wake Forest's Dave Turner, Duke's Louis Van Dyck and Maryland's Dick Smith head the contenders. Bennett finished second in the event last year. The record in this event is held by Scurlock, 1:52.7.

Van Dyck, Stuver and Bennett will also be doubling in the mile. Charlie Little of Carolina has been the most consistent miler in the conference but Little has been sick most of the week and may not be in top form. Also striving for honors in this event will be Duke's Jim Wisiger. The mile record of 4:12.5 should be broken by this outstanding field.

The two-mile will pit two of the three best cross-country runners in the ACC against one another. Carolina's Carmine Lunetta, who is undefeated in the event, and Maryland's John Garten, who finished second in Carolina's cross-country win over the Terps, will be the favorites. Lunetta, whose best time this year is 9:24 will be backed by Art Maillet, one of Coach Dale Ranson's most consistent runners. The record in the event is 9:18 set last year by Duke's Jerry Nourse.

In addition to these individual running events, there will be two relays, a one-mile and a two-mile. Coach Ranson will probably use Maillet, Little, Bennett, Stuver, Larry Henry, Hart and Maurice McDonald in the relays for UNC.

'Loaded Events' In ACC Field Says Ranson

By LOU ROSENTHAL

"The events are loaded . . . better quality in the field in this year's Games, and it looks to be the best field, depth-wise, in all divisions," according to Carolina track coach Dale Ranson, on the eve of the 10th annual ACC Indoor Games.

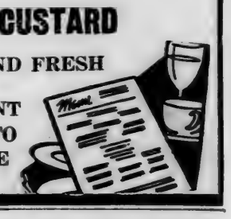
Ranson called Maryland the favorite, but said that Clemson and UNC should put up a strong battle for the overall title.

"Clemson is especially loaded in the sprints, while Carolina depends on the distance events for many of its points. Maryland has strong contenders in all events."

The long-time UNC coach said that Clemson's Wesley King has a good chance to sweep the short events, the 70-yard low and high hurdles, and the 60-yard dash. King set the ACC indoor high hurdle mark last year with a 7.4 time.

John Belitza, Maryland's 16-foot pole vaulter, is rated a strong favorite to break his record of 15 feet set at the Games last year, although Ranson said that UNC recordholder Heath Whittle "must be regarded as a contender for the crown."

Greensboro's Tom Clark, who holds the ACC and UNC high jump record at 6 foot 8 inches is expected to repeat in his specialty.



Duke's Dick Gesswein is heavily favored to repeat as champ in the shot put. He holds the record with a heave of 54 feet, 5¼ inches.

In the middle distance races, Carolina's Bob Hart is a slight favorite in the 600-yard run, but Don Stauffer and John Pettyman are expected to push Hart to the tape. Dick Smith of Maryland, and Jerry Stuver and Bob Bennett of UNC are the top men in the 880.

Mets' Pennant Bid Stars Newcomers

—Three newcomers will be in the lineup Saturday when the New York Mets play their first exhibition game of the spring against the St. Louis Cardinals.

Manager Casey Stengel Friday named his starting lineup for the Grapefruit League opener and it includes second baseman Ron Hunt, third baseman Pumpsie Green and leftfielder Dick Smith.

None of them were with the club last year when the Mets lost a record 120 games.

The rest of the opening lineup will be made up of veterans. It includes catcher Choo Choo Coleman, shortstop Charley Neal, first baseman Marv Throneberry, outfielders Jim Hickman and Joe Christopher and pitchers Roger Craig, Al Jackson and Craig Anderson.

Outfielder Frank Thomas arrived in camp and worked out for the first time. Because he was 11 days late in reporting, coach Solly Hemus put him through an extra round of batting practice.

LAKELAND, Fla. (UPI) — Rookie pitcher Doug Gallagher has developed a sore arm and will be on the sidelines when the Detroit Tigers begin the exhibition season against the Minnesota Twins Saturday in Orlando.

Gallagher, a 23-year-old southpaw from Fremont, Ohio, was scheduled to pitch three innings. His place will be taken by Dick Egan, another lefthander who had a 17-11 record at Hawaii last season. Gallagher is expected to be out about three days.

Meanwhile, Bill Faul, a rookie righthander from the University of Cincinnati, was struck by a baseball for the third time this year during Friday's workout.

Faul was hit on the head by a ball which bounced out of the glove of pitcher Phil Regan. He was not hurt seriously.

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

HAIL TO THE DEAN!

The dean (from the Latin Deanere—to expel) is not, as many think, primarily a disciplinary officer. He is a counselor and guide, a haven and refuge for the troubled student. The dean (from the Greek Deanos—to skewer) is characterized chiefly by sympathy, wisdom, patience, forbearance, and a fondness for homely pleasures like community singing, farina, spelldowns, and Marlboro Cigarettes. The dean (from the German Deangemacht—to poop a party) is fond of Marlboros for the same reason that all men of good will are fond of Marlboros—because Marlboro is an honest cigarette. Those good Marlboro tobaccos are honestly good, honestly aged to the peak of perfection, honestly blended for the best of all possible flavors. Marlboro honestly comes in two different containers—a soft pack which is honestly soft and a Flip-Top box which honestly flips. You too will flip when next you try an honest Marlboro, which, one honestly hopes, will be soon.

But I digress. We were learning how a dean helps poor, troubled undergraduates. To illustrate, let us take a typical case from the files of Dean S..... of the University of Y..... (Oh, why be so mysterious? The dean's name is Sigafoos and the University is Yutah.)

Wise, kindly Dean Sigafoos was visited one day by a freshman named Walter Aguincourt who came to ask permission to marry one Emma Blenheim, his dormitory laundress. To the dean the marriage seemed ill-advised, for Walter was only 18 years old and Emma was 91. Walter agreed with the dean, but said he felt obligated to go through with it because Emma had invested her life savings in a transparent rainhood to protect her from the mist at Niagara Falls, where they planned to spend their honeymoon. If Walter called off the wedding, what use would the poor woman possibly have for a rainhood in Yutah? The wise, kindly dean pondered briefly and came up with a brilliant answer: let Walter punch holes in the back of Emma's steam iron. With steam billowing back at the old lady, she would find a rainhood very useful—possibly even essential.

Whimpering with gratitude, Walter kissed the dean's Phi Beta Kappa key and hastened away to follow his advice—and the results, I am pleased to report, were madly successful!

Today Emma is a happy woman—singing lustily, wearing her rainhood, eating soft-center chocolates, and ironing clothes—twice as happy, to be candid, than if she had married Walter . . . And what of Walter? He is happy too. Freed from his unwanted liaison with Emma, he married a girl much nearer his own age—Agnes Yucca, 72. Walter is now the proud father—*step*father, to be perfectly accurate—of three fine, healthy boys from Agnes's first marriage—Everett, 38; Wilhelm, 43; and Irving, 55—and when Walter puts the boys on a lead and takes them for a stroll in the park on Sunday afternoon, you may be sure there is not a dry eye in Yutah.

And Dean Sigafoos? He too is happy—happy to spend long, tiring hours in his little office, giving counsel without stint and feet of his charges on the path to a brighter tomorrow.

CAMPUS PARTIES NAME CANDIDATES THIS WEEK

SP Nominates Senior Class Slate Tonight

The Student Party and the University Party will meet tonight and tomorrow night in their annual spring party conventions to endorse candidates, solidify party platforms and elect party officers.

The Student Party will meet at 8 p.m. today in the Roland Parker Lounge at G.M. The SP session will consider endorsements for Senior Class Officers, delegates to the National Student Association, chairmen of the Women's Athletic Association and the Carolina Athletic Association, and the Daily Tar Heel editorship. The SP will also choose officers for the coming year.

Few of the candidates are "out in the open" yet. Chris Farran, Harry Lloyd and David Ethridge, Garry Blanchard have all announced their candidacy for the Daily Tar Heel editorship, but not all will seek party endorsements.

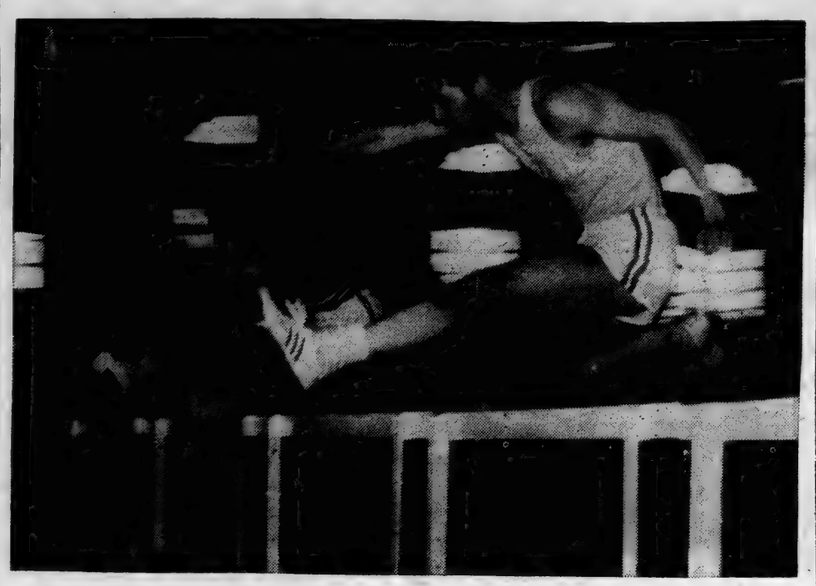
At the University Party convention Monday night at 7 p.m. in Gerrard Hall, Bob Spearman and Larry McDevitt will be probable candidates for endorsement for the student body presidency. Ford Rowan has also been mentioned as a possible candidate for the vice-presidency.

Bill Davis and Gerrald Thornton will likely be after endorsement for student body treasurer at the UP convention, and endorsements for an NSA delegate and Senior Class Officers will be made at that time.

The UP convention will be under the proportional delegate system according to a UP statement. Each residence is given one delegate for each UP member up to five. For the next five members, each residence gets an additional delegate. For each ten additional members another delegate may be preesnt.

A UP spokseman said yesterday that only delegates will be allowed on the floor during the convention. Members who are not delegates, alternates, and guests are invited to sit in the balcony. If the nominations are not completed Monday they will be finished Wednesday night in Gerrard Hall.

All persons who interviewed for legislative endorsements are requested to attend Monday night's convention, the UP spokesman said.



UP Chairman Mike Chanin commented yesterday "This year's convention promises to be one of the most exciting in years. Candidates from every part of the campus will be running for UP positions this spring, and we look forward to much competition for the UP nominations."

Candidates Have 4-Point Platform

David Ethridge and Gary Blanchard, both juniors in the Political Science Honors Program, yesterday announced their candidacy for co-editors of The Daily Tar Heel in the Spring elections.

"We are running on a four-point platform as independents," their announcement statement said. "We have neither solicited nor will accept any party endorsement. We feel that the editors should be under no obligation to anyone but the student body."

"We believe that the Tar Heel can be a much newsier and more lively newspaper, and that by combining our experience and efforts, we can make it so."

Ethridge is a former staff writer for the Louisville (Ky.) Times and has worked on three weekly newspapers in West Virginia, two of which he edited. He has also worked for radio station WWGP in Sanford, N. C.

Blanchard is a staff writer for The Charlotte Observer and area correspondent for radio stations WCHL, Chapel Hill; WPTF, Raleigh; WBT, Charlotte and WTOB, Winston-Salem.

He has been on the staff of the Daily Tar Heel as a reporter and contributing editor for the past two years. Last year he won a National Writing Award from the Hearst Foundation for a DTH feature story.

4-Points

"First, a three-beat system of reporting. We are greatly heartened by the action of the Student Legislature in voting to pay DTH reporters. We believe this is the way to a better paper. It means the system we have worked out is assured of success.

"We will have at least three responsible reporters to cover (1) Town, University Administration and Faculty Affairs, (2) Student Government and Student Affairs Office, and (3) Dormitories, Fraternities and Sororities. Each of these reporters will not only keep their ear to the ground but will turn in feature ideas for less experienced reporters to write.

"Second, minimum use of wire stories. We realize that the Tar Heel is the only newspaper consistently read by many students so it should contain some news of state, national and international events. But we favor achieving this goal through a "World News Briefs" column, with all major events getting a few paragraphs each. Too often in the past the wire has served as a crutch to editors needing something with which to fill up space. We think this should be stopped.

"Third, a better editorial page. Too often in the past the editor(s) have been chained to the editorial column. Too often they have had little or nothing to say. We intend to comment responsibly and fairly when we have something to say and not write simply because there is a space-hole to be filled. Joined to this is our intention to solicit informed comment from students, professors and off-campus people on matters of current significance.

"Fourth, more attention to minor sports. This is in line with our intention to put out a balanced newspaper. We feel the so-called minor sports should be encouraged. The best way to do this is by providing better, more timely coverage of them.

"With this as our blueprint, and given the writing talent on this campus, we believe we can make the Tar Heel one of the finest campus newspapers in the country."

Cuban Forces Now Stronger With Red Aid

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (UPI)—The Soviet Union has armed and trained Cuban Premier Fidel Castro's forces to the point where they could smash any internal uprising, even if all Soviet troops on the island are withdrawn, Western diplomatic sources reported Saturday.

The informants, who have just arrived here from Cuba, confirmed Washington's estimates that Soviet combat units brought in just before last October's missile crisis were being phased out.

Soviet Ambassador Anatoly F. Dobrynin said in Washington Friday that Russia will keep its promise to withdraw several thousand troops from Cuba by next Friday. The administration says there are about 17,000 Soviet troops on the island.

But the diplomat questioned the belief voiced by Cuban exiles that the chances of toppling Castro by an internal uprising would increase materially after the removal of the troops.

Large Fighting Force

Nearly two years after the Soviet Union's large-scale military assistance program began, Cuba has built a formidable fighting force equipped with the latest weapons, including rockets and more tan 100 jet aircraft.

This evaluation of Cuban strength was given United Press International by West European diplomats who have been stationed in Havana since Castro's rise to power in January, 1959.

They said that while discontent was widespread and often vocal, there is virtually no evidence of organized and effective anti-Castro underground movements.

The possibility of a massive popular uprising was also discounted.

A number of small anti-Castro bands in central Cuba were reported to have been rounded up in recent months by well-armed militia forces, estimated to number well over 150,000 throughout the country.

Most clandestine operations in the cities have been kept powerless by a far-ranging system of informers and a political police trained mainly by East German and Hungarian agents, the sources said.

Confined to Camps

The Soviet troops, on the other hand, have been deliberately confined to remote camps to make their presence on the island as inconspicuous as possible. Diplomats also felt that Soviet officers were anxious to keep out of the mercurial political situation developing within the Cuban leadership as a result of the Moscow-Peking split.

This matter is being left entirely to the political staff of the Soviet Embassy and to Communist Party officials, they said.

Need For Review Of Policy Cited

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield said Saturday that the latest Syrian political upheaval only underscores a need for a constructive, non-partisan approach to Cuba and other U. S. foreign policy problems.

The Montana Democrat told a reporter the Middle East situation, including the takeover in Syria by pro-Nasser forces, has "all the elements of combustion that could flame into a world conflagration."

He also said there also are such other trouble areas as Berlin, South Viet Nam, Formosa, Korea, and Africa besides the Cuban crisis, to burden President Kennedy.

The President, he said, "has an awful lot on his mind. We must find some suitable meeting point where we can subordinate politics and political motives and look to the common good."

In another development, presidential press secretary Pierre Salinger told newsmen the White House is not getting into daily arguments with Republicans who are criticizing the administration about Cuba.

He was asked for comment on a pledge by House Republican whip Leslie C. Arends, Ill., to keep hitting at the issue.

"Our position is very clear," Salinger said. "We're not going to get into these daily arguments."

Mansfield went on the Senate floor Friday to lash at Kennedy's Republican critics on Cuba. He accused them of "panic politics" and of "prowling over the dead" with the rehashing of the ill-fated Bay of Pigs invasion.

In his sternly-worded attack, he said the Republicans who tried to make it appear that the Kennedy administration had tried to suppress news that four Alabama fliers had died in the invasion were guilty of "irresponsible politics."

He termed raking over of the incident a "cruel thing to do" to the fliers' families and a "reckless thing to do to foreign policy." He said "no national purpose" was served by partisan discussion of the Cuban crisis.

Although some of his remarks appeared to be aimed at Senate GOP leader Everett M. Dirksen, Mansfield Saturday exonerated the Illinois Republican of irresponsibility.

He told UPI: "I think Dirksen has acted responsibly so far as his actions are concerned." He said the GOP leader was seeking to compile his own information and had agreed to turn it over to responsible committees looking into the Cuban crisis.

Miss. State Gets Go-Ahead To Play

JACKSON (UPI) — Seventh-ranked Mississippi State was given the go-ahead Saturday to participate in the NCAA basketball tournament after a hot controversy over the team competing against Negro players.

The state College Board, which governs all state-supported schools voted 8-3 to abandon the state's long-standing policy of prohibiting participating against teams with Negro athletes.

The Bulldogs, Southeastern Conference champion and winner of 21 of 26 games this season, will enter the NCAA regional playoff at East Lansing, Mich. March 13. It was considered likely the Mississippi team would meet Loyola, a team with four Negroes in its starting lineup, as its first opponent.

The action upheld State President D. W. Colvard's decision last week to send the team unless vetoed by "competent authority" and apparently went against the wishes of Mississippi's staunch segregationist, Gov. Ross Barnett.

Barnett and a number of state officials were on the record as opposing entry of the Bulldogs in the integrated tournament. Some members of the Legislature threatend to cut the university's appropriation if the Bulldogs disregarded the "unwritten law" against playing teams with Negro players.

SEC runnerup Georgia Tech would have represented the conference in the playoffs if the board had reversed Colvard's decision to send Coach Babe McCarthy's Bulldogs to East Lansing.

Mississippi State, SEC champs in 1959, 1961 and 1962, had to turn down NCAA praticipation each time because of the state policy forbidding integrated athletics.

The board argued the matter in an open one-hour meeting called in the wake of Colvard's decision.

One member, M. M. Roberts, suggested that Colvard be asked to resign but he got no support.

Dormitory Spotlight: Avery

Avery, led by President Ronnie Aycock and editor Harry Tocce of the Avery Alibi, prides itself in varying and progressive programs. Few dorms have been more active.

Already there has been a dance with Cobb, and another dance is planned with the nurses for this spring. There was an open house after each home football game.

At homecoming Avery had a display and sponsored Miss Becky Lowe in the Homecoming Beauty contest. It also had two candidates in the Yack Beauty Contest. Avery will continue to sponsor the "King for a Day" contest.

In intramurals, Avery has had great participation. It had nine teams in the Grail Mural, and now has three bowling teams. Both the football and the basketball teams made the playoffs.

By starting a quiz file, the dorm hopes to bring up the already good scholarship average. Last semester, Avery ranked fifth, among the "large" dorms.

IDC Now Able To Reprimand Any Offender

The Interdormitory Council Thursday night amended its by-laws to permit the IDC court to issue an official reprimand and an all-campus probation for dormitory offenders.

As introducted by Gordon Appell, however, violation of the probation would not bring suspension from the University.

Through another amendment introduced by Appell, the IDC court also received permission to administer punishment in firecracker cases at its own discretion. Previously, the court was restricted by the rule that any violator had to be suspended from school for at least one semester.

In other business the IDC set aside $50 for the Experiment in International Living, sponsored by the International Student Board. The program would sponsor one UNC student to a foreign country during the summer.

A resolution to light the tennis courts was adopted. This action was prompted by the long lines waiting for the courts in the daytime. It was also pointed out that the courts, if lighted would be a good place for combo parties in the late spring and early fall.

Sam Shapiro, Chairman of the Contest Committee, announced dorm standings. The top five are Everett, Joyner, Mangum, Ruffin and Avery.

Jr. Class Sponsors UNC Essay Contest

The Junior Class Scholarship Committee announced yesterday that it is sponsoring an essay contest for all UNC undergraduates on the topic "My Personal Evaluation of Carolina."

A first prize of $10 will be awarded to the student who submits the best essay of 1000-1500 words on this topic.

Judge for the contest will be Chancellor R. B. House.

Entries should be typed double-space, and are due at the Graham Memorial office by noon on March 30.

Basie Band Unlimbers In Late Jam Session

The post-concert champagne party at St. Anthony Hall slowed down at 1 a.m. Saturday—when the champagne ran out and the girls had to be in.

Four of Count Basie's band members had dropped by the party earlier—but without the tools of their trade.

At about one a.m. three other Basie players showed up, fully armed, and were joined by the drummer and the base player from Bob Smith's local combo.

The atmosphere was drugged with too much cigarette smoke, the letdown as the champagne wore off, too many hours of partying for the listeners and too many weeks on the road for the Basie players.

The Basie players were 500 miles from home, miles and weeks away from their families, and in the middle of a tour that went practically nonstop from New York to Allentown, Pa.; Elizabeth, N. J.; Richmond, Va.; Chapel Hill; Fayetteville, N. C.; Atlanta, Ga.; Chattanooga, Tenn,; Charlotte, N. C.; and Miami, Fla.

A few of the towns gave the band an over-night rest: Chapel Hill, Atlanta, Charlotte, and a few days in Miami before a trip to Burmuda. The other towns were "hit-and-run," in which the band gets off the bus, gives its wto-hour show, and gets back on the bus.

As they played, as they relaxed, the jazz tempo increased at the impromptu jam session. The men's spirits rose as they switched instruments and tried something new.

Benny Powell was the veteran of the group. Frank Foster and Frank West do about two-thirds of the arranging for the Basie band.

Someone joked about Negro comic Dick Gregory. The jazz got faster. They joked about the poor accommodations for the 20 Negro band members throughout the South. They talked about their latest European tour: the weather was good, the girls were nice, the pace was slower—the band wanted to go back to Europe soon.

They played whatever was on their mind: the fatigue of being far from home, wanderlust for the next town, the happiness of improvising their own sounds.

At 2:30 a.m. people were wandering around peering hopefully at the dry bottoms of the champagne bottles. Powell, Foster and West were clearly enjoying themselves—you don't stay on the road ten months out of the year unless you love your music. The three alternated on the flute, trombone, saxophone, piano.

Even at three a.m. they kept the attention of their small audience. St. Anthony Hall served them drinks, apple pie and ice cream to keep them going.

Bob Harrison, who drives the bus and helps arrange accommodations for the band when it is on the road, was talking about some of the many problems of keeping 20 men sane when they were cooped up in a bus for a ten-month swing to both coasts:

"This is a good group, generally. They're all mature men with families and an understanding of the tensions that they must avoid.

"But they have to have a release sometimes. For some its alcohol. I just found out yesterday that some of the boys smoke marijuana in the back of the bus when we're on the road.

"But when they have a job to do, they do it sober. They may go wild afterwards, but this is a very responsible group when it's performing."

At 3:30 a.m. the jazz slowed down and dribbled to a stop. Benny Powell was talking about Duke Ellington. Foster and West sat down to their ice cream and talked about the club they had played the day before that, and the high prices it had advertised, scaring an audience away.

The three packed up and left after a parting joke about returning to Africa. Harrison adjourned to Byron's for breakfast at about 4:30 a.m. He had to drive to Fayetteville Sunday and then on to Atlanta without a break. It was 5:30 a.m. before he returned to his room at the Carolina Inn.

Blasts Shake West Sector Of Berlin

BERLIN (UPI) — Four mysterious blasts in East Germany jolted the southwestern sector of West Berlin Saturday and shots rang out behind the Communist wall dividing the city on the other side.

West Berlin police rushed to the borders on both sides of the city to aid possible refugees but found no one. The East Germans gave no explanation for the explosions and shootings which echoed across the border during the dark early morning hours.

Four detonations described as "medium-heavy" were heard at the extreme southwestern corner of the city in the region of the Babelsberg entrance to the autobahn to West Germany.

Police said the blasts took place somewhere behind the strands of barbed wire barricades between West Berlin and Red Germany. A West Berlin police squad searched along the border for more than an hour in case refugees had blasted their way through the barrier.

About an hour after the explosions, police reported three shots were fired several hundred yards inside East Berlin opposite the Kreuzberg district in the U. S. sector.

Editorship Election: Problems And Prospects

The entrance of Garry Blanchard and Dave Ethridge into the Tar Heel editor's race increases the number of candidates to three (Chris Farran and Harry Lloyd having already announced.) There is a possibility of an additional candidate or candidates entering the race.

This presents two problems distinct to this election: endorsement of candidates, and the possibility of a run-off election.

In the past five DTH elections the Student Party has endorsed candidates three times and the University Party once. Two years (1960, 1961) saw both parties refuse to endorse editorial aspirants.

Opposition to endorsement is precepted on the view that the editorship should be "above politics," nonpartisan, and thus candidates should not seek the support of the parties.

The editorship is very much tied up with the rise, fall and collapse of campus politics—and there is nothing any "'We-will-not-engage-in-partisan-politics" sentiment can do about it. By its elective nature the editorship becomes something for which you must campaign, give speeches and shake hands — and there's no way to get around that.

What can be done is to conduct the campaign on the basis of issues (yes, that's what I said, spelled, "i-s-s-u-e-s") rather than personalities. In other words, can he write, not can he smile.

Whether the parties endorse editor candidates or not, some of their members will be engaged in the editorship campaign. And some votes (Big Fraternity Court) can be delivered with or without an open endorsement.

We hope both parties consider endorsing editorial candidates on the basis of the candidates' ability, not his political views.

The other problems which the editorship race will face, which other elections do not, is the possibility of a run-off. With three candidates (and possibly more), the chances of anyone getting the necessary majority of the total vote is very small. Last year there was a run-off, which meant one week of expense and agonizing effort for the candidates, and a week of hearing hashed-out promises for the students.

Why not make the editor's race (which often has more than two major candidates, in contrast to all other elective posts) an exception to the "necessary-majority" rule? Let the candidate with the highest number of votes be editor and save the campus and candidates that awful extra week.

* * *

These difficulties aside, the major problem about the DTH editor's race is that it's a crazy way to choose an editor.

But it's probably the best way—since a selections board or staff selections would tend toward "in-group" editors and remove the Tar Heel from its unique, close relationship to the students.

It does every prospective editor good to go through the dorms and houses and hear what the students think of the newspaper, talk with them, tell them, what he thinks the paper should do and be. And then, after the election, he can mount Olympus.

In the three weeks before election students will hear a great deal of political talk. The campus will become heavy-laden with political posters, dorm social rooms heated with the speeches of student politicos, and no man's room safe from a knock, handshake and phony smile.

But we ask the students to pay particular attention to the platforms and qualifications of the editorship candidates. If a student government officer is a bad choice, most students will never know it, because their daily activities won't be affected at all—but if a bad (or less than best) editor is elected, every student who reads the DTH will know it, and know it, and know it, and suffer. It's your newspaper—published partly with your fees, so listen closely and choose wisely.

Needed Planks . . .

Party platforms will soon issue forth, with appropriate pomp and ceremony, from the hierarchies of the UP and SP. The usual material will be in the platforms—all-campus weekend, dormitory improvements, support of the University's budget requests, etc.

There are several other issues which we would like to see included, by positive or negative, in the parties' platforms:

—Legislature's power, right or obligation to pass resolutions on any issue of importance to higher education, and thus to the UNC students,

—The sadly dormant-and deathbed student cooperative, which probably will be allowed to sink quietly from the public horizon because of difficulty (almost impossibility) of realization.

—The Campus Code and women's rules. Let the politicians say what everybody knows — the code and most of the rules are ridiculous.

—Some stand should be taken on such administrative infringements on student autonomy as the "Beat Dook" censorship board.

—Some long-range statement of goals: What do the students want out of the University . . . what about expanded enrollment? . . . (JC)

'Campus Fever'

SL Law Makes Needed Changes

By MARTIN KRUMING

With April 2 the date of all campus elections, drawing closer and closer it might be worthwhile to turn our attention away from the presidential nominations and look closely at two key issues which have arisen recently in the legislative and judicial branches of Student Government.

On February 20 Student Legislature (SL) overwhelmingly passed a bill which amended articles III and IV of the General Election Law. Introduced by Phil Baddour, the bill altered the number of representatives in men's dormitory district 1 (Craige and Ehringhaus) and town women's district, and created two separate districts from Craige and Ehringhaus.

Previously district 1 was allotted seven seats in the Legislature while town women's received five. Now district 1 contains Craige and Ehringhaus has been assigned to district VII. But now how are the seven legislature seats divided equally between the two dorms?

During the year there has been strong feeling among the legislators (I hesitate to say all 30 since those of town women's might object) that town women's, which includes those women living in Victory Village and in buildings not owned by the University, was too overrepresented. Certainly there was justification for another representative in old district 1 since it housed 1184 residents (total capacity 1423).

With the creation of districts VII and an added seat in former district I, Craige and Ehringhaus now enjoy equal representation in SL. Town women's has been reduced from five to four.

Another interesting clause in the legislative section of Baddour's bill is that Spencer has been shifted from women's dorm district I, composed of Alderman, McIver, and Kenan, to district II, which includes Smith and Whitehead.

Included in this same bill of February 20 was an article amending the judicial districts and the composition of the honor councils. The important point to notice here is the revised election of the Men's Honor Council chairman.

In the past the newly elected officers of the Council voted for a chairman after they had assumed their positions. But the growing objection with this procedure was that the new Council members did not have enough experience in judicial practice and their limited time on the Council made them incapable of electing the most qualified chairman. Certainly the position of chairman of the Men's Honor Council carries with it great responsibility and experience, and to elect a relative "greenhorn" would be quite a mistake.

As Bauddor's amendment now reads the chairman of the Men's Honor Council will be elected during March by the old Council before the newly elected members assume their positions. The chairman will serve for one year and not be required to seek re-election.

When Walter Dellinger resigned as chairman his seat was filled by Grant Wheeler vice chairman of the Council. Wheeler will serve the remainder of the term as stated in Article IV.

One of the factors which necessitated the introduction of Baddour's was that articles III and IV of the General Elections expired on March 1, 1963.

Dilemma For The Non-Conformist

Isolation – Or Acceptance?

MARTHA MACNEAL
The Michigan Daily

Contrary to proverbial wisdom, familiarity does not always breed contempt. In social units from kindergarten to General Motors, there are millions of people who never move beyond the familiar, and most of them are highly satisfied. We call them conformists.

In kindergarten they are pictured as the well-adjusted children who do not pile the blocks too high, and who do not picture "two heads are better than one" as a twoheaded monster. In high school they are attractive, popular, and outgoing. In college, many belong to the affiliate system and make "acceptable" grades. In the business world, they wear gray flannel, and line the aisles of the executive flight with identical attache cases. Their wives "serve the community" in various wifely ways. They have two or three children who, they hope, will start the pattern all over again.

Before unleashing contempt upon these creatures, it is fundamentally necessary to concede, (even with enthusiasm, if one can muster it) that they do make 99 and 44/100 per cent of the world go 'round, and that the non-conformists might find it very difficult indeed to get along without them. Somebody has to do the busy work.

The tragedy is not necessarily the nature of conformity itself, but rather the fact that the conformists too often try to stifle those who are not of their ilk, and, too often, they succeed. From the beginning, the non-conformists are isolated form their fellows. No one can really say whether the agent of this isolation is the conformist or the non-conformist—most likely it is a mutual exclusion. The exclusion is necessary for the development of a truly creative intelligence, but the great danger is that as often as not, and perhaps more often, it has jus the opposite effect.

From the time that exclusion begins, the non-conformists has two choices—he can capitulate and join the masses, who always are, after all, attractive in their lives of ease, or he can burrow more and more deeply into himself and his own imagination, and go it alone. If he takes the first alternative, he will win the unconditional approval of all (excepting perhaps another non-conformist) and will enjoy the undeniably desirable fruits of the "real" world. All that will trouble him will be an occasional stirring of "what might have been," but such stirrings diminish markedly in frequency as time goes on.

If he chooses to remain "inner-directed," his problems are just beginning. If he has any respect at all for his fellows, he will constantly be wondering if there really is something wrong with him. He will find his desire to communicate with others constantly in contradiction to his inevitable sense of boredom whenever they accept him. And this very boredom with others is likely to cause strong feelings of guilt and traces of self-punishing masochism, as he begins to realize that he really doesn't give a damn—while still feeling morally that he should.

AT THIS POINT, a necessary kind of closed-mindedness begins to develop. Carried to the right degree, it will enable him to channel his various blocked energies into a single-minded devotion to whatever work he has chosen. But the danger is that it will go too far, shutting him off from the dialogue and the drama which must be the material of his creation.

If the closing of the mind does not go so far that it destroys him, the creative non-conformist can make use of his masochism—he will discover how to punish himself in his work. A recent article in "The Saturday Evening Post" considered this topic in part, and described a psychological theory whereby the publication of a book is, for its author, a form of suicide. James Joyce and Franz Kafka both refused psychoanalysis for fear it would destroy the precious dark demons that drove them. It is a process older than Prometheus.

Contrary to the well-meaning opinions of the conformists, this is not at all tragic. It is, in many ways, the highest and best achievement to which man can aspire—the achevement of choosing torment and making it work.

The tragic figure is rather the non-conformist who succumbs in his youth to the siren song of fellowship. He has abrogated the best in his nature.

The problem of the non-conformist is emphatically not to be solved by asking that his society accept him on an individual basis. Acceptance too often destroys him. Contentment too often destroys him. The need to shape his life to mass values destroys him. The solution is rather to recognize his creative potential as early in his life as possible (tests are now being designed to do just that) and then offer him the opportunity for the kind of work he needs, before he decides to capitulate to the norm.

The decision, of course, is his. If he prefers personal acceptance, that is his business. But it may well be that many of our very young creative geniuses go over to the masses not because the masses are really so attractive, but because they are never given the opportunity to channel their minds into some kind of work that challenges them—and are too young to know how to make that opportunity for themselves.

I am acquainted with a family of seven, of varying degrees of brilliance, who live in an affectionate state of chaos. I remember one night when most of the family was gathered in the kitchen (completely disorganized) as the mother was ignoring everything and preparing dinner The youngest child, then about six, was leafing absently through some esoteric scientific publication, when he came across a mathematical puzzle in diagrams. In the midst of all the noise and confusion, his mother's occupationally deafened ear picked out the only significant sound in the room—his question. She stopped cooking, sat down beside him, and proceeded to explain the puzzle until he understood.

How many teachers could do the same, break the routine of the average day in immediate response to that individual question that reaches beyond the daily program?

However many there may be, the non-conformist needs them desperately.

Grass, Sanford & Student Autonomy

'Sacrificed' His Own State

To The Editors,

In his recent editorial attempt Chris Farran suggested that we should be thankful to Governor Sanford "because he has given the people of North Carolina what they need rather than what they want." I have always believed that public officials, even governors, were elected to act as public servants whose first duty was to determine the will of his constituents and to put this into practice. It would seem that Mr. Farran does not believe the people of our state are capable of governing themselves. Does Mr. Farran advocate a reduction of suffrage and instituting some form of paternalistic dictatorship?

Mr. Farran suggests that Governor Sanford has jeopardized his own "promising political career" by initiating numerous political innovations at the expense of his popularity. Undoubtedly Governor Sanford isn't going to win any popularity contest on state level. The national level is another story. The federal government has many adequately paid appointive positions, and if none of them are to the liking of a loyal ex-governor, it isn't that hard to create one that meets all of the specifications. Upon closer examination, Mr. Farran, maybe you will realize that the only thing that Gov. Sanford has sacrificed is his own state. But, you were right in writing, "Terry Sanford will not be elected governor of the state in 1964, and yet he is a brave man, laying his political career on the line . . ." A very astute observation considering that in our state the constitution prohibits a governor from succeeding himself. Really, how naive can one be?

From the comments that I have heard there seems to be a great deal of dissatisfaction with the editorial page of the DTH. This is certainly justifiable as the material appearing here represents (or maybe more appropriate, misrepresents) the political views of the student body to a certain extent. Is apathy on this campus as prevalent as it seems to be? Why not think before casting your vote for editor this year? Think about the indigestion from reading the DTH editorials of this past year, and then vote.

Mud Holes In Lower Quad

To the Editors,

The unused horseshoe pits of the upper quad stand out like two gaping red lacerations.

The earth between the venerable buildings of Grimes, Manley, Mangum, and Ruffin is sterile and gray, trod under the romping feet of intramural athletes.

This matter may seem mundane, but it has an aesthetic side. For most of us know that a beautiful green lawn can soothe jangled spirits and enhance student morale.

So we call on the University officials to seed this area and protect it by means of chains, with all due haste.

And we would ask the students, when this is done, to cooperate to beautify an important and conspicuous section of the campus.

Else sew it in salt as a monument to campus spirit.

'Ridiculous' IDC Trial

To The Editors,

Recently I testified as a material witness in an Interdormitory Council Trial for violation of "quiet hours." The trial was one of the most ludicrous excuses for student autonomy that I have ever witnessed. This particular incident involved a second hearing, as the first one had been declared a mistrial. (The leading accusor had a quiz that evening and had to leave before the trial was completed. Furthermore, the atmosphere surrounding the proceeding was one of indifferent informality: the president of the Council arrived in ski boots and a parker, while the witnesses appeared in coats and ties.)

The second trial can best be summed up in one word: ridiculous. It centered around arguments over insignificant technicalities, and produced amazingly brazen hypocrisy. (The chief witness for the prosecution is one of the more ardent violators on a hall of violators. And yet he had the audacity to criticize the accused's "inexhaustable boistrousness,") His testimony was the epitome of vindictiveness.

While "quiet hours" are necessary to the successful dormitory, it is equally important for these rules to be enforced by trustworthy officials, and not by juvenile students playing with power.

One further thing: To complete their guise as responsible enforcers of campus regulations, the members of the I.D.C. should be properly outfitted. Enlarged, black, rodent-like ears would be far more fitting than parkers. Then Mickey Mouse would be truly proud.

84 Valuable Books Missing From Art Library This Year

Students who have borrowed books from the Ackland Art Library have been urged to see if they still have the books.

The Art Department is trying to acquire a distinguished library for the Univesity, but its effort is nullified when users abuse library privileges, a library spokesman said yesterday.

If students who have taken an art course in the last few years would look through their rooms, many books might be discovered, library personnel hope.

The library will not punish holders of overdue books, according to the library statement. It merely wants the volumes back.

Does a man really take unfair advantage of women when he uses Mennen Skin Bracer?
All depends on why he uses it.
Most men simply think Menthol-Iced Skin Bracer is the best after-shave lotion around. Because it cools rather than burns. Because it helps heal shaving nicks and scrapes. Because it helps prevent blemishes.
So who can blame them if Bracer's crisp, long-lasting aroma just happens to affect women so remarkably?
Of course, some men may use Mennen Skin Bracer because of this effect.
How intelligent!

Terps Power To Ninth Title In Indoor Games

UNC Sets 2-Mile Relay Mark; Belitza Vaults Past 15 Feet

By CURRY KIRKPATRICK and HARRY LLOYD

Maryland's strong track team captured six of 13 first places, including the last three events, here Saturday to win its ninth championship in the 10-year-old history of the ACC Indoor Games.

The Terps scored 81½ points, and UNC, the only real contender, was second with 56. Duke had 25½ and Clemson, 22. Four new records were set—in the shot put, the pole vault and the one-mile and two-mile relay events.

After 10 of 13 events, the Terrapins, surprisingly, were still striving to wrap up the meet. On the eleventh, they did.

Leading North Carolina in total points by 59-46½, Maryland placed 1-3 in the 880 to put the crown completely out of reach.

Dick Smith won the race in 1:52.8, falling just a tenth of a second short of a record. Wake Forest's Dave Turner finished second with Ramsay Thomas of Maryland and Carolina's Jerry Stuver following him.

But a lot of exciting events had led up to the final showdown.

North Carolina's Art Maillet took the lead on the second leg of the two-mile relay, and a small lead was all that Bob Bennett needed. Bennett ran from the pack, and Jerry Stuver went uncontested as he wound up the race. The first leg of the race was run for UNC by Larry Henry.

The time for the UNC runners was 7:54.2, which knocked six seconds off the old record.

Carolina's hope in the sprints, rabbit Ronnie Jackson of football fame, finished third in the 60 yard dash. Clemson's Jim Wynn was first with Bill Grey of Maryland second.

In perhaps the most exciting event of the night, Duke's outstanding distance man Lou Van Dyck caught Charlie Little of UNC in the final yards of the Weil Mile to win in 4:28. The time was far off the record of 4:12.5, but not because there wasn't a real duel.

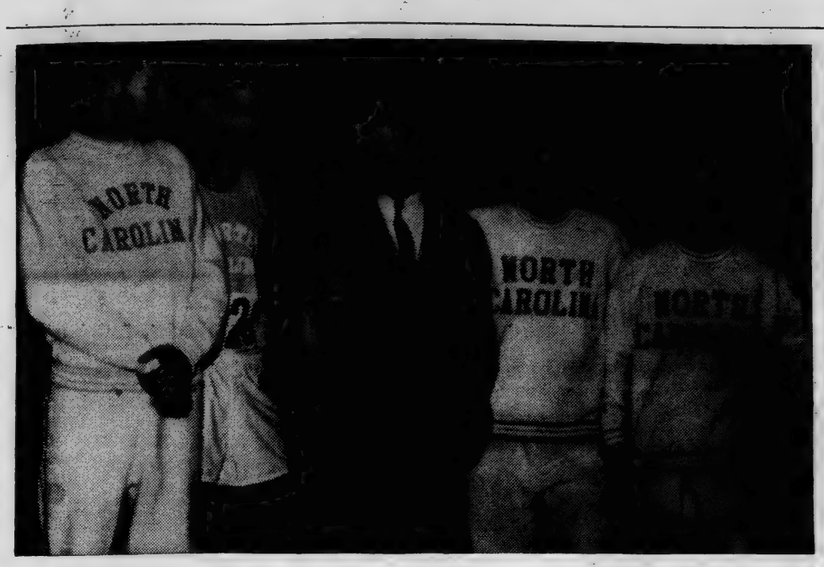
Bob Hart of UNC waged a strong duel with John Prettyman of Maryland in the 600 yards, but was never able to make up for a bad start. Hart moved ahead of Maryland's Steve Lamb into second after two laps, but Prettyman stretched a two yard lead into four yards at the finish.

The most anticipated of all the events—the pole vault came off quite as expected.

Maryland's John Belitza won it at a record-breaking but sub-par 15 feet, 1¾ inches after UNC's Heath Whittle and Belitza's teammate, Stew Markley, had bowed out at 14 feet.

Belitza, one of only a handful of 16-foot valuters, attempted 15-7¾ three times but hit the bar going up on each occasion. He then tried two official vaults at 16-4 but could not clear the height.

"This is the first time I've ever valuted in flats (flat track shoes)," the Maryland star said afterwards. "I wanted to at least try at 16 feet because nobody has ever cleared it in flats. They've all worn spikes before."



In the two mile event, the real race was for second place—and that contest gave Carolina fans something to cheer about. Carmine Lunetta was not hard pressed to win in 9:44.5, but UNC's long, lean Maillet put on a brilliant spurt at the finish to head off Bob Waite of Duke at the wire. Waite had been far ahead with one lap to go.

Bob Vermillion of Maryland captured the high hurdles in 8.8, with UNC's Jim Brown finishing in a second place tie with Bob Fogle of Duke.

The final Terp wins of the night came in the low hurdles, where Don Stauffer won in 7.6 seconds, and in the mile relay, where they set a record of 3:22, breaking the old mark of 3:24.1, set by them two years ago.

Beatty Continues To Make History

Current ACC track stars had the area spotlight all to themselves here yesterday, but the weekend also belonged to a former UNC great, who, halfway across the country, was making history of his own—again.

Jim Beatty, the incr edible distance runner from the Los Angeles Track Club (by way of Charlotte and UNC), ran the fastest indoor two-miles in history Friday night at the Chicago Daily News Delays.

His tim of 8 minutes, 30.7 seconds was four seconds quicker than Murray Halberg's previous low mark set in 1961. The tiny UNC graduate, here last fall when he was honored at a banquet, now holds world marks in both the indoor mile and two-mile. His mile record is 3:58.6.

Beatty, just as his Hungarian-born coach, Mihaly Igloi had predicted, set a withering pace all the way and finished some 100 yards ahead of runner-up Bob Schul—an LA Club teammate.

Canada's golden boy Bruce Kidd, failed to push the distance champion and finished far back in third place.

Due to the sparce competition, Beatty had to determine his own pace. In the presence of running against the clock, he also broke Paave Nurmi's 200-meter mark of 5:20. Beatty ran 5:16.8 over that distance.

The supreme performance included a :61.5 first quarter. The subsequent breaks were equally startling. He covered 880 in 2:05, the mile in 4:13.5 and sped the final 440 yards in :61.7.

Gesswein Hits Shot Record

By LASZLO BIRINYI JR.

The Tenth Annual ACC Indoor Championships got off to a big start yesterday morning when Duke's Dick Gesswein broke the indoor shot put record. Gesswein bettered his own record by more than two feet by heaving the iron ball 56 feet, 3¼ inches. Maryland's Walt Samora finished second in the event.

In the broad jump, Mike Cole of Maryland leaped 22 feet, 8¼ inches to take first place. Cole's jump was only one inch short of USC's Billy Gambrell's record. Gambrell is ineligible to participate this year due to his participation in the Blue-Gray football game. Ed Leland of Clemson was a close second.

Carolina finally broke into the scoring column in the high jump where Tom Clark and Jim Huffman finished first and third.

Jim Bland of Maryland gave Clark a tough battle but the Greensboro native won the event when Bland failed to clear the 6 foot, 6 inch mark.

Clarke said, "I feel real good about winning but I was disappointed about not being able to go higher."

Stuver, Hart Qualify

In the afternoon qualifying heats, Jerry Stuver took a second in the 880 to place him in the finals, and Bob Hart also qualified for the finals in the 600.

UNC also qualified two entries for the 60 yard dash semi-finals, Ronnie Jackson and John McNinch. In this event, Maryland's Don Van Reenen, the pre-race favorite, was scratched because of a leg injury which he sustained earlier in the week.

In the non-conference division, two records was broken. The first record to fall was the shot put where Ed Moore of Furman had a toss of 51'7".

Dennis Patterson of Furman broke the other non-conference record in the two mile run. Patterson's time was 9:20.5, almost 20 seconds better than the existing record.

In other afternoon events, Rod Stewart of Duke won the freshman high jump and Julian Rainwater of Wake Forest took the frosh broad jump. In the trials, UNC's Bob Hicks qualified for the finals of the 880-Carolina's only freshman representative in that event.

Maryland Swimmers Capture ACC Meet; Season Ends In Tie

By LOU ROSENTHAL

RALEIGH — Despite a brilliant performance by UNC soph Harrison Merrell, Maryland edged North Carolina in the ACC swimming championships yesterday to throw the final league standings into a three way tie.

Merrill won three events, setting two records, and swam the third leg of the 400-yard freestyle relay to become the meet's top point producer.

The Dolphins' chances of winning the meet and the conference championship were extinguished when they were shut out of the 100-yard butterfly as Maryland took four places.

The final results gave the Terrapins 128 points, UNC 125 and N.C. State 103. State won the regular season championship by winning all seven conferences dual meets, while Maryland lost to both State and UNC. The Tar Heels were second in dual meet competition, losing only to the Wolfpack.

Merrill, of Atlanta, broke Pete Forgarasy's (NCS) 400-yard individual medley record by almost seven seconds, winning the Thursday race in 4:41.4. He also broke the 100-yard freestyle record Saturday morning with a qualifying time of :48.9, which he tied in the finals yesterday afternoon. His third victory was in the 200-yard freestyle Friday, as he turned in a 1:48.9 for the eight laps.

Mann Wins Two

Mann, the junior from Hickory, Va., won the 200-yard medley Friday with a 2:05.7 time and the 100-yard backstroke yesterday in the time of :57.4. Scott Smiley, former state schoolboy champion from Greenville, took second in both the 100 and 200-yard backstroke races.

Frank Lea accounted for the Blue Dolphins' third victory yesterday when he won the inaugural 1650-yard freestyle in 19:35.5. Mike Bissell gave UNC a 1-2 finish, although he trailed Lea by almost 25 yards.

Thad Adams and Davis Roberts teamed with Mann and Merrill to win the final event, the 400-yard relay.

State won the two other races, the 100-yard breaststroke and butterfly, on the speed of its All-Americans, Ed Spencer and Pete Forgarsy. Maryland's only victory Saturday was Ron Squiers' 3-meter diving win. This did not count in the meet standings, however.

Coach Pat Earey's Blue Dolphins won seven events, State six, and Maryland three, but the Terps' superior depth made the difference. Raoul Rebillard of Maryland set the only other ACC record of the meet, as he broke his old 500-yard freestyle mark with a clocking of 5:20.9.

Carolina went into yesterday's finals with a 13 point deficit and, after the second event (the backstroke) when Mann and Smiley finished 1-2, took a seven point lead. This was short lived, however, as Maryland tied it up in the next race.

UNC then took a four point lead when Lea and Bissell finished 1-2 in the 1650-yard freestyle, but the Terps clinched the meet title when they placed four finishers in the 100 yard butterfly while Carolina was failing to qualify.

Duke finished fourth in the meet, far behind the leaders, followed by Virginia, Wake Forest, and Clemson. South Carolina failed to score.

In the season standings, Duke again won fourth and Virginia fifth. Wake Forest and Clemson tied for sixth.

Squiers, Maryland's diving star won both the one and three-meter events, and his teammate, Jerry Jennings, placed second in both to keep Maryland master of the diving board.

SP Selects Big Four At Meeting Tonight

The Student Party will name its big four candidates and legislators tonight at the second half of its nominating convention in Howell Hall at 8. Sunday night, the SP nominated the first Negro to run for a campus-wide position. Kellis Parker, currently chairman of the United Nations Education Committee—an appointive position in the YMCA—is running along with Neal Jackson, Vance Barron and Phil Baddour as delegates for the National Student Association convention to be held this summer.

On the recommendation of the SP Advisory Board party members voted unanimously that "the Student Party not endorse candidates for editorship of the Daily Tar Heel or for the president of the Carolina Athletic Association and the Woman's Athletic Association."

Only one candidate now appears certain for the offices of president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer of the student body. It is probable that Mike Lawler, now vice-president, will be a unanimous choice for the presidential nomination.

Rufus Edminston, now legislative floor leader of the S. P. has been mentioned as a candidate for vice-president, but he has as yet given no positive indication he will run.

The positions of secretary and treasurer are wide open. A party official said yesterday that candidates would be screened last night by the SP Advisory Board.

All candidates nominated for positions Sunday night were chosen by acclamation. Three senior class officers received SP endorsement: Charlie Shaffer, presidential nominee; Woody Harrison, vice president; and Mal Lesavoy, treasurer. Secretary and Social Chairman nominations will be made Tuesday night.

Phil Baddour, succeeded Robin Britt as chairman of the party and Neal Jackson replaced Dick Akers as vice chairman. Dennis Myers defeated Vance Barron as Sergeant at Arms. Linda Colvard, secretary, and Haynes McFadden, treasurer, remained in office by succeeding themselves.

Greek Week Begins Today With Athletic Competition

Pledge classes from Carolina's 24 social fraternities begin competition today in the first of the IFC sponsored Greek Week activities. A field day, featuring a series of relays and athletic events, will be held this afternoon at four o'clock on the Intramural Fields adjacent to Woollen Gym. In case of rain it will be conducted in the gym.

Greek Week was instituted as a substitute for hazing and "Hell Week" in order to improve relations between UNC fraternities and as an aid to the community.

The Stanley Sturm trophy for the "best pledge class of the year" will be awarded Monday night to the pledge class scoring the highest number of points in the five areas of activities. These areas include scholastic (35%); Field Day Competition (20%); participation in the Campus Chest Carnival (20%); Work Day (10%) and extracurricular activities (15%).

"Up-down", "Shuttle", "jumpstick" and "obstacle" relay races and a tug of war will highlight this afternoon's contests as eight-man teams compete.

Exchange dinners were held last night and are scheduled for Wednesday night. Each fraternity sends one-half of its pledge class to eat at another fraternity house each night.

On Wednesday afternoon, all the pledge classes will participate in an assigned work project. The projects will be judged on the quality of the work and on the percentage of the pledges in attendance.

On Saturday afternoon, pledge classes will enter booths in the Campus Chest Carnival to be staged on the Intramural Field. Booths will be judged on both originality and participation of pledges.

A Greek Week Convocation Monday night, March 18 will be the final event of the week. Dean of Men William G. Long will be the guest speaker in this 8 p.m. Memorial Hall meeting. Individual trophies will be presented to the pledge class with the best Carnival booth, highest scholastic average, the winner of field day and the overall Greek Week winner.

Co-Chairman Dave Van Pelt, of the Delta Upsilon fraternity, said yesterday, "We are looking forward to the spirited competition this year and are sure that Greek Week provides an excellent opportunity for the pledge classes to get to know each other and to help out members of the community."

Bobby Gray, of the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity, is the other co-chairman. Last year's winner was the Delta Upsilon pledge class.

Press Women Meet Here Next Week

The North Carolina Press Women will hold their annual meeting and receive prize awards for be year here Saturday, March 23rd.

Bonnie Angelo Levy, of Newsday, the Long Island community newspaper, will be the main speaker at the Carolina Inn; Mrs. Levy, former woman's editor of the Winston-Salem Journal, is a Washington, D. C. representative of Newsday.

A workshop session for woman's page editors will be conducted by a panel including Sunday feature editors Gene Roberts, Raleigh News and Observer; Garland Atkins of the Gastonia Gazette, and Ed Hodges of the Durham Herald.

Mrs. Bette Elliott of the News and Observer will preside. She is president of the Press women.

The contest awards will be made after the dinner meeting on Saturday night.

WORLD FEDERALISTS

Denis Lovelace will address the Durham-Chapel Hill chapter of the United World Federalists tonight at 8 p.m. at the Presbyterian Student Center at Duke. Lovelace, executive secretary of student development for the World Federalists, will speak on "A Need for World Government," with a discussion period to follow.

Rioting Strikers Battle In France

PARIS (UPI) — Tough Lorraine coal miners traded punches with steel-helmeted riot police at Merlebach Monday in the first violence of the 11-day-old strike which has idled 200,000 French miners.

The miners ignored President Charles de Gaulle's "work-or-else" edict and paid no need to his 48-hour ultimatum to return to the pits.

No injuries were reported in the brawl outside the mining administration offices at Merlebach, which is near the German border.

The scuffling ended in a few minutes. Some administration workers walked off to join the strikers.

Oil Fires Set In Venezuela By Terrorists

CARACAS, Venezuela (UPI) — Terrorist saboteurs dynamited two major oil pipelines late Sunday, knocking out one-sixth of Venezuela's production and triggering a vast fire that raged out of control, authorities said Monday.

Police blamed the blasts on "extremists," the name used here to identify the Communists and pro-Castro terrorist groups responsible for previous anti-government outbreaks.

Creole Petroleum Corp., the free world's largest single oil-producing company, said the explosions occurred in virtually uninhabitated sagebrush country adjoining the Ule pumping stations. Creole was not able immediately to estimate damages but said tanker schedules were being rearranged to meet foreign commitments from the Amuary refinery.

The dynamited pipelines carry $1.1 million worth of crude oil daily. The blasts totally halted the flow in one pipeline carrying 225,000 barrels a day and sharply reduced the flow in a second pipeline carrying 300,000 barrels a day.

The sabotage was the second major blow in six months to the oil industry, backbone of the Venezuelan economy. Last October terrorists dynamited Creole power substations in Lake Maracaibo, temporarily halting production of 525,000 barrels a day.

The latest explosions not only touched off a fire of huge proportions but dumped an estimated 15,000 barrels of crude oil into an area roughly 600 yards by 750 yards before the flow could be cut off.

The Ule pumping stations are at the mouth of 140-mile-long pielines linking the Lake Maracaibo fields in the west and the huge Amuay refinery in northwestern Venezuela. Creole pumps nearly one-half its total lake output through the pipelines. It ships the remaining 600,000 barrels a day in tankers directly from the lake.

McDevitt & Spearman To Run UP Ticket

Candidates Chosen By Acclamation

By JOEL BULKLEY

Larry McDevitt and Bob Spearman were nominated by acclamation Monday night to head the University Party's spring slate as President and Vice-President of the Student Body, respectively.

Sara Broadhurst defeated Punkin Houston, by a vote of 153-76, for the UP nomination for Student Body Secretary while Gerald Thornton was endorsed by acclamation for the position of Treasurer.

Senior Class officers — Charlie Shaffer for President, Sue Drennan for Secretary, Mickey Blackwell for Treasurer and Joan Haley for Social Chairman—were nominated by acclamation. Endorsement of a senior class vice-presidential candidate was postponed until Wednesday night's UP meeting.

McDevitt, a resident of Raleigh and member of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity, stated that since student government plays a major role in the education of a student a special effort should be made to improve certain areas of it here at Carolina.

McDevitt outlined a three-point program which will strengthen and improve certain areas of student responsibilities. He said (1)—Student government needs to be reorganized. Committees should be placed under a "chain of responsibility," with some committees being dellted and others being combined; (2)—A bi-camarel branch of student government should be established. Another body should be created to consider resolutions and thus alleviate some of the problems of Student Legislature; (3) The Honor Hystem and Campus Code need to be revised, with special attention paid to the punishments each body can administer.

McDevitt noted that "strong student government was necessary to maintain student autonostudent rights." He included the abolition of the apartment rule as ane of the steps necessary to allow student responsibility to be maintained.

Spearman, a sophomore from Chapel Hill and member of Chi Psi Lodge, had been nominated for the position of Student Body President, but withdrew because of academic reasons.

Spearman cited a lack of student interest and responsibility as the reasons that students are often excluded by the University administration from assisting in making important decisions on campus affairs, such as the location of new dormitories and future enrollment plans for UNC.

He said that "Student government must be emancipated from facinations of itself", and added that "improving the organization of student government and improving communications were two fields in which student government could easily afford to move ahead in.

The University Party will consider whether or not it should endorse a candidate for the DTH editorship, National Student Association candidates, Carolina Athletic Association and Women's Athletic Association endorsements in its convention meeting Wednesday night. Also to be considered will be UP endorsements fort he fifty seats in Student Legislature.

Meet May Be Start Of 2nd Symposium

The students of the University of North Carolina may have an annual symposium program instead of the present bi-annual one if present hopes and plans work out.

Kellis Parker, chairman of the International Student Affairs Symposium which will be held here on March 30, has expressed hopes that his program will become a long-term symposium to alternate with the Carolina Symposium's regular bi-annual program.

The present plans, although including a number of outstanding student leaders from all over the globe, can be improved and enlarged greatly, according to Parker.

"Plans started a little late this year," said Parker, and because we didn't have enough time to get things started, we lost a number of people who would have added greatly."

The program currently calls for an all-day symposium on International Student Affairs. It is probably the first of its kind.

Parker believes that it could be enlarged to perhaps a five-day symposium — the length of the current Carolina Symposium.

"With two years to plan, I believe that this could be built into a stimulating and valuable project, and that it could fill in for the Carolina Symposium in the off years," Parker said.

The program, will serve as an experiment to test student interest and will feature all-student leaders from various countries who will participate in a full day of speeches and discussions.

New DTH Outlook Required --- Farran

Chris Farran, candidate for the Daily Tar Heel editorship, said yesterday, "The change in the Daily Tar Heel must be a complete one.

"Staff members must see campus events from new angles and the editorial page must reflect new campus trends and needs."

Farran, president of Sigma Delta Chi professional Journalism fraternity, has been news editor of the DTH this year and has worked as a reporter for the Winston-Salem Journal for three summers.

"More than anything else," he said, "the Daily Tar Heel needs new ideas, new staff leadership, new interest in and from the campus. This change must reach all areas of the newspaper: accurate campus news, responsible editorials, many more features and increased sports coverage.

"All these changes involve making the tone and personality of the newspaper more dynamic," Farran said.

"Some of the these changes involve the staff — experienced people who have expressed an interest in a Tar Heel changed and expanded in scope. Some of the changes involve the way the Tar Heel would cover the campus — by reporting activities in each dorm, in fraternities and sororities, in clubs and organizations as well as in South Building and Student Government.

"I believe I can attract enthusiastic staff members with new ideas," Farran said. "We must mirror the campus's wish for a completely revamped Tar Heel in order to have a truely representative student newspaper, edited by students for students."

Albany Library Integrated For Standing Patrons Only

ALBANY, Ga. (UPI) — The city of Albany, scene of bitter racial strife last summer, quietly desegregated its formerly all-white public library Monday on a stand-up basis.

There were no incidents. All tables and chairs had been removed from the facility and patrons were allowed only to enter, select books or other material and check them out.

Only one Negro showed up during the early hours of the library's re-opening on a 30-day trial basis. He was Dr. W. G. Anderson, president of the integrationist Albany movement. Library officials accepted a membership application from him but he was informed that no membership cards were being issued during the trial period.

Both libraries were closed last August during the height of racial demonstrations ordered by the Albany movement as part of a campaign to desegregate all public facilities in this southwest Georgia city of 57,000.

Cheap Reading Course Grows Swiftly At Testing Service

By Bob Samsot

The course with the fastest growing rate of student popularity, the non-credit, strictly voluntary reading course is in its sixth year here.

Sponsored by the University Testing Service, the program is probably the most inexpensive course of its kind, requiring only a two-dollar entrance fee. Most other programs of this type are ofered for about $150 for the thirty-hour course.

Mrs. D. W. Campbell, a member of the reading program staff, said that the purpose of the course is not so much to increase speed and comprehension but is to increase reading flexibility, or the ability to adjust the rate of reading to different types of material.

The course is run on a rating and placement basis. The student is placed at a level which is determined by a series of four tests which include comprehension, vocabulary, and ability range tests, and a reading-comprehension test. These are followed by an eye test to make sure the student has no visual difficulties.

The student also has a conference with an instructor to determine the problems he may want to work on.

Most students take this course voluntarily, although some are referred to it by their advisors. Varying reasons serve as motivation although all students have improved reading skill as their common objective.

The number of students taking the course to improve speed and the number wanting to improve comprehension is evenly divided at first, but later they may decide to concentrate most on some other area where they discover difficulty.

The program does not work miracles, but every student achieves some success and there have been remarkable improvements, Mrs. Campbell said.

In some cases students have improved as much as 1,000 per cent in comprehension. The typical case, however, is an increase of about twice the starting speed and about the same comprehension.

Students stay in the program as long as they want and can drop out at any time they feel they have accomplished what they set out to do. The student works at his own rate and conferences are held periodically between the student and his individual instructor.

The possibility for grade improvement of students who have taken the course is being investigated this year by the testing service.

Bennett To Address Young Republicans

North Carolina Legislator Thomas S. Bennett will speak to the UNC Young Republicans Club at 7 p.m. tonight in Gerrard Hall.

Carteret County native Bennett graduated from UNC in 1956 with an A.B. and received his LL.D. in 1958. While a student at UNC, Bennett was a member of Phi Alpha Delta Law Fraternity, was on the Men's Honor Council, in the Di-Phi and in the Order of the Old Well.

The meeting is open to the public.

LABOR MOBILITY

"Labor mobility," people moving in and out and up along the economic wage scale, is noted in the Piedmont Crescent region of North and South Carolina, according to a group of University of North Carolina researchers.

Debate Team Wins At Duke

The number one UNC debate team, composed of Mack Armstrong and Haywood Clayton, took first place at the First Annual Duke Invitational Debate Tournament held on the Duke campus last week-end.

Debating on both sides of the question: "Resolved that the Non-Communist Nations of the World Should Establish an Economic Community," the Armstrong-Clayton team lost only to Duke which was ineligible to receive a place in the tournament. The losses to Duke were controversial ones.

When debating affirmative against Duke, the UNC team received 37 points to Duke's 35, but did not get the decision in the debate. When debating negative against Duke, the UNC team tied at 30 all. Ordinarily, a tie goes to the negative team, but in this instance the decision went to the Duke affirmative team.

Won't You Help Us, Please, Cow College?

All the hullabaloo over the proposed name changes for State and WC has been sustained in certain circles to the point that it seems no longer to be a noise of any significance, but rather a bit of nostalgic nonsense.

Certainly, we must recognize the fine reputation built at both institutions, and we must recognize that there are many great events that have gone into the make-up of these reputations; but we fail to see how or why the proposed changes in nomenclature will do harm to or detract from any of the glamour to which they may aspire.

Are we to understand that the prestige sought and sustained by those citadels of learning is such that any mere association in name with our "Whiskey Hill" will initiate a decay that must surely result in a crumbling of lightly brushed pride?

Indeed, if we are to take the ranting alumni seriously, we would have them clarify their position. In one breath they speak of fine, progressive, distinguished universities, and in the very next, they speak of tumbling, fading reputations. They seem to doubt the firmness of any established foundation. They seem to imply that they are wonderful institutions within themselves, and yet they are institutions which cannot withstand or overcome any momentary walk in the shadows.

If we were to follow their line of thought, we would find ourselves believing that these two fine schools, which have come to the attention of all the learned world, would immediately drop from sight, the minute anything was done to question their illustrious position.

* * *

Sure, we must all see how the mere fact of their being associated with this country club in Chapel Hill would momentarily raise doubts as to the seriousness of their academic endeavors, but can't we —can't they—see how much an association would solidify their reputation as philanthropic institutions of higher learning.

Why, what more noble cause could these schools undertake than to attempt an improvement of the sorry repuation under which the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill must surely labour.

Good heavens, won't the fine and distinguished alumni of Cow College let us cling frantically to their coat-tails, as they blaze a path to heights yet unknown? (CW)

Cultivate A Subtle Limp

For really imaginative people, procrastination is not just a convenient game, it's a way of life — a challenge that can't be ignored.

The question of how to waste valuable time ranks for some of us with topics like "Is there a God?" and "Can peaceful coexistence work?" and "What makes lightning bugs light?" Questions which concern us all. After all, we want our children to grow up in the right kind of world.

Procrastination, of course, comes on several different levels, like religion or love. You can waste time by sharpening pencils or walking across the street for cigarettes or allowing yourself to get talked into a brief card game — but all of this is rather amateurish and, after all, it's been done.

Like, instead of studying for your J58 final, go do an article on Dien Bien Phu Today.

Or instead of writing a Philosophy term paper, call up South Building and ask a well-meaning secretary in a very accusing tone of voice, "Who killed the good old-fashioned panty raid?"

If you carry this off with the right aplomb, she will start looking in desk drawers for it.

The important thing about procrastination is, it's got to benefit you in some rational way, or it's just kid stuff, and you'll get decadent, instead of just further behind.

If you sleep late, be able to tell yourself that your health is more important than any 10 a.m. class.

If you're still drinking beer when you should be studying, be able to convince yourself college life outside the classroom is an equally important forum for thought and discussion.

If you're putting off buying toothpaste or getting a haircut or taking your laundry downtown, tell yourself that worldly appearances don't really count with the thinking man, and besides, people will respect you as a nonconformist. They may not come near you, but they will still secretly respect you.

The class of a procrastinator is not in the objective but in the means . . . you must have taste to distinguish between mere shuffling around and really imaginative procrastination.

So the next time you have a tedious assignment, the next time you have to mow the lawn or clean up your room or get yourself organized . . . don't just go to sleep, or shoot pool, or spend money downtown.

Use your native ingenuity.

Read a comic book, to see what kind of trash the kids today are growing up on.

Go somewhere, so you can say to people, "When I was in Asheville day before yesterday . . ."

Cultivate a subtle limp . . . of the mental variety.

Homosexuals At U. Of Michigan

PHILLIP SUTIN
The Michigan Daily

The doors have come off the johns in the Angell Hall complex and the Union in the latest move of the University's unrelenting war on homosexuals. The Union Board of Directors, in addition, is considering new regulations to rid the building of the homosexuals that plague its lavatories and swimming pool.

However, they have had little success in meeting this problem. Hampered by archaic attitudes and approaches, these solutions and the embarrassing raids by the Ann Arbor police do little to clean up the public facilities and—more importantly—help the mentally-ill homosexual.

Homesexuality is a mental disease, not a crime. According to a noted University psychiatrist this unnatural sexual craving for members of the same sex may be caused by abnormal personality development in childhood, social conditions such as the long-term absence of the opposite sex, or other factors. Science is not really sure. It notes no definitive causes and prescribes no set cure. Psychiatrists only treat the symptoms.

* * *

YET THE LAW is stringent. It does not recognize the psychological causes of homesexuality. The statutes from which police action springs, are archaic and reflect the Victorian era in which they were written. Michigan's basic provisions against "gross indecency" were written in 1897, long before psychiatrists made any investigations. Homosexual behavior was an offense against man and God in the august eyes of the Michigan Legislature and should be punished accordingly.

"Gross indecency" is a felony which can result in stiff fines and jail terms for the offender. More often, though, a small fine and probation is imposed and the informal social sanctions ruin the life of the offender.

While Washtenaw County law-enforcement officials recognize the indequacy of the law, they feel bound to enforce it. They hope for something better, yet nothing has been found. "It is designed to protect both the public and offenders. Especially in a University community where there are a lot of young men, most of them unmarried, the homosexuals have to be stopped." Washtenaw County Prosecutor William Ager explained recently.

However, the police only pick on one type of homosexual—the lavatory accoster. In almost cyclical bi-annual raids, the Ann Arbor police swoop down upon campus johns and pick up unfortunate offenders. A special two-can squad is assigned to patrol the area johns and pick up men who accost them.

* * *

FROM THEN, the arrested men, usually guilty in the legal sense of the word, are trapped. If convicted, they are fined $250 and given a five-year probation. Repeaters go to jail.

However, their career at the University is finished. If the individual is a student, he is suspended from the University until he presents a psychiatrist's letter to health service declaring him a good social risk. As a rule, he may be barred from becoming licensed in the professions.

If on the faculty, he is forced, by social pressure rather than formal request, to resign, for the University does not want to "become known as a happy home" for homosexuals, as Executive Vice-President Niehuss pointed out.

* * *

SUCH DRASTIC ACTION does little to help the problem. Most persons arrested are "amateurs," either experimenters, or newcomers to this perversion, a noted University psychiatrist asserted. Most homosexual activities occur in private—where the police cannot get them, but where psychiatric help is unlikely to find them.

The severe sanctions serve only to complicate the victim's problems. He is ostracized and unlikely to gain enough public sympathy to maintain his self-respect even if his malady is arrested.

YET HOMOSEXUALITY is a social problem that cannot be ignored. There must be some laws that will protect lavatory users against unwanted advances by homosexuals. The homosexual himself must be protected from marauding juvenile delinquents who prey on him by pretending to fall for his advances, then beat and rob him. It is the rare homosexual. Ager declared, who will complain to the police in such an instance.

In 1957, Britain began to approach this problem in a modern light. The Wolfenden Committee Report urged Parliament to make homosexual acts legal between consenting individuals. The report recognized that homosexuality was not a crime, but an illness and strove to remove it from the list of felonies. Nothing has come of this suggestion to date. America is farther behind. A few limited psychiatric-legal studies have been made in the field, but no definitive movement for legal change has developed.

Perhaps the best approach is to treat homosexuality as a mental illness not as a crime. The University methods for handling student offenders best fits this outlook. Enforced treatment, not jail terms and fines, will arrest such activity and make psychiatric help more accessible to homosexual individuals. The lessened social stigma will bring the problem into the open where it may be attacked and arrested.

* * *

BUT WHAT should be done to protect the johns? Certainly not the current "special surveillance" policy raids that are set up every two years. The policemen are not trained psychiatrists, but lawmen looking for offenders. It has often been charged that these surveillance squads "entrap" homosexuals by luring them into making advances.

The University should patrol its own johns with a psychiatrically-trained squad. Offenders should not be brought before justice, but be sent to health service with no penalties imposed as long as the victim remains under treatment or is cured. The same policy should be applied to University staff and faculty as well.

Institutions that breed homosexuality should also be modified. Co-ed housing is one significant step in this direction. It will eliminate, at least in Markley and South Quad, the stifling single-sex atmosphere that pervades the place. Adopting the Union pools for bathing suits and mixed bathing will clear up that mess.

* * *

MEANWHILE, in Lansing, a study into the medical-legal problems of homosexuality should be launched with the eventual aim of updating the archaic legislation. While local authorities cry for more flexible measures, nothing has been done. The University has a number of medical-legal experts who could be used for just a study.

Homosexuality is not just a perversion, it is a social, psychological and legal problem. Stringent, unfeeling legislation and enforcement only intensifies it. New approaches would help.

Give To The Campus Chest

To the Editors,

The only authorized fund raising drive on this campus is the Campus Chest. Each year this drive seeks contributions from members of the student body to aid, on a student-to-student basis. organizations throughout the world which help other students. We ask little, only a dollar per student. But if each student would give a dollar we could have an overwhelming success of over $9,000 to divide among the four benericiaries of this year's Chest.

1) The University of Panama Student Exchange scolarship. This would aid one a UNC student in a year's work at the University of Panama.

2) The World University Service. This organization aids students over the world with such projects as technical assistance in building dormitories and in maintaining present buildings. Its present projects are too numerous to list.

3) The American Friends Service Committee. This service committee, with world-wide peace as an eventual goal, aids American students in going to underdeveloped nations to work with the people.

4) The Mental Health Clinic at Butner, N. C. This clinic gives professional aid to young people throughout the state in hopes of reaching a better mental health for our citizens. Knowing that donations will go to organizations which are as worthy as these four obviously are there should be no reason why every student could not give a dollar, and more.

Students, as well as parents, have certain defined responsibilities. As young adults we must realize and accept these responsibilities. The Campus Chest provides an excellent opportunity, in acceptance of these responsibilities, to aid other young adults like ourselves through-out the world.

Hope Ideal Not Achieved

To the Editors,

A reply to an unbearded beat, H. E. Thompson, III:

First of all, I should like to suggest that the next time you address me please do so with the correct spelling of my name. In addition, I would also suggest that you read my attack on Mr. Thomas somewhat more carefully. Should you attempt to use your mentality in this manner, I am almost positive that you will soon discover the glory of the dawning light about you when you realize that my attack was not based on the principle of "argumentum ad hominem," but based on the principle of pacifism as such, with more reference to the high correlation between pacificists and beats as an example to the student body of the deviant caliber of the U. N. C. Pacifist Elite. With their militant field jackets I am almost sure that they are even at this moment planning peacefully to overthrow the war-mongering elites in order to achieve perfect anarchy. Oh what wonders these fathers want to achieve! I only hope you never achieve this cherished ideal of yours; for what would you do about your deviant mentalities, should your present beliefs become the accepted norm? And remember, "mud thrown is filth lost."

Race Relations Improvement In N. Carolina

By EDWARD P. MORGAN
ABC Radio

There is a new zest to the atmosphere in North Carolina and it cannot be accounted for entirely by the faintly unfolding promise of spring after a raw and bitter winter.

It is an ingredient of hope and modest progress in the atmosphere of human relations. People are breathing it more deeply and, perhaps more importantly, they are talking about it more freely—the problem of racial equality, that is—and whereas there are still raw and bitter feelings harbored by both the white and Negro population, thoughtful people on both sides and in the middle are stimulated by this fresher ring to the air.

Severe problems and acrid situations remain. The legislature has just moved into a brand new, radically modern, $6-million General Assembly building designed by the world-famous architect, Edward D. Stone, but this has not prevented some assemblymen from reverting to their 19th Century approach to reality.

A representative named Ed Wilson from the rural county of Caswell rose in the new House chamber and solemnly vowed to "exert every legal and honorable method" to end the integration which has just come to Caswell's public schools and which in his eyes "threatens to destroy" the educational system. Hardly had his words stopped echoing from the modernistic walls before one of the chamber's elder statesmen took the floor and said with a mixture of realism and sadness, "My heart bleeds for you but there is nothing you can do about it."

Another rural legislator named John Kerr at a hearing before the Joint Appropriations Committee threatened the president of a state Negro school, the Agricultural and Technical College at Greensboro, with a cut-off of funds if his students didn't "behave."

Greensboro is where the nationwide sit-in campaign against segregation in eating places began and it was an A&T undergraduate who began it. "And you come down here," Kerr said accusingly to Pres. Lewis Dowdy, "begging the white folks to give more money to your school."

Kerr seemed to have forgotten that Uncle Tom's Cabin is no longer a best seller, but the responsible press of North Carolina has not forgotten it. Immediately the legislator was scored by a number of newspapers. "Mr. Kerr," said the Winston-Salem Journal, "is presuming that state government is of, by and for white citizens. The truth is that North Carolina's legislature is by white citizens —no Negro sits in the General Assembly. The government however is of an electorate which includes a growing number of Negro voters, and certainly the government is for all citizens," and the Negro colleges are "not begging the white folks for money."

"Let no student or academic institution," warned the University of North Carolina's Daily Tar Heel, "be intimidated by that inevitable hot air" from Rep. Kerr. At last reports none of the editors had been expelled for that forthright opinion and no officer of the university had been summoned to any legislative investigation of subversion on the campus. Nor will they be.

Gov. Terry Sanford has been attempting to spread this improvement in the atmosphere statewide. He has made a series of public statements declaring that racism is a drag on the progress of the state and he has appointed a biracial "good neighbor" committee to improve relations.

The Negro population is heartened by these developments but it is not exactly swooning over the tangibility of progress.

Now that desegregation of the schools has been recognized as the law of the land, now that the federal government has demonstrated —though not yet fully enough—it intends to protect a Negro's rights to the white man's education, to assemble without hindrance in public places, to vote and have his ballot counted because he too, surprisingly enough, is human, the Negro is turning to battles still unwon or even unrecognized.

A major battlefront in North Carolina is for jobs. As the Negro is being increasingly prepared for the white collar jobs that were beyond his reach if not his rights only a figurative moment ago, what good does this preparation do him if he is denied opportunity to work in the area for which he was trained? This is the question the Negro is asking with increasing insistence in North Carolina and elsewhere.

"We are in a state of readiness," a Negro banker told me in Durham, indicating Negroes were prepared to meet the challenge but for the country to have a satisfactory deal in desegregation on the economic front, they must be met halfway.

Strike Leader To Speak Here

To the Editors,

Because the hunger and violence of the coal miners' strike in eastern Kentucky has attracted the attention of the nation and posed a controversial social question of significant dimensions, the Dialectic-Philanthropic Literary Society will lead the sponsorship of Mr. Berman Gibson, leader of the "wildcat" strikes, who will appear here March 20.

Mr. Gibson is known as a rustically plain and very forceful speaker of great conviction. Under his leadership, unsupported by the United Mine Workers, the miners have vowed to starve before breaking the strike.

Last Tuesday, the Di-Phi voted unanimously to sponsor Gibson's visit here so that UNC may hear his point of view. Joint sponsorship with one of more other student organizations is expected.

Briton Gives English Lecture

Professor Michael Millgate, lecturer in English at the University of Leeds, England, will address the UNC English Club Friday at 8 p.m. in the faculty lounge in Dey Hall.

Prof. Millgate will speak on "The American Social Novel."

As a member of the U. S. State Department program for foreign specialists, Prof. Millgate is currently visiting the United States to work on William Faulkner manuscript materials.

JOHNSON GETS BRITISH PH.D.

Norman L. Johnson, professor of statistics at the University of North Carolina, was recently awarded a doctor of science degree by the University of London, England.

Of very great status, the doctor of science degree is higher than a doctor of philosophy or Ph.D. degree. The degree is awarded at all of Great Britain's universities.

A requirement for the degree is that the candidate must submit as many of his published papers as he thinks are necessary to obtain the degree. The papers submitted must be of such a great amount or quality that the candidate would be considered an authority on the subject.

Dr. Johnson submitted 46 publications to the University of London, from which he had previously received two bachelor degrees, a master's degree and a doctor of philosophy degree.

Dr. Johnson estimates that it would take about 12 years for a scholar to accumulate enough published materials to submit for the doctor of science degree.

A member of the UNC faculty since September, 1952, Dr. Johnson had previously been a member of the faculty of University College, Uuniversity of London. During 1960-61, he served as a visiting professor at the Case Institute in Cleveland, Ohio.

Lassiter Gets $30,000 From Markle Grant

Dr. William E. Lassiter, assistant professor of medicine here, this week was named a Markle Scholar in Academic Medicine, one of the most outstanding honors that can be given to a young medical scientist.

Dr. Lassiter is one of 25 scientists in this country and Canada to be so honored this year and is the ninth member of the UNC medical faculty to receive this award.

The appointment from the John and Mary R. Markle Foundation of New York provides a $30,000 grant to the Medical School here where Dr. Lassiter teaches and engages in research. The sum is given over a five-year yeriod to supplement salary, aid research, and assist in the scientist's development as a teacher and investigator.

Dr. Lassiter, a native of Wilmington, joined the UNC medical faculty in 1958 as a research fellow in medicine. He received his A. B., magna cum laude, with highest honors in physics, from Harvard University, and his M. D., cum laude, from the Harvard Medical School. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Lassiter of Wilmington.

From 1956 to 1957, he was senior assistant resident in medicine at North Carolina Memorial Hospital here. Before coming back to UNC as a research fellow, he was a research fellow in medicine at Massachusetts General Hospital and the Harvard Medical School.

Since 1962, Dr. Lassiter has been an assistant professor of medicine here, specializing in internal medicine. In 1962, he was named an Established Investigator by the American Heart Association.

Cincy Voted UPI Champs; Duke Second

Coach Ed Jucker's Bearcats were acclaimed the nation's top-ranked team for the 1962-63 regular season Monday by United Press International and now can establish the most successful reign in college basketball history by winning a third straight NCAA championship.

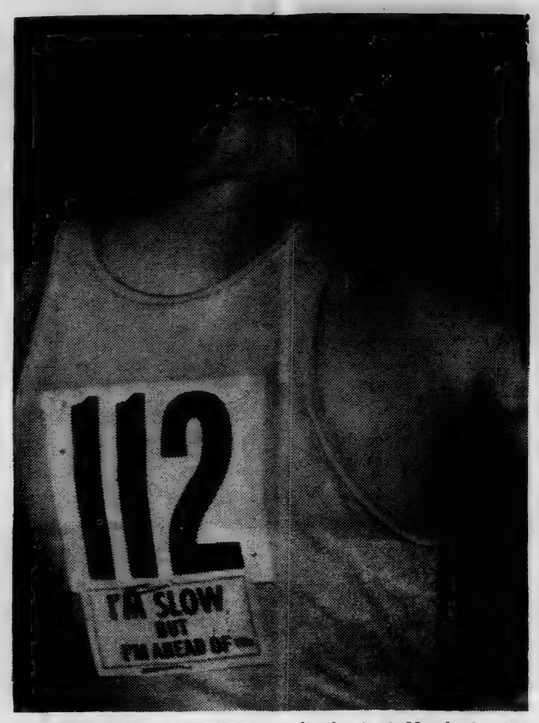
Cincinnati, which completed its regular campaign with a 23-1 record, now sets out to succeed where such outstanding college teams as Oklahoma A and M, Kentucky, San Francisco and Ohio State failed in the past.

Three of those teams scored back-to-back NCAA championships in the past but could not win a third. Oklahoma A and M, now Oklahoma State, won in 1945-46; Kentucky in 1948-49, and San Francisco in 1955-56.

Ohio State was named the top-ranked team by UPI in 1961 and 1962, only to be defeated both times by Cincinnati in the NCAA tournament finals.

No team ever has been formerly ranked as highly as Cincinnati over a period of six seasons. The Bearcats were rated second to West Virginia in 1957-58; fourth in 1958-59 and second to California in 1959-60. During the past two seasons they were rated No. 2 behind Ohio State.

Duke, with a 24-2 record, was second in this season's final UPI ratings, Arizona State (24-2) was third, Loyola Ill. also 24-2, was fourth, and Illinois (19-5) fifth.



The 1-2 finish by Cincinnati and Duke bore out the pre-season forecast of the 35 leading coaches who comprise the UPI rating board. Here is a rundown of the coaches' final top 10 compared to their pre-season fprediction:

Final Ratings	Pre-Season
1. Cincinnati	1. Cincinnati
2. Duke	2. Duke
3. Arizona St.	3. Kentucky
4. Loyola Ill.	4. West Va.
5. Illinois	5. Loyola Ill.
6. Wichita	6. Oregon St.
7. Miss St.	7. Miss. St.
8. Ohio St.	8. St. Bon'ture
9. Colorado	9. Wisconsin
10. Stanford	10. Stanford and Bo. Green

Arizona State, Wichita, Ohio State and Colorado thus must be considered the surprise teams on this season, with Kentucky, West Virginia, St. Bonaventure and Wisconsin the most disappointing.

Is 511 Possible? Ask Mr. Spahn

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — (UPI) — Incredible Warren Spahn having caught everyone else in sight, is now going after Cy Young.

To catch up with the immortal Young, the 41-year-old Milwaukee wizard may have to keep pitching the rest of his life.

Young won 511 games, far and away the top total of any pitcher in the history of baseball.

Spahn, who will be 42 next month but looks 10 years younger, has won 327, more than any other left-hander in history.

"I know it sounds crazy," said Spahn with almost devilish delight, "but I want to see how close I can come to Cy Young's record. Hell, I doubt I'll even get to 400, but who can tell?

"In the beginning I never even thought I'd make the major leagues. Then I never thought I'd get 200 victories. So who knows? I'm gonna try, anyway."

There seems to be no doubt whatsoever in Spahn's mind that he will win 20 games this year. If he does, it will be the 13th time in his career that he has done so.

"This is the year Warren Spahn has to win 20," he said, managing not to sound pompous about it. "If I fall short, there has to be some accounting made."

Spahnie did fall short last year, winning only 18 games while losing 14, and he believes he could have won 20 had Birdie Tebbetts pitched him more often. Bobby Bragan, the Braves' new manager, already has promised to work Spahn every fourth day and the veteran southpaw couldn't get any better news.

"I fought with two guys to pitch every fourth day," he said, without naming past Milwaukee managers Charlie Dressen and Tebbetts. "Maybe it wasn't their fault that they didn't let me do it. Could have been club policy. They probably wanted the kid pitchers to get more work. But I have to be a little selfish about this and I know I do my best when I work every fourth day."

Netters Hold Challenge Tilts

By ED DUPREE

The lull between the winter sports season and the spring season will be brightened this week as Coach Don Skakle's Atlantic Coast Conference tennis champions have a friendly battle among themselves.

The occasion will be the first challenge matches ever played on a UNC tennis team, scheduled Thursday. Previously Skakle has based the playing positions of his netters on their weekly performances. Under the old system Skakle's tennis teams have won four straight ACC championships, but the abundance of talent influenced the change.

A player can challenge the man above him on the team ladder under the challenge system, making it possible for the number five or six man to work his way up to number one — if he can consistently beat the rest of his teammates.

With the season opener against Dartmouth only two weeks away six men appear to be the Tar Heel bread-winners. George Sokol, the defending ACC singles champion, heads the list, but the team is loaded with men that could be number one on any of the other conference teams.

The other five are Ted Hoehn and Bitsy Harrison, defending ACC doubles champs, Charlie Shaffer, Keith Stoneman and sophomore O. H. Parrish. Another soph, Pete Meyers, is bidding strongly for a spot.

Dartmouth visits Chapel Hill for matches on March 23 and 25. Other important non-conference matches are with Big Ten Champions, Michigan; Harvard; Presbyterian and Miami.

Grid Turnout Hits 100

* * *

Injuries, unfortunately, are a part of the game . . . First to be sidelined was End Jim Ray of Hillsboro . . . Ray lettered two seasons past, but was idle last fall because of a bum knee . . . Now he has come down with another knee wound — on the opposite side.

* * *

The No. 1 and No. 2 fullbacks of last season, Ken Willard and Eddie Kesler, are missing drills because of baseball participation . . . So are the front line QB's, Junior Edge and Gary Black . . . Black, incidentally, has been ripping the cover off the horsehide and will be a strong contender for a start' ing outfield post.

* * *

The $64 dollar question for the Tar Heels seems to be what sort of line will Carolina offer next fall? . . . This is a coincidence, since exactly 64 men are being tested in the forward wall this spring . . . At the moment, the coaching staff figures end to be the strongest position up front.

* * *

Starting on March 16, the Tar Heels will hold their first full-scale scrimmage . . . Then for the next three Saturdays the gridders will clash under game conditions . . . It all winds up on April 6 when Hickey's heartiest undergrads take on the Alumni in their annual reunion.

HILLDALE, N. J. (UPI) — Bill (Moose) Skowron of the Los Angeles Dodgers returned home unexpectedly from spring training Sunday to file criminal adultery charges against his wife and a male companion.

Skowron, former New York Yankees first baseman, entered his home with a private detective and allegedly found his wife, Virginia, 29, with Robert S. Jenco, 23, of Saddle River, N. J.

Mrs. Skowron, mother of two young sons, charged her husband and the detective, Mat Donahue of the Bergen Investigative Service, with assault and battery.

This sets Milton's especially apart from other smart shops is their ability to offer new exclusive unique items not found elsewhere, and most importantly, at modest sensible quotations.

Whereas the average shop anticipates their needs six months in advance at most, many of the unusual items found in our Cupboards have their gestation period at least a year ahead of the ensuing season. In this way, we can keep ahead and continue to offer our patrons the most unusual innovations well in advance.

SP Will Run Lawler For President, Ellis VP

Secretary, Treasurer Also Named

By JOEL BULKLEY

The Student Party Tuesday night nominated Mike Lawler for President of the Student Party and Dick Ellis for Vice-President. The SP also endorsed Bonnie Hoyle for Secretary and Dick Akers for Treasurer.

Lawler cited the problems next year's president will be confronted with and pledged his efforts toward the authentic creation of a new vitality in the realm of student responsibility. He noted that the President must bring faculty, students and the administration together in order for a cooperative effort to propose solutions to the many campus problems.

Lawler said that the President must first lead the student body and then represent it, by the use of both imagination and diplomacy. He reported that areas needing improvement—campus social life, the freshman orientation program, fraternity finances and possible curriculum changes—should only be considered after the atmosphere, direction, and responsibility of student government at Carolina are improved.

Lawler said that each student must do his part to make his gift to the future that of a revitalized student life. He added that one of the biggest needs student government has now is for better communications which will in turn allow for the implementation of some needed changes within the realm of student responsibility.

George Rosental said last nigth that the Student Party not only needs reorganization but also redirection if it is to reflect an active interest which is needed for the betterment of student government.

Dennis Yager, NSA East Coast Program Director, addressed the Congress, for which four delegates convention briefly last night and will be elected in the spring elecists betwen the National Student outlimed the relationship that extions, and NSA.

Friday To Star In Jr. Class Drama Mar. 21

Consolidated University President William C. Friday—a man who's getting in the act more and more throughout the state where education is concerned—will become an actor for real when the Junior Class sponsors a skit March 21.

Other cast members of the Student-Faculty Variety show, as the program has been dubbed, will include Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael among a host of others.

President Friday, whose prior experience as a thespian is not known as yet, was cast in the role of a sleepy student "because of his obvious awareness of the type," according to one of the members of the sponsoring group.

The plot of the drama, which "may propel President Friday to immediate stardom," according to a spokesman, has not been revealed.

"However," the spokesman said, "I'm sure it would tax the talents of even the most experienced actor."

Also not yet revealed is the role to be played by Miss Carmichael. Rumors that the dainty Dean of Women will portray a coed femme fatale were not confirmed yesterday.

UP To Nominate SL Slate

The University Party will conclude its spring nominating convention tonight, beginning at eight o'clock in Gerrard Hall. The UP will endorse fifty representatives for student legislature, four candidates for the National Student Association (NSA) and consider whether or not to endorse candidates for the presidency of the Carolina Athletic Association (CAA) and the Women's Athletic Council (WAA).

Legislative endorsements will be based upon recommendations of the UP Executive Committee and the Legislative Reviewing committee. The reviewing committee has interviewed prospective candidates.

Late Monday night, the convention moved special orders and decided not to endorse any candidate seeking the Daily Tar Heel editorship. The convention also endorsed Richard Barrett as its nominee for vice-president of the senior class.

All DTH candidates have been invited to speak before the convention tonight.

Also nominated Monday were the UP candidates for the Big Four offices—Larry McDevitt for Student Body President, Bob Spearman for Vice-President, Sara Broadhurst for Secretary and Gerald Thornton for Treasurer.

Other Senior officers endorsed by acclamation by the UP were Charlie Shaffer (also endorsed by the Student Party) for President; Sue Drennan for Secretary; Mickey Blackwell for Treasurer and Joan Haley for Social Chairman.

She appeared with Tallulah Bankhead in the Broadway production of "Her Cardboard Lover" and played opposite Cameron Mitchell in "Criminal at Large."

Marion Fitz-Simons, wife of the director, plays Mrs. St. Maugham. Mrs. Fitz-Simons numerous credits include national tours with the Borgny Hammer Ibsen Co. and female comic leads in the state's two leading outdoor dramas, "The Lost Colony" and "Unto These Hills."

Josephine Pettis, a native of Sydney, Australia, will play Olivia. She played the female lead in a filmed television series, "The Tracer," and in productions of Theatre du Vieux Carre in New Orleans.

Pro Musica To Appear Tonight

The New York Pro Musica will perform the seldom heard music of the Middle Ages and the Renaissance tonight in Memorial Hall at 8, sponsored by Graham Memorial.

Under the direction of Noah Greenberg the group comprised of four instrumentalists and six vocalists have performed extensively in Europe including an engagement at Westminster Abbey. They are the first group to perform there.

The inspiration behind these distinctive music-makers began with Greenberg, who organized the group about 10 years ago. The new group was faced with many problems. First an extensive library of scholarly works dealing with medieval and Renaissance music had to be built up and the ancient instruments had to be collected. Then it was necessary to find highly qualified and dedicated musicians to interpret and play these early works (that have nothing except the note written down.)

However, the problems have been overcome. On their first tour of Europe they successfully performed the "Play of Daniel" an 'opera' which hadn't been performed since the 13th century.

The early music of the five centuries from 1200 to 1700 is played on musical instruments of that time; recorders, an early transverse flute, cromornes (soft, double-reed wind instruments), harpsichord, viola da gamba, bass viol, rebec (medieval fiddle), psaltery, hurdy-gurdy, sackbut (an early form of trombone), bells and percussion.

I.D. cards required for the performance.

Ethridge, Blanchard Issue Debate Offer

DTH co-editor candidates Dave Ethridge and Gary Blanchard yesterday challenged their opponents to a debate "to prove to the campus that our platform and our qualifications insure that we not only can but will improve the Tar Heel if we are elected.

"These two things—platform and qualifications—are the base upon which any improvement must rest," they said in a statement.

"If the platform is vague or ill-defined, or if it promises too much, chances are it will never be implemented.

"If the qualifications of the candidates are not high, then chances are equally good that the platform will never be implemented.

"A debate will allow the campus to judge at first-hand the feasibility of each platform and the competence of the candidate running on it.

"Of all campus posts, this is the one which most directly affects the student. He has to face that newspaper six days a week. It should be an interesting and informative encounter. Too often in the past this has not been the case.

"A debate will show that what the Tar Heel needs is not a policy review but a complete spiritual revamping, a sense of purpose, and a healthy dose of initiative, enthusiasm and competence.

"These are qualities you bring to a task, and in so doing you foster them in the people who are helping you to succeed at that task.

"We feel we have those qualities, plus the platform and experience needed to make good use of them.

"We challenge our opponents to prove that they are equally well-endowed."

Guardians Of Purity, Services For Sale?

In so far as students generally welcome the opportunity to cut up a bit and lower the standards of campus purity, we can recognize an occasional cause for concern on behalf of those poor souls who must endeavor to protect the stellar reputation of our fine institution.

Certainly, the Dean of Men and the Dean of Women must have their trying moments. (What would they do without them?) And certainly, we must recognize that now and again student controlled events get risque to the point of filth. But it has not been the history of past Campus Chest Auctions that would prompt the clamps of purity to be screwed past the breaking point prior to the Auction of last night.

The Campus Chest is organized for but one purpose, to raise money for several worthy charities. The task is a difficult one, and the success of the campaign depends in large part on the ingenuity and drive carried into activities by the co-chairmen.

If the Campus Chest intends to raise money, they must convince students to let go of it; that is, to forego the pleasures of a movie, beer, or package of cigarettes, so that they make greater and more lasting pleasures available to the recipients of the charity. This is no small task—convincing students to let go of their parents' money for the sake of some other unknown person or organization.

In years past, the Campus Chest Auction has been a highly successful means of procuring the needed dollars. Students are more ready and willing to let go of their money if they find that it can be fun to do so. Few indeed are those who feel that they come away from the Auction with merchandise of any great value, and yet, few are those who leave the auction without contributing in some manner to the Campus Chest Fund.

The Auction has been an opportunity for college kids to get together, laugh a little, and contribute a lot. We have attended several, and while taking note of slightly risque jokes and jibes, we have not noted any perverse trend towards making the Auction another Sigma Chi Derby.

* * *

We find it somewhat ridiculous to note the regulations placed above the activities, while encountering some very real "prior censorship" in preparation for the sale of donated merchandise. For instance; what could possibly be the implication of a ruling which states that "All donations of either goods or services will have to meet the requirements of good taste and common decency, and must at all times respect human dignity."

Or what did some tortured administrator have in mind when he or she felt it necessary to stipulate that "Any girls whose services are purchased for duties (cleaning, car washing, etc.) outside their residences must perform these jobs in groups of not less than three." Ah yes, there's strength in numbers.

Any of the individuals who honestly felt that a situation had gotten so far out of hand as to demand regulations such as these, ought rather to have directed their frantic efforts to the abolition of that event.

* * *

But then, there is no cause for fear. For, as no doubt was noticed, in the event of any future Campus Chest Auctions, "A representative from the Dean of Women's and Men's Offices will be asked to be present."

Well, if our guardians must be there on behalf of purity and motherhood, the least they can do is donate to the Campus Chest Fund or sell their services. (CW)

Greek Week

Back in the dark ages of fraternities, when brutality was the by-word prior to initiations, some noble sole worked diligently to do away with "injustice" and instigated what is now known as Greek Week.

To non-fraternity members Greek Week may appear slightly riduculous and perhaps equally useless. On closer examination, however, the outsider would be favorably impressed. During Greek Week, pledges from the different fraternities work for various local non-profit organizations (churches, etc.), participate in the Campus Chest Carnival, compete with one another in athletic events, and exchange dinners with pledges from other houses.

Money for charity, work for non-profit organizations, athletic competition, and a chance to become familiar with other fraternities over dinner.

Riduculous? Useless? Look a little closer.

Teacher Looks At Student Hecklers

("A professor takes equal time to strike back," says the U. of Minnesota IVORY TOWER magazine, of Prof. Edwin Emery's article "Who's All Boomed?")

IT WAS late in the fall of 1933, that fateful year when there was no University budget because the appropriation bill was signed by the wrong governor, as it turned out. No budget, no enrollment forms, no students. Plenty of time to clean out the files.

Over in Murphy Hall they ran onto a few folders in a box alongside the coffee dispenser. The box was marked "Office of the Board of Publications." And since John Pavlik had been graduated with suitable honors and there was no new board president, the box was brought to the office of the chairman of the Senate Committee on Studentless Affairs.

Well, one folder was marked "Revised Rules for Ivory Tower Fiction Contest." Another was labeled "Minutes of Meetings Held without Daily Reporter Present." The "Memos from SAB" folder had three letters in it. Just the crinkled mementos of an eventful year.

But flat on the bottom of the box was another folder. On its tab was the simple legend: "SCOFF." Inside was the constitution of that now-famous group, the Student Committee to Offend Friendless Faculty. Life never has been the same since this folder passed among faculty hands.

* * *

THERE WAS nothing really new in the constitution, or even in the by-laws of SCOFF. Every plan of action, every suggestion, every plot rang a bell of remembrance in some professional mind. It was just seeing them all nestling together in one document, signed by 15 charter members who always had been regarded as Friends of the Faculty, that caused the faculty to institute a study committee during the Year of No Budget. After that, no SCOFF-like trick could work again.

SCOFF was clever, all right. It warned its members not to put themselves behind the 8-ball with a professor by walking briskly into his office and saying:

"I'll have to miss your lecture this afternoon, Mr. Chips. Are you going to say anything important?"

Strangely enough, SCOFF added, several students insist on cutting their throats with old man Chips this way every year. It is the best way of all to offend a professor—but let some student you don't like do it.

It's better, SCOFF advised, to needle one of your TV professors who won't know who you are anyway. If you are a co-ed, sidle up to him and say:

"Are you really Mr. Chips? Gee, you look SO much younger on TV . . ."

SCOFF estimated this will make Chips feel like a co-ed's grandfather. Of course, if you are male, you can pull a switch and drive him to the makeup box by saying:

* * *

SOME of the professors who saw the folder felt that some of SCOFF's suggestions for such individual needling were quite juvenile. Like waiting outside his office until Chips has a caller, a telephone call, and an unfinished page in his typewriter before breaking in with a "Sign this Upper Division folder in triplicate right now" request. Or unobtrusively picking up this folder of lecture notes from that 153 course, along with your folder. Or asking him three hours after the midterm how the grade curve came out.

As for the section on apple-polishing, there was nothing new in it at all. Yawns, just yawns, down faculty row.

What SCOFF had done, to cause a year of faculty committee meetings, was to lay down some simple rules for group activities. Some one had taken a psych course, evidently. Or else he had persuaded an ed psych professor (this theory was closely checked, but the trail led over near Eddy Hall and then was lost) to spill some evil ideas. It was hard to believe students could have thought them all up.

SCOFF's records were burned by the faculty committee at the close of its year of study, but the instructions for the Student Committee to Offend Friendless Faculty went something like this:

"When a class meets for the first session, use the time-after-the-professor-dismisses-the-students-early. Organize! If there are fewer than 20 students, take them all into the plan. If it is a big lecture, SCOFF members should instruct several select 'ring' of students.

"PROFESSOR'S JOKES — This is an easy assignment. Laugh listlessly at the first few, but study his technique. Most professors elaborately build up to their prize jokes which have scored successes for years. Wait for a choice one, then let SCOFF strike, with puzzled faces, no laughter, and some annoyed rustling of notebook leaves ("let's get on with the lecture, Chips"). Repeat the maneuver three or four times. Chips will be so shaken he will be putty in your hands for the rest of the semester. He will over-compensate with high grades, in his effort to regain student favor. But don't laugh at even his final joke of the semester. Leave him quivering for the next class.

"EAVESDROPPING — Professors wonder what students really are thinking. Arrange a situation so that Chips apparently can eavesdrop on a four-or-five-student-conversation outside his classroom. Everybody talk at once so he can't really hear anything. Then everbody nudge each other, look at Chips, and stop in midsentence. He will worry about it the rest of the semester.

"CLASS LAUGHTER—Post a spy down the hall who will warn the class when Chips mounts the stairs. Start the class shouting, laughing, and gleefully talking. Really churn it up. Chips will hear it, coming down the hall, and begin to smile himself. When he steps into the room, everybody shut off the faucet. Have people glance at him with some embarrassment and take their seats. He will probably let the class go early. He might even retire early.

"PROFESSOR LATE — Don't just sit there. Send a committee down to his department chairman's office to inquire about where Mr. Chips is. The lower in rank he is, the more effective this will be.

"CLOSED CIRCUIT ELEPHONES —Don't just let these sit idle. Everytime Chips "fluffs" on TV grab the phone and ask him to repeat what he said. Chips won't know who you are. Have SCOFF pledges look up references which contradict what Chips said last time and put in calls early in the next lecture citing your evidence.

"EDGE OF SEAT — An age-old game, but especially good in long-hour classes. SCOFF members sit in two front rows, and lean forward for the final 10 minutes of the lecture, notebooks half - closed, ready to spring at the sound of the bell. He will quit a little early.

"MASS HYSTERIA — This is the reverse of "Professor's Joges.' Goes best in big lecture halls. Scatter SCOFF's carefully organized 'rings' of students around the room. At 9:47 one group begins to laugh just as Chips finishes Point 2 of a 7-point lecture. Other groups join in at 9:47.2, 9:47.6, 9:48 and 9:48.2. Get that howling laughter sound to it. Chips will wonder what he could possibly have said.. Don't stop laughing until he readjusts all his clothing to make certain it isn't that . . ."

You see what made the chairman of the Senate Committee on Studentless Affairs take the SCOFF folder to the Office of the Dean of No Students. He never told anyone that a former student named Pavlik was owner of the box which had contained it. He tore off the names of the 15 charter members so they wouldn't end up before the All-University Judiciary Council. After all, many more students had been involved. The faculty committee estimated, after distributing a questionnaire among professors, that there had been at least 200 incidents of the kind SCOFF recommended.

No professor, of course, ever admitted that one had happened in his class.

Letters: Crazy Cars & Swain Hall

To the Editors,

It really amazes me that so few car crashes have been seen in Chapel Hill. With the traffic problem bad enough by itself, it seems there has to be that extra element of crazy drivers around here to make it even worse. Drivers race up and down the streets like madmen.

Raleigh street in front of Joyner is one especially bad place for speed and so is the curve near Teague, where parked cars must back straight out into the street.

As children we learned not to play with matches; now some of us bigger children must learn we're no match for a vehicle gone wild. So what say let's slow down around here—and maybe, according to the slogan, we'll live.

—Vernon Robinson

To the Editors

The extension being added to Swain Hall is an architectural monstrosity.

This bright red box (clashing nicely with the original yellow structure) has its rear wall half covered by a great arched window. And clearly perceiving that glass breaks easily, the architect has cemented in this window form.

Is it possible that this cold gray cement slab of a window serves a purpose? No architect has a right to just slap on some ornamental headstone.

But in defense of our economically minded university building committee, maybe they saved the architect's fee and simply hired some laborers to build according to the present campus fortresses. And looking around, their eyes fell on magnificent Ackland Art Museum; and they copied it—but Ackland is a mausoleum.

And since each new building is supposed to match, a new aura—high lighted by great beer proof, H-bomb proof tombstone windows—may be arising on this campus with all the wonderful beauty and effect of syphilis.

To the Editors,

I would like to make a correction.

The suggestion that the University ask "Otelia Connor to talk to the orientation classes on manners" did not originate with me. I had never thought of it until some one made the statement before my talk, and another said the same thing after my talk.

I thought it was a good idea, because one student asked during the question and answer period—how were college graduates to know good manners if they had not learned good manners in the home and didn't learn them in college?

Judging from the interest that has been shown in my talk, both before and after I spoke, I believe that the students feel the need of some instruction in basic good manners, and would welcome the opportunity to brush up on the distinguishing mark of an educated man—"He can be counted on to behave as a gentleman.

I hope you will pay me the courtesy of making this correction.

Placement Service Predicts Big Year

By GLENN MAYS
In The Raleigh Times

Joe M. Galloway, director of the University Placement Program, said the placement program will probably be more successful this year than it ever has before.

He said the placement service has already handled more than 250 employer visits to the University campus this year and he expects the placement service to go over its 1962 total of 420 when a total of 2652 interviews were held.

The placement program, which is maintained to assist students and alumni of the University to find jobs following graduation from college, has been in its present manner since 1948 and has served more than 15,000 students and alumni during this time. The department also aids students in finding summer jobs. Last year the placement service helped more than 1,000 students to find jobs.

Galloway reported the four fields for which there is the biggest demand are sales, accounting, general administration, and chemistry. He said that there were 187 openings for salesmen, 190 openings in accounting, 142 in general administration and 111 in chemistry.

Of the persons who participated in the placement program last year and accepted jobs offered through it, 17 per cent went into accounting and 14 per cent pursued vocations in the chemical and pharmaceutical fields. These two groups composed the highest percentages of job acceptances for last year.

As for salaries of the persons getting jobs through the placement program, Galloway said the median salary received by 1962 men graduates with Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science degrees was $435 per month. The average salary received by graduates of the School of Business Administration with a Master of Arts degree was $585 per month. This figure includes both persons inside and outside of North Carolina. Galloway said of the North Carolina students who participated in the program about 65 per cent take jobs within the state.

The placement program director reported many smaller schools has established placement programs and the larger schools are giving renewed support to good placement programs.

"Much time and money go into education," he said. "Therefore, in order to best capitalize on this investment, careful attention should be given in assisting the student to make the transition from college to his career." He says the placement program can be compared to the sales office of an industry. He explained unless a company has a good sales department, the company will not be successful. He then said that a good placement program will add to the success of the graduates of a college.

He said "There is a definitely increasing trend or employers to turn to the college campus to recruit its potential future management."

Brinkley Was Here--Briefly

By PETE IVEY

So many people applied for Manly Wade Wellman's night classes in creative writing at the University that only one-third of the applicants could be accepted.

Those who showed up and were turned away appear to be only a small percentage of those who would like to attend such classes.

A man in Pittsboro said, "I have heard three different people say at three different times in Pittsboro they wish Manly Wellman would teach creative writing by educational television. "If we can't get in the drive-in class at Chapel Hill, we could learn to write by TV."

A quartet of faculty members were drinking coffee at Lenoir Hall and discussing David Brinkley's two weeks in the University back in 1939. Brinkley explains President Frank P. Graham was willing for him to stay at Chapel Hill as a special student, but not for credit since he hadn't graduated from high school.

"But look what the University taught him in just two weeks," said an English professor.

"The difficult we do at once," said a law professor. "For the genius it takes two weeks."

Since the stories about Brinkley and his 14 or so days at Chapel Hill were published, several "eyewitnesses" have turned up who remember seeing him in the village and on the campus twenty-four and a half years ago.

Miss Mary Henry of the Extension Division remembers him. So does Mrs. W. H. Branch who is secretary to Chancellor William B. Aycock. Mack Snipes who was a barber in Graham Memorial Student Union in 1939 recollects that David Brinkley came into the shop and got a haircut. "I wish I had saved the locks," said Snipes.

ULLMAN'S ROLE

B. L. Ullman of Chapel Hill gives away money to popes and kings. Also to historians, mathematicians, musicians and zoologists.

Mr. Ullman is a Kenan Professor Emeritus of Classics and is a member of the international Balzan Foundation that gave $51,000 to Pope John XXIII last week in Zurich, Switzerland.

Ullman, president of the Mediaeval Academy of America, is one of two Americans on the Balzan Committee that makes similar to prizes given by the Nobel Foundation.

A year ago he was on the committee when the Balzan Foundation presented $250,000 to King Gustav of Sweden who accepted it in behalf of the Nobel Foundation.

That was one of the few times a foundation has given money to another foundation.

Both foundations recognize efforts made for peace, for literature, for scientific achievement and art and cultural accomplishment.

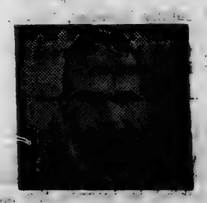
By arrangement between the New York Times Washington bureau and the School of Journalism at Chapel Hill, a steady stream of Times' reporters has flown to Chapel Hill and lectured to students in Chapel Hill. Speakers included Marjorie Hunter, Tom Wicker, John W. Finney, Anthony Lewis — all specialists on the Capital scene. The arrangement was made by James B. Reston, head of the Times' Washington Bureau and Dean N. N. Luxon of the School of Journalism.

2 Seniors Receive $23,800 Grants

Two UNC seniors, John Layne Scott of Brown Summit and William Anthony Smithson of Winston-Salem, have been awarded scholarships by the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation to support six years of medical education.

The presentation of $151,000 in Reynolds Scholarships to eight North Carolina college students was made recently at the annual awards banquet at Tanglewood Park Manor House. The recipients will enter the Bowman Gray School of Medicine in September.

Scott, 21, was awarded the Nancy Reynolds Verney Scholarship. Smithson, 20, received the Richard J. Reynolds Scholarship. Each of these scholarships provides a $3,000 stipend for the first year of medical school with the amount increasing annually to $4,800 for the sixth year—a total of $23,400.



This is the sixth consecutive year the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation has made scholarship funds available for medical education. A total of 49 students now hold Reynolds Scholarships.

Scott is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walker Scott, Rt. 2, Brown Summit. He is an Aubrey Lee Brooks Scholar and is currently serving as assistant in experimental pathology and as research assistant in organic chemistry here.

Smithson, the son of Mr. and Mrs. William C. Smithson, 1827 Fairview Blvd., Winston - Salem, participated in the freshman and sophomore honors program. He is a member of Phi Eta Sigma and was the recipient of the Freshman Merit Certificate.

Grail Mural Event Set For Thursday

By STUART BALL

The Sixth Annual Grail Mural Sports Jamboree gets underway tomorrow night at 6:45 with over 500 participants representing 42 teams competing for the championship.

This year, as in the past, the aim of the Jamboree is to bring a closer relationship between Carolina's dormitory and fraternity organizations.

Nelson Irvin of the Order of the Grail and Dave Wysong of the Intramural Council are the student coordinators. They have worked with Tommy Johnson and Walt Tuthill of the Intramural Department since the beginning of the semester to plan and organize the events.

Each social fraternity is paired by lot with a dormitory to form a joint Jamboree team. Last year's ATO-Avery pairing took top honors, but this year 21 new teams will vie for the championship.

The teams will be competing in eight events. Four of them, basketball, handball, badminton, and table tennis, will be round-robin tournaments. The winners of the six leagues will advance to the playoffs and finals.

The swimming competition will be a four man 100-yard free style relay. The six top teams will qualify for the finals.

A preliminary score of 300 points (432 possible) will qualify all archery doubles teams for the finals.

The foul shooters will have to rival Larry Brown for accuracy, as a 70 per cent accuracy (35 of 50) is needed to qualify for the finals.

The relay races will be divided into four sections. Maze dribbling, throw-catch-run and carry, and two rounds of the championship relay will comprise this fast paced event.

After the points are totaled, the winners will be rewarded for their toils with a steak dinner at Brady's Restaurant. They will also have their names engraved on a large plaque to be kept in the Woollen Gym trophy case. A smaller replica of this will be presented to the dormitory and fraternity composing the team.

Individual trophies will be given to the champions in each event.

Doug Jones Tests Clay's KO Forecast

That's the biggest question of the young sports year — a question that already has sold out Madison Square Garden to the bulging point of 18,732 seated and standing fans.

"I named the round exactly in 12 of my previous 14 knockouts," said confident Cassius from Louisville, Ky., Tuesday. "And I'll certainly make this the 13th successful prophecy on March 13. I'm the greatest."

If unbeaten 21-year-old Clay registers his 10th straight knockout in any round of this heavyweight contenders' elimination with the previously unstopped New Yorker Jones, the victory may earn him a September shot at the title — if Sonny Liston is still champion then.

The scheduled 10-rounder will not be televised to homes nor broadcast on radio. It goes only on television closed circuit to theaters and arenas.

Experts Pick Clay

Clay, the 1960 Olympic light heavyweight champion, who has clicked off 17 straight victories, including 14 knockouts, as a professional, is favored at 17-5 to defeat 26-year-old Jones, despite Doug's greater experience against better opponents, also despite the fact that the biggest boxing upset of 1962 was scored on Dec. 15 by Jones.

On that December night, in the same garden ring, Jones — a 12-5 underdog then — knocked out third-ranking Zora Folley in the seventh round and shunted Folley off the title trail.

Now, Clay is ranked second among contenders by The Ring magazine, and Jones is rated third because of the Folley upset and his record. Mustachioed Doug won 21 of his 25 fights, 13 by knockouts. He lost three on decisions to Eddie Machen, light heavyweight champion Harold Johnson in a title fight, and Folley in their first bout at Denver, Colo., Aug. 1, 1962. He also had a draw with Erich Schoeppner of Germany.

Bettors Ignore Record

Clay is a heavy favorite, despite Jones' record, because he is taller and will outweigh Doug about 208 pounds to 186 and because of Clay's winning momentum.

Clay — who boasts so much about his own abilities, perhaps with tongue in cheek — became the ring's "golden prophet" last Nov. 15 when he knocked out former light heavyweight champion Archie Moore in the fourth round, just as predicted.

In his latest bout on Jan. 24 at Pittsburgh, Cassius drew a gate of $55,782 with unranked Charlie Powell of San Francisco, former pro football player, who was belted out in the third session — as forecast.

Jones, never a pop-off guy, declared calmly Tuesday, "I'll whip Cassius Clay. I'm sure of that. I feel just like I did before I fought Folley in December."

Phils Trounce Reds

CLEARWATER, Fla. (UPI)—The Philadelphia Phillies came from behind to trounce the Cincinnati Reds 12-6 Tuesday in an exhibition game that featured 24 hits, including home runs by Jerry Lynch and Gordy Coleman of the Reds and Don Demeter of the Phillies.

The Reds scored once in each of the first three innings, but the Phillies pounded Jim Maloney for four tallies in the third and Turk Lown for six in the fourth.

KC Trips Twins

ORLANDO, Fla. (UPI)—Pitcher Norman Bass won his own game for the Kansas City Athletics Tuesday, breaking a 4-4 tie with a home run in the eighth inning that beat the Minnesota Twins 7-4.

Two more tallies followed off Ray Moore, third of four Twin hurlers. Lefty Jim Kaat was belted for four in the third with Chuck Essegian clouting a bases-filled double. Southpaw rookie Gerry ArRigo pitchd three hitless innings before Moore came on.

Feminity Invades College Swimming

Coeds Swim For Tulane Team

Tulane University in New Orleans owns the two best-looking swimmers on college teams this season. The reason? They're both girls.

Martha Leveritt and Pam Hayes are enrolled at Newcomb College in Tulane University and are the first coeds to participate in sports.

Miss Leveritt is a sophomore from Decatur, Ga., and Miss Hayes is a freshman from Bryan, Texas.

Martha has actually competed in two meets on the Tulane varsity squad in the 200-yard freeestyle. Pam is not eligible to enter meets for points since she is a freshman but has been swimming in exhibition.

Tulane had lost 19 straight meets prior to their officially joining the team. The first time they entered, Tulane defeated Emory University of Atlanta, 62-33, for its first dual meet victory in history.

The attractive swimmers attracted a crowd of 1,000 spectators the first meet they entered, while the attendance had been 200 to 300 before.

The two girls are the first female swimmers in college history. If Tulane's success is an indication, they certainly won't be the only ones.

Pledge Teams Tie In Athletic Events

Alpha Tau Omega and Phi Kappa Sigma fought to a tie in early Greek Week competition in the annual Field Day yesterday. Each pledge team scored 23 of 25 possible points. Phi Delta Theta took third place.

Included in the athletic events were "up-down", "shuttle", "jumpstick", and "obstacle" relay races and a tug of war. Eight men competed for each team.

The competition was termed the toughest in years' by Greek Week co-chairman Dave Van Pelt of Delta Upsilon.

The Field Day comprises 20 per cent of the total Greek Week scoring and is the first event of the week. Because of the tie, duplicate prizes will be given and the winneds wil be awarded an equal number of points.

Van Pelt said that this was one of the most important of the activities which include the best booth for the Campus Chest carnival, Work Day, Extracurriculars and Scholarship.

The 24 fraternities were divided into four groups and each competed with the other teams in its group. The team which accumulated the greatest number of points on a 5-3-1 scoring basis was declared the winner.

The team of pledges which accumulates the highest number of points during the week will take over possession of the Stanley Sturm trophy for the "best pledge class of the year." The winners of individual divisions will receive smaller trophies for their fraternity.

Yanks Are Blanked; Dodgers Top Cards

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., (UPI)—The world champion New York Yankees got just one scratch hit off three Milwaukee Braves pitchers Tuesday and suffered a 5-0 defeat, their third in four exhibitions this spring.

The victory was the Braves' first in four tries.

Frank Funk, Claude Raymond and rookie Larrh Maxi did the Millwaukee pitching and only Raymond allowed a hit, that an infield scratch by Tom Tresh with one out in the seventh inning.

Funk, obtained from the Cleveland Indians last winter, gave up only a walk in the first four innings. Raymond also worked four innings and Maxie one.

ST. PETERSBURG (UPI)—The Los Angeles Dodgers rallied for two seventh-inning runs off Harry Fanok, Tuesday to beat the St. Louis Cardinals 4-3.

Moose Skowron, who has stroked five straight hits in the last two games, led off the seventh with a single. Frank Howard's infield hit, Fanok's second balk of the inning, a wild pitch and a force-out grounder on which Dick Groat dropped the ball accounted for the two tainted runs.

Picketing Stops

Picket lines at the Rialto Theater in Durham have been withdrawn. The lines were set up about 10 days ago by the Durham chapters of the NAACP and CORE.

In a letter written Tuesday to the Daily Tar Heel, Miss Maggie Dent, owner of the theater, said, "Following negotiation meetings with local NAACP-CORE chapters over the weekend, Miss Maggie Dent, owner of the Rialto Theater, Durham, announces that amicable and satisfactory arrangements for integrating the theater have been made. Picket lines, therefore, have been withdrawn from the theater."

Miss Dent declined to state the arrangements, saying, "Because of certain factors, this is all any of us wish to announce at this time."

The fellows are encouraged to pursue graduate work at institutions other than those where they took their undergraduate work.

Each candidate for a fellowship is nominated by a faculty member. Out of every 100 college seniors throughout the United States and Canada only one or two are nominated.

Lloyd States DTH Not 'Sideline' Job

"The editorship of the Daily Tar Heel is not something that can be run after just as a plaything," said Harry Lloyd, candidate for the position, in a statement yesterday.

"If I am elected editor, the Tar Heel is the only paper I will work for, and UNC students are the only readers I will write for. The position is for a person who is dedicated to his job, and not for someone who wants to try it as a sideline or an experiment," said Lloyd, a junior who has worked as sports editor, managing editor, associate editor and photographer during his three years on the paper's staff.

"If my opponents are interested in a better DTH, why haven't they proved it by working for the paper during the last three years?

"And how do they think they can serve UNC students by holding down the Tar Heel editorship as a 'sideline' job? Can students with family responsibilities and jobs on other newspapers put in the time that the DTH requires?

"I am the only candidate familiar with all the phases of this newspaper," Lloyd said. "I know what the paper can do, I know what its limitations are, and I know how it can be improved.

"The Tar Heel must become, first and foremost, a student newspaper. It must focus first on the Carolina campus, and it must pay more attention to campus news."

Lloyd said that newsgathering should be improved now that salaries are available for reporters. He stated, however, that he does not propose a "beat" system that his opponents have outlined. "The beat system, whereby a reporter is assigned to cover only a certain area every day, does not encourage good reporting and writing. I want my writers to be able to cover any phase of campus life. Practically every candidate who ever ran for editor has proposed a beat system, but none of them have ever made it work.

"I have a very solid, five-point platform, which I am certain will help the Tar Heel to be a better paper," Lloyd said.

"In brief, my proposals are: (1) Concentration on campus news, (2) Greater emphasis on sports coverage, (3) A more interesting, more responsible editorial page, (4) A new approach to the Sunday edition, and (5) A reorganization of the staff to encourage new members."

Lloyd said he would be explaining his program in more detail in the near future.

WRC Sets Up Post To Unify Frosh Women

The office was created in an effort on the part of the council to coordinate and gain continuity among the various programs pertaining to the freshmen. The aim is to improve the freshman women's position in the University and to promote their interests on the campus.

The coordinator will work with the various organizations on the campus with which the freshman women are connected ("Y," CWC, etc.). She will also work with the day students in an effort to help them become members of the University life.

Girls who are interested in this position may pick up an application form at the information desk in Graham Memorial. Interviews will be held Thursday afternoon, March 14, from 4-6 in Roland Parker 1.

WRC Deletes Veto Power Of Dean In Women's Rules

The Women's Residence Council Tuesday night secured its independence from the Dean of Women's Office by voting unanimously to amend its constitution and by-laws, striking out the Dean's vote power.

According to WRC Chairman Diane Blanton, the action was taken by the council in order to promote student responsibility and to expand the areas in which the WRC can take an active role.

The amendments deleted six of the seven references in the constitution regarding the Dean of Women and her office. One section which stated that the council was to confer with the Dean on "major policy decisions" was not deleted.

Miss Blanton said that the reason for leaving that particular section intact was to insure that the lines of communication between the students and the administration would not be severed. She added, however, that this would not give the administration a veto.

The council made several other constitutional revisions to enable them to "increase the range of our interests as a Student Government organization." "Our plans at present," said Miss Blanton, "involve four specific areas."

One of the areas is in setting up a Freshman Co-ordinator to improve the Freshman orientation program for women. Miss Blanton said that this area would become increasingly important as more freshman are admitted to the University.

The WRC also plans to continue and improve its Foreign Travel and Study Committee which it set up a few months ago.

Two other amendments set up a liason with the Student Legislature and add to the council chairman's duties the job of maintaining contact with the executive branch of Student Government.

Miss Blanton said that the purpose of these amendments was to provide an opportunity for the council to take a more active interest in the workings of student government in all of its branches and to gather information for planning new ways in which the WRC can implement its goals.

The picketing of the Rialto Theatre in Durham has finally, at least momentarily, been called off. Everyone who has managed to follow the confused war-of-rights over the desired integration of that theatre should greet this news with a heavy sigh of relief, and yet with a slight shaking of the head.

The short, terse announcement which carried the news of a planned integration and cessation of picketing shed just about as much light on the matter as did any of the previous charges and counter-charges that surrounded the beginning of the battle.

It has been a battle which found many concerned individuals nursing split loyalties, and both sides charging that neither really understood the facts. Miss Dent, the owner-manager of the Rialto, stoutly maintained throughout that she hoped to integrate as soon as possible. The NAACP and CORE contingents, however, felt that "as soon as possible" seemed awfully vague and rather distant—and with "possible" a good deal stronger than "soon," they seemed to have a point.

It is hard to overlook the fact that when you are denied admission, a segregated theatre is just that—a segregated theatre. Noble intentions have too often come to naught, to provide anything like a firm assurance that what everyone seems to want is surely on the way, merely because it ought to be.

* * *

But, at any rate, the pickets have withdrawn and negotiations have progressed—progressed, hopefully, to the extent that in the very near future, with the removal of "certain factors," and in spite of past misunderstandings, "amicable and satisfactory arrangements for integrating the theatre" will actually be carried out. (CW)

WRC Takes A Step Forward; No More Puppetry?

We would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Women's Residence Council for its recent decision to pull out of the Dean of Women's Office. It should be regarded by all those interested in student self-government as a step forward toward complete autonomy.

It would appear that what was said in this column a few weeks ago about "hypocrisy and puppetry" will no longer apply to the WRC—at least not on paper.

However, that remains to be seen when the members of the council will be called upon by the students and their own good sense to take actions which Dean Carmichael will object to on the grounds that her dear helpless little girls cannot take care of themselves, and should have no rights.

We hope the council will act with courage and conviction when the problem presents itself.

—Mike Putzel

Attention, Candidates

The Tar Heel hopes to be able to provide better, more full coverage of this spring's elections, by assigning two of its staff reporters, full-time, to covering speeches and general campaign activity. In addition to news coverage, the DTH will ask each of the campus candidates to submit a 400-word statement on specified days — these statements should present different aspects of their platforms.

The following guidelines have been set for these statements (if it says statements should be in by 5 p.m. Tuesday, we mean 3 p.m. Tuesday. If not turned in by this time, they cannot be run).

Presidential candidates: 4 statements, to run Thurs., March 21; Tues., March 26; Thurs., March 28; and Tues., April 2. Statements for Tuesday are due at 3 p.m. Monday; those for Thursday at 5 p.m. Tuesday.

Vice-Presidential candidates: 3 statements, to run Sat., March 23; Wed., March 27 and Sat., March 30—due at 3 p.m. the day before publication.

Secretary and Treasurer candidates: one statement, both to run Friday, March 29.

DTH Editor candidates: 4 statements, to run Thurs., March 21; Sun., March 24; Thurs., March 27; and Tues., April 2. Statements for Thursday must be turned in by 5 p.m. Tuesday.

WAA and CAA candidates: one statement, both to run Sun., March 31.

NSA Congress candidates: 3 statements, to run on the editorial page Wed., March 20; Friday, March 22; and Friday, March 29. These must be approximately 300-350 words.

On Supreme Court

Harvard Dean Hits Black Absolutism

(Eds. Note: Anthony Lewis of the NY Times will speak on the "Role of the Supreme Court" tonight in Howell at 8.)

Washington Post

USING THE SCHOOL prayer cases as an illustration, Dean Erwin N. Griswold of the Harvard Law School has made one of the sharpest attacks in recent years on the philosophy that underlies some of the Supreme Court's decisions.

In a speech at the University of Utah, Griswold expounded his argument that too many justices and too many Americans adopt an approach that is oversimplified and narrow when they consider the meaning of Constitution.

The approach Griswold criticized—he called it "absolutism . . . which is more likely to lead us into darkness than to light"—is one largely developed by Justice Hugo L. Black.

* * *

THUS THE Griswold speech is on one side of a dialogue that began long ago among intellectuals in the legal world. For years, as Justice Black was developing his philosophy bit by bit in Supreme Court opinions, Justice Felix Frankfurter was attacking it bit by bit. Beginning with a speech by Black in 1960 and encouraged by an interview he gave last spring, the topic has come under serious discussion by many outstanding legal thinkers.

The argument turns on how the words of the Bill of Rights, particularly those of the First Amendment, should be applied in the contemporary world. But in its full ramifications, the argument involves the total approach one takes to the Constitution.

Black has chosen the word "absolute" to indicate his view. A prime purpose of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, he has said, "was to withdraw from the Government all power to act in certain areas . . . if the Constitution withdraws from Government all power over subject matter in the area, such as religion, speech, press, assembly and petition, there is nothing over which authority may be exerted."

Looking at the words of the First Amendment ("Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press . . .") Black says, "It says 'no law,' and that is what I believe it means."

* * *

GRISWOLD CALLS the Black approach "fundamentalist theological" in its philosophy. "If one thinks of the Constitution as a God-given text stating fixed law for all time, and then focuses on a single passage or, indeed, on two words—'no law'—without recognizing all the other words in the whole document, and its relation to the society outside the document, one can find the answer very simply . . .," Griswold said. "No more thought is required."

The basic trouble, he argues, is that Black's approach causes a judge to put on blinders. "He looks at one phrase only; he blinds himself to everything else."

The better approach, Griswold argues, as did Frankfurter, is "a comprehensive or integral approach (that) accepts the task of the judge as one which involves the effect of all the provisions of the Constitution, not merely in a narrow literal sense but in a living, organic sense, including the elaborate and complex governmental structure which the Constitution, through its words, has created."

* * *

ESSENTIALLY, this is the view that the Supreme Court must "balance" the various rights and powers involved when cases arise under the Bill of Rights. In contempt of Congress cases, for example, the Frankfurter-Griswold view calls for the Court to weigh the claims of an individual to remain silent against the need of Congress for the information he possesses. The Black approach, on the other hand, says the Constitution, establishes the right of silence and this must be respected regardless of what power is asserted against it.

"The great danger of the judiciary balancing process is that in times of emergency and stress it gives Government the power to do what it thinks necessary to protect itself, regardless of the rights of individuals," Black has said. "If the need is great, the right of Government can always be said to outweigh the rights of the individual."

Griswold objects to the use of the term "balancing" to describe what he is talking about. He argues that it is not a question of weighing rights but of reading the Constitution as a whole rather than in fragmented sections.

In return, those who support Black argue that his view is far more complex than it seems on the surface. Prof. Charles A. Reich, in a recent article in the Harvard Law Review, suggests that Black's view must be read in conjunction with his fear that judicial power will be abused and his belief that the fundamental "balancing" decisions regarding rights and powers were made when the Constitution was written.

* * *

HOW DOES THE school prayer issue fit into all this?

The Court has already ruled that public schools cannot begin their days with recitation of an officially composed prayer. It is now studying whether they can use the Lord's Prayer. In both cases the question is whether the use of the prayer establishes a religion in violation of the First Amendment. Black wrote the opinion in the first case saying it does.

Griswold believes the Court approached this problem wrongly. But beyond that, he thinks this is an issue that was carried to the Court only because too many Americans have adopted the "absolutist" view of the Constitution.

As a result, he says, both the justices and the parents have looked too much at the Constitution's prohibition against establishing religion and too little at the Constitution's and the Nation's tradition of tolerating all religious beliefs and nonbeliefs. He said:

"It is perfectly true, and highly salutary, that the First Amendment forbade Congress to pass any laws respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.' These are great provisions, of great sweep and basic importance. But to say that they require that all trace of religion be kept out of any sort of public activity is sheer invention . . .

"Does our deep-seated tolerance of all religions—or, to the same extent, of no religion—require that we give up all religious observance in public activities? Why should it? It is hardly likely that it was entirely accidental that these questions did not even come before the court in the first 150 years of our constitutional history. I do not believe that the contentions now made would occur to any man who could free himself from an absolute approach to the problem.

"This is a country of religious toleration . . . But does religious toleration mean religious sterility? I wonder why it should be thought that it does. This, I venture to say again, has been, and is, a Christian country, in origin, history, tradition and culture. It was out of Christian doctrine and ethics, I think it can be said, that it developed its notion of toleration . . . Does the fact that we have officially adopted toleration as our standard mean that we must give up our history and our tradition?"

GRISWOLD goes on to argue that prayers in the schools help teach tolerance. The minority child who refuses to participate learns that he is different but that the difference is accepted. The majority child learns that those who are different are tolerated and accepted.

"Learning tolerance for other persons, no matter how different, and respect for their beliefs, may be an important part of American education and wholly consistent with the First Amendment," Griswold says.

Griswold's comments would be much less important than they are if their impact was confined to school prayer issues. But he thinks that the prayer cases are only an example of a school of thought that engages "in a species of absolutism in its reasoning that is more likely to lead us into darkness than to light." The Supreme Court, he suggests, has engaged in this in such diverse areas as contempt of court and jury trials as well as First Amendment problems.

ACTUALLY, Black's view has dominated the Supreme Court only on certain issues. Much of his philosophy has been outlined in a long series of dissents.

Yet Black's philosophy has made a marked impact on American law and legal thought. He has created a powerful intellectual force, the end result of which no one can predict. Griswold's speech should be read, therefore, as a challenge to that philosophy and a questioning of its assumptions far more than as an attack upon Black personally or on the Court for its decision on school prayers.

Documents On Disarmament: Humphy & Art

The Minnesota IVORY TOWER

10 a.m.

Dear Art,

I've been meaning to talk to you about our policy on the test ban for some months now. You know our committee has been dealing with the question a long time and I'm beginning to wonder whether we would be so insistent on having eight inspections a year instead of three. After all, there will always be a lot more questionable cases than this with all the volcanic activity in Siberia. The key thing will be in selecting which eight or which three suspicious cases to investigate—a chancy undertaking whatever the number.

Anyway, what significant breakthrough will they make with one test—we always need a series. A series we can detect with no inspection (regularity of test site and explosion periods) so why the bother?

Those "black boxes" are terrific and I don't see why you're so suspicious. Is it because some "peace people" invented them? The Russians couldn't tamper with them without leaving some trace and you can always rig them up so copies can't be made. And if they try to put them in harmless places or falsify the data some other way you can always check against the stations in Japan or Sweden—about as neutral places as one could want.

If the Russians will cheat, then none of these controls will stop them. There is no guarantee.

If Congress has to have a pacifier, then ask for four inspections and have a knock-down drag-out battle after which both sides exhaustedly agree on three-and-one-half in the interests of humanity. That sort of stuff goes over great back home.

Sincerely yours, Humphy

12 noon

Dear Humphy,

I have given your note considerable thought and have sent it back to Washington for consideration. I am sure that it will be carefully considered as an expression of an important view in Congress.

Sincerely yours, Art

11 a.m.

Dear J. Edgar,

Would you please look over this letter. I think it shows the suspect in a rather revealing light You might look into his political activities at college. It all sounds sort of pink to me. Once you get some dope send a line to Bobby. I'm sure he'll understand because if this was ever said in public there would be a scandal.

Cordially, Art

Geneva, 1 March

Comrade Vasily:

It is imperative that you return immediately to Moscow for consultations with the Presidium of the Party. A special plane has been dispatched this morning for that purpose. I should warn you that you will be asked to defend certain positions taken by the Geneva delegation in the past. As you well know, Comrade N. S. Khrushchev has been attempting to arrange meetings with the Chinese leaders. Your concessions on "two or three inspections" have hardly helped us in this respect.

Your adversaries have been preparing their positions for some time now so I would suggest you contact the non-military members of the body. Comrade Malinovsky will undoubtedly line up against you and it appears that Nikita will be most interested in maintaining party unity.

This is a time of crisis for the international workers' movement and the basic role of Marxist-Leninist doctrine must be considered. I think you are aware of the fact that your group is on shaky ground in this area.

Long live the Revolution Andrei

Hear Striking Miners' Side

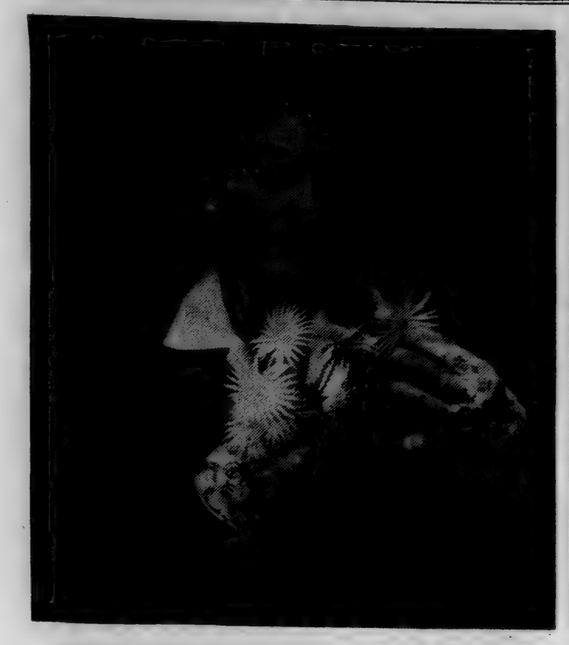
To the Editors,

Since last October 20,000 coal miners in Hazard, Kentucky, have been without work. Wages had slipped from $24.00 per day (with only two or three days' work a week) to $3.00 per day. In addition to the drop in wages, company payments of forty cents per ton of coal mined, formerly contributed to the operation of hospitals, pensions etc., have stopped.

The resulting poverty and suffering is hinted at by the fact that out of 36,000 residents of Hazard, Kentucky, 16,000 are reduced in financial resources as to make them eligible for the government's surplus commodities program.

In 1953 I worked under a program to improve health and education of children in the mining area of East Tennessee and West Kentucky. I saw, even then, much suffering. I am glad to urge students and townsfolks to attend the meeting March 20 (8 p.m., Carroll Hall), when the problems and the plight of these miners will be presented.

—Rev. Charles M. Jones



. . . Reply To A Reply To A . . .

To the Editors,

Somehow, to me, Mr. Lobrowske, your "message" becomes a little more obscure with every letter you print. Forgive me, if you will, for not wallowing in the "glory of your dawning light," but I wonder just how you can pretend coherence when you say, "my attack was based . . . on the principle of pacifism as such . . ."? When you use "deviant behavior" (presumably from a "war-mongering norm") as a value term, to condemn, in another shoddily disguised argumentum ad hominem, your interpretation ("anarchy") of the ideal of "peace on earth, good will among men"?

I must admit to some reluctance in my first reply to use the quote "mud thrown, ground lost," for I couldn't really see what constituted the grounds for your attack; your last quote now makes that clear.

LOUISE LAMONT will play Madrigal, the mysterious governess, in The Carolina Playmakers production of "The Chalk Garden." The Enid Bagnold stage hit will run through Sunday at the Playmakers Theatre. Curtain time is 8:30 each evening, with an additional matinee performance Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Tickets are available for $2 each at 214 Abernethy Hall and at Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved.

Irony Evident In Playmaker Casting

By GORDON CLARK

It's sort of ironic that Louise Lamont is acting in "The Chalk Garden," which opens tonight at the Playmakers Theatre.

It isn't that she isn't one of The Carolina Playmakers' finest actresses, but merely that nothing fails to grow in the talented actress - homemaker - gardener's own garden—unlike the demented garden in the play.

Mrs. Lamont plays Madrigal, the recently imprisoned governess, in Enid Bagnold's witty, poetic play. She has difficulty restraining herself when she discusses the play, "it's so very beautiful!"

A student in the UNC drama department back in the days of Proff Koch, Mrs. Lamont (then Louise McGuire) went on to do professional radio and stage acting in New York, Chicago, Toronto and stock companies throughout the Northeast. She acted with her cousin, Tallulah Bankhead, in "Her Cardboard Lover," and with Gregory Peck, Glenda Farrell, Ed Begley, Cameron Mitchell and Fred Stone in numerous other productions. She played opposite Mitchell in "Criminal at Large," in "one of my few ingenue roles."

Talking enthusiastically about her reasons for being so fond of "The Chalk Garden," she said: "It's the language. Things like 'a garden is a good lesson; so much dies in it so often' and 'the soil cannot give what it has not got' have so much meaning!"

Mrs. Lamont, who keeps busy the year-round in her garden at the Lamont home on Laurel Hill Rd., is one of the gardeners on the Chapel Hill garden tour in April. A day dosn't go by in which she doesn't explore and enjoy the sloping, beautiful garden.

After Louise met John Lamont in Hartford, Conn., where she was doing radio work, they came to Chapel Hill to marry and make their home.

Never idle, Mrs. Lamont founded the Lamont School of Drama for children here. Also, she annually serves as a judge for the Carolina Drama Festival and teaches acting each summer to the Junior Carolina Playmakers. Among her favorite roles with the Playmakers are leads in "Rain," "The Matchmaker," "The Little Foxes," "I Remember Mama" and Gertrude in "Hamlet."

"Foster Fitz-Simons (director of 'The Chalk Garden') and I first acted together 'Rain,' when I played Sadie Thompson. This is the fourth play in which he's directed me.

"This is undoubtedly one of the finest casts I've ever worked with. Marion Fitz-Simons is superb, and Mary Spearman—whom I taught this summer—is a fine, budding young actress."

Mrs. Lamont has no intention of slowing down any time soon. She is now writing an outdoor drama, "which I'm keeping 'mum' about right now."

"The Chalk Garden will run through Sunday at The Playmakers Theatre. Curtain time is 8:30 each evening, with an additional matinee performance Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

Fink University Opens Doors To All Applicants

A new institution of higher madness has sprung up on the campus of Hamlin University in St. Paul, Minnesota.

Called "Fink University," and devoted to the principles expressed by Steve Allen on the 30-minute nightly comedy program "The Steve Allen Show," the new school boasts an enrollment of 48 students and new applications are being received daily.

"Our school is already distinguishing itself in many areas," says Ron Speed, editor of the "Fink Scrapbook" and the university newspaper, "The Rat Fink Herald."

"Just recently we won the Fern Bowl Game with Kreel U, and we now strongly feel that our rousing cheer 'S-B-F-S-B-F Sis-B o o m-Fink' will lead us to victory over any adversary. And our Fink Scrapbook, compiled by the Fink Historical Society, is bursting with literary promise."

Steve Allen, who now wears the Fink University sweatshirt given him by the students in St. Paul, where Steve participated in the St. Paul Winter Carnival, has asked that all those who are interested in forming their own Fink Campus contact him at the Steve Allen Playhouse, 1223 N. Vine Street, Hollywood 28, California for an official charter.

It is anticipated that in the future Ivy halls across the country will resound with that profound motto: "Don't be a high school dropout — Be a Fink!"

Aycock Clarifies Approach On Admitting Coeds To UNC

Any suspicion that the University would attempt to lure women students from its Greensboro campus to Chapel Hill under a change of university functions may be dismissed as unfounded, an official said today.

University Chancellor William Aycock said that while permission has been given to take freshmen coeds at Chapel Hill plans are now "for a maximum of 24" under the new program next year.

When the University opens it doors to freshmen women, Woman's College is expected to begin allowing men students to enter at undergraduate levels.

The 24 women expected to enroll as freshmen at the university will be in music, art and dramatic arts course.

Eyebrows Raised

Reported plans for an enlarged fine arts division at Chapel Hill had raised some eyebrows among WC alumnae.

Alumnae are divided over the plan now before the Legislature to change the name of WC and admit male undergraduates.

The university, he acknowledged, is proposing some changes in its fine arts department "but this is an internal reorganization."

For this the university has no plans to hire any new faculty members. In the reorganization the division would be made to encompass educational television activities as well as dramatic arts, music and art. But no new facilities will be added and the division is not to be expanded.

To Make Full Use

The 24 freshmen girl students Aycock plans to have room for would enable the university to make full use of its existing faculty.

Heretofore the university has limited freshmen students to those residing inside the Chapel Hill city limits and to freshman nursing students, and those in certain other studies preparatory to medicine.

Aycock said freshmen students generally are of the "lowest priority" for admission at Chapel Hill.

That is, the highest priority is to graduate and professional students and the lowest to freshmen and sophomores.

Silky Seal Siren Stays Aloof Of Ardent Advances

The trouble is that Selina, the silky siren, won't have a thing to do with him. Whenever he comes too close, she chases him off and at dinner time eats most of his fish.

Harry was brought to Coney Island from Canada in hopes that he would mate with Selina. He had the right idea, but Selina buffaloed him from the start.

One thing that helped her get the upper hand was Harry's "hangover." He was given a tranquilizer before he was trucked to New York from the Quebec Zoo.

"Harry was still dopey from the sedative," a Coney Island aquarium spokesman said Tuesday. "He was weak, too, from the mating urge. He was down to 800 pounds from his normal 1,000. He hasn't been eating.

"When he dived into the tank, Selina chased him around, butted him and cut him up a little. He got out of the water quick and has been on the island in the tank ever since. He hasn't made any more overtures to her."

The spokesman said Selina has stayed in the 30-foot diameter tank "throwing her weight around" and eating most of Harry's daily diet of 20 pounds of herring and mackerel, besides her own.

"The tranquilizer appears to be wearing off," the spokesman said. "He's sitting up and taking more notice today . . . and growling at the keepers. That's a good sign.

"We hope that at any time now he'll take a plunge again and reassert his masculinity."

GENETICS TALK SET

Dr. Alexander G. Bearn, an authority on serum proteins and a member of the staff at Rockefeller Institute, will speak Friday, March 15, at 12:15 p.m., to the Genetics Journal Club of the UNC School of Medicine.

Dr. Bearn's talk will be in Room 302, MacNider Hall, and will be open to the public. His topic is "Genetic variations in serum proteins."

An Associate professor at the Rockefeller Institute, Dr. Bearn is both a physician and a scientist. He is Secretary of the Harvey Society and a member of the Genetics Training Committee of the United States Public Health Service.

NSA Creates Fund To Help Africans

The United States National Student Association (USNSA) has announced the creation of an African Freedom Fund, specifically designed to aid the African students who announced their resignation last week from several Bulgarian universities.

The African students' decision to leave Bulgaria came after the arrests of their leaders and a police assault on demonstrating students. The students charged the Bulgarian government with thwarting their attempts to form an All-Africa Student Union to represent all African students in that country.

To support their claim of racial discrimination by the Bulgarian government, the students say that Arab students studying in the country were allowed to form a similar organization.

The fund, which affects three hundred students, is designed to receive donations from individuals and organizations who desire to aid the students.

The students who withdrew from the universities represent twenty-two African countries. Almost all have expressed a desire to continue their educations, but many do not even have the money to get out of Bulgaria.

Dennis Shaul, President of USNSA, was quoted as saying "The need is imperative; the moral is clear. It is time for action."

Torrid Farewells Nixed By Army

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (UPI) —American soldiers in South Viet Nam, already curbed by the government's ban on dancing, have been ordered to forego torrid airport farewells with their Vietnamese girl friends, it was disclosed yesterday.

Gen. Paul D. Harkins, U. S. Forces commander in South Viet Nam who acquired the nickname "The Ramrod" during World War II, issued a general order to all commanders last month. It read:

"I do not think that intense public farewells between American servicemen officers and enlisted and their Vietnamese girl friends are fitting or appropriate, and particularly not so in the eyes of the Vietnamese people when these farewells occur in such places as the waiting room or lobby of the airport."

A career for exceptional men

...Some notes about you, about us, and the advertising business

About you. If you are the man we seek: You have an abiding curiosity about people and the world around you.

You're alert and responsive to new ideas, new ways of doing things. You like to take on new problems . . . you see them as opportunities.

You dig deep into the why of things. And the best answers you can come up with today are never good enough for you tomorrow.

You're an individualist. Yet you thrive on team spirit.

You have conviction about freedom of choice, consistent with the rights of others.

You're the kind of man who could be successful in business for himself, but you see the greater challenge implicit in the major enterprises of today's world.

About us. The J. Walter Thompson Company was formed 99 years ago. It has for many years been the largest advertising firm; its stock is owned by more than five hundred active staff members.

We help over 500 companies in the United States and abroad sell thousands of products and services to hundreds of millions of people. Last year alone, we were responsible for the advertising investment of over one-third of a billion dollars.

There are 6,800 people working with Thompson around the world. Our backgrounds range far and wide. And so do our assignments: writing, art, market research, media buying, TV and radio, styling, marketing and merchandising, music and the theatre, engineering, accounting and statistical analysis, international business, and the social sciences are only part of the list.

In our experience, superior individuals from every graduate and undergraduate educational discipline find successful careers in a major agency such as the Thompson Company. Staff members in our New York Office alone represent nearly 300 colleges and universities here and abroad.

Your career with us. You may be surprised to learn that while an advertising company must have artistically creative people, it depends just as much on people who are imaginative and inventive in other ways.

Our business is selling. Communicating through the written and spoken word is how we sell. You must possess the ability to speak and write well so your ideas may be shared and understood.

We are looking for the kind of men who wish and are able to assume substantial responsibility early in their business lives. To such men we offer a remarkable chance to grow and develop —one seldom found in any firm.

Previous advertising experience is not required. Basically, our interest is in the nature of a person, and not in his specialized knowledge and abilities.

We offer you no standard starting salary, no cut-and-dried training program. Beginning salaries are individually considered and compare favorably to those of other national firms. We help you tailor your own development program, based on your interests, your abilities, your goals. Your program will differ from other men's programs just as you differ from other men.

When you join us you will work side by side with experienced advertising men. Your growth will be based on your own initiative, your own development. There are no age or seniority requirements to limit the responsibility you can earn.

We encourage you to follow your curiosity into all phases of advertising, because we want you to become a well-rounded practitioner as rapidly as possible. Experienced advertising men are eager to coach you individually in your efforts to develop your capabilities. Additionally, you are free to delve into every nook and cranny of advertising through our annual series of twenty professional seminars, workshops and classes. You learn from men who are experts in their fields.

About men who join us. Eight out of ten college men who have joined us in the past decade have remained with us and are enjoying varied, exciting careers.

Because of our emphasis on early growth, relatively young men commonly handle major responsibilities in many phases of our business—in New York and throughout the world.

Most initial assignments are in New York City. However, there are many offices throughout the United States and the world to which you may, if interested, request assignment later on.

If you wish to be a candidate, you must be in a position to join us by June 1, 1964. You may obtain further information at the placement office. Please consult with them regarding the possibility of a personal interview. We will be on campus March 27 and 28.

College Roundup

Editors Quit At CU

NEW YORK (UPI) — Seven editors of the Columbia Review, a student literary quarterly published at Columbia University, have resigned in protest against university interference, it was learned yesterday.

Mitchell Hall, 20, editor of the Review, said the editors were told last Friday "that we could take it on faith that powerful people in the university would object to contents of the upcoming issue and use us as fall guys in their anger against student publications in general."

Hall said the editors agreed to withdraw two poems in the issue, which he said the dean's office described as "objectionable," but refused to withdraw a third which was "definitely a good poem." He said they decided to resign rather than withdraw the third poem because "the important thing is to get the issue out on our terms."

STATE CHARGES MARSHAL

OXFORD, Miss. (UPI) — A postponement until September was ordered this week in the scheduled trial of Chief U. S. Marshal James P. McShane who was charged with breach of the peace during the University of Mississippi desegregation controversy.

The state charged McShane with touching off the riot that led to two deaths and hundreds of injuries. McShane gave the orders to marshals to open up on demonstrators with tear gas.

HATTIESBURG, Miss. (UPI) — Students at the University of Southern Mississippi which was reported to be in line for desegregation received a warning from their president this week that campus demonstrations would not be tolerated.

A Negro, John Frazier, 21, of Greenville, Miss., has applied for admission but said he is still waiting to hear whether his application has been accepted.

UNIVERSITIES SHARE RESOURCES

CHICAGO (CPS) — Eleven major mid-western universities have announced plans to create an "academic common market" to make the faculties and facilities of all the universities available to individual students at each school.

The program is designed to enable students to move freely from one school to the other to make use of libraries, laboratories, and teachers important to their fields of study.

The new plan is the latest development in a venture begun by the Committee on Institutional Cooperation, formed in 1958 by the universities of Wisconsin, Purdue, Northwestern, Ohio State, Minnesota, Michigan, Michigan State, Indiana, Illinois, and Chicago.

The new program will start next fall for a two-year trial period. A student may leave his university for a semester or two quarters to take courses or make use of facilities not available at his home school. He will continue to pay fees to his home school, and his transfer will be supervised by his regular instructors. One feature of the plan is to allow the different universities to specialize in certain areas through concentration of resources.

AFRICAN UNIONS JOIN IUS

PHILADELPHIA — The national unions of students of three East African countries have applied for full membership in the Communist-dominated International Union of Students, the Collegiate Press Service learned recently.

The national unions (corresponding to the United States National Student Association) are those of Tanganyika, Kenya, and Uganda, all former British territories. They follow a recent decision of the National Union of Nigerian Students to seek full membership in the IUS.

The unions, including Nigeria, will also continue to participate in the International Student Conference, which includes the American national union and the unions of most Western countries. This policy of dual membership in the two international student organizations is interpreted as an attempt to carry out the neutral foreign policy of independent Africa on a student level.

The IUS has its headquarters in Prague, Czechoslovakia, and includes all of the national unions of students of the Communist world in its membership. The International Student Conference, with headquarters in the Netherlands, was founded in the early 1950's after the American secretary of the IUS, USNSA's Bill Ellis, resigned from the IUS secretariat in protest when the IUS refused to protest repression of Czech students during the Communist takeover in that country. American and Western European students formed the ISC with a purposely loose structure to ensure that all decisions taken by the ISC would be democratic and responsible to the wishes of the membership.

Bylaws Revised

The PTA Thrift Shop held a board meeting last week at the Chapel Hill Library to revise and adopt bylaws, and to bring the hand-book and operational procedure up to date.

Under the new by-laws, PTA presidents and school principals now have full voting rights.

Reported improvements at the Thrift Shop included additional storage bins and more clothing racks.

Mrs. Martha Whittinghill, chairman of the Thrift Shop, has asked that the public be reminded that contributions and volunteer workers are still needed. The shop is open Tuesday through Friday. Monday is spent unpacking stock.

SNCC To Hold Conference

The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) announced that it will hold its third annual conference of student anti-segregation participants in Atlanta on Easter Weekend.

Officials of the Atlanta-based student group said that "over 300" students from every Southern state are expected to meet here April 12-14.

The theme of this year's conference will be: "Emancipation Then; Freedom Now!"

Reverend C. T. Vivian, pastor of the Cosmopolitan Baptist Church in Chattanooga, Tennessee, will deliver the keynote address on April 12, at 7:30 p.m.

The conference will be held on the campus of Gammon Theological Center.

Southern students who attend the conference will "learn new techniques and methods of combatting segregation," according to SNCC staffer Ruby Doris Smith.

Workshops on "Negro Protests: A History"; "Nonviolence: Past and Present"; "Techniques of Community Mobilization"; "Problems in the Movement"; "Southern Influence in National Politics"; and "The Hidden Structure and Social Action" will be held.

The conference will close on April 14 with a closing message from SNCC Chairman Charles McDew.

Scientists Qualify As Naval Officers

Under a new officer program announced by the Navy, graduates of accredited colleges who hold a degree with a major in mathematics, physics, mechanical engineering, electrical engineering, reactor engineering, or chemistry may apply for commissioned officer status as Naval Instructors.

Upon acceptance into the program, applicants are sent to the Navy's Officer Candidate School at Newport, R. I., for 16 weeks of training. After completion of this program they are commissioned as Ensign, U. S. Naval Reserve and ordered to active duty. Two weeks of intensive instructor training follows commissioning. After this the officer instructors are sent to their choice of Navy Schools throughout the nation to teach subjects within their speciality in nuclear power, guided missiles and other technical schools.

Some provisions of the physical requirements have been liberalized for this program, particularly visual acuity and color perception. The active duty obligation is 4 years with normal pay, allowances, and promotion schedules. Full career opportunities are also available.

Interested men can contact the nearest Navy Recruiting Station, the Officer Procurement Center, Federal Building in Raleigh, or the NROTC Unit here for information about the Navy Instructor Program.

Cadmus On Nursing School Committee

Dr. Robert Cadmus, chairman of the University School of Medicine's Department of Hospital Administration, has been named to an eleven-member committee to develop guidelines for constructing acutely needed nursing schools throughout the nation.

Dr. Cadmus' appointment came from the National League for Nursing and the Public Health Service.

The committee has been charged with the responsibility of advising the Public Health Service in the development of a guide to be used by colleges, universities, hospitals and regional hospital planning groups in planning for nursing educational facilities.

UNC Baseballers Should Improve

By BILL STROUPE

"Thus far the ball club is working hard and showing the potential of having what I consider a good college ball club."

That is what baseball coach Walter Rabb thinks of his team.

"We should be considerably improved over last year. They're interested in having a good ball club and willing to do the work."

Bill Brown and footballers Frank Gallagher and Eddie Kesler will play first base. Rabb said, "We haven't had the chance to scrimmage, so we aren't sure who will play there."

Dickie Prindle and Bobby Cox will play second.

The shortstop will be Jim Speight, and Dick Fleming may see some action at that position.

"We're got three or four men at third," Rabb said. "It will be a battle between all of them." Pete Rose, who will probably get the job, has to compete with Tommy Wright, Bill Taylor, and Mike Traynor.

There is plenty of experience in the outfield with three lettermen: Buddy Tilden, Buddy Pope, and Heyward Hull. But there are also footballers Gary Black and Ken Willard.

"The two football players have the power and they are capable defensively. They will probably start."

Willard hurt his leg sliding in practice and "will be slow developing." He will play left, Black in center, and Tilden, Hull and Pope will battle for right field.

The pitchers will be Bill Heywood, Spence Willard, Jerry Davis, Bill Danneman, Bobby Reagan, Junior Edge, Larry Jenkins and Andy Billesdon. Joe White will possibly be used in relief.

Righthander Heywood is a transfer from Wilmington Junior College.

Football quarterback Edge is also a righthander.

Davis, Danneman and Reagan were members of last year's freshman team, which had a 14-4 record. Davis and Reagan are lefthanders.

In looking ahead to the coming season, Rabb said, "We expect to have trouble with Clemson and Wake Forest, going by the players they will have returning.

NIT Tourney Starts Tonight

NEW YORK (UPI) — The National Invitation Basketball Tournament, oldest of such post-season college events, starts its 26th annual show at Madison Square Garden Thursday night with some outlanders from Wichita big favorites to win.

The opening doubleheader program matches Villanova (17-8) against De Paul (15-7) and Fordham (18-77), one of the two New York City entries, against Memphis State (18-6).

A Saturday afternoon first-round doubleheader pits LaSalle (16-7) against St. Louis (15-11) in a game to be televised nationally and Miami of Florida (22-4) against St. Francis of New York (16-6).

Seeded teams — Wichita, Providence, Canisius and Marquette — start play in the Saturday night and Tuesday night quarter final twin bills, with the semifinals scheduled for Thursday night, and the nationally-televised final Saturday afternoon, March 23.

NCAA Grabs Champs

Considering the fact that the NCAA tournament which was initiated one year after the NIT grabbed several of the leading independent schools, as well as the conference champions, the NIT managed to round up a respectable 12-team field. The combined won-and-lost record of this year's field is 212-81 for a surprisingly high 72.4 percentage.

Wichita, runnerup to Cincinnati in the tough Missouri Valley Conference and the No. 6 team in the United Press International ratings, is the most glamorous of this year's entries.

Coach Ralph Miller's Wheatshockers, with a 19-7 record, have defeated four teams that were ranked among the nation's top eight this season. They handed Cincinnati its only defeat and also beat Arizona State, Loyola (Ill.) and Ohio State.

Poor Tourney Showings

Wichita competed in the NIT twice before with little success, being eliminated in the first round in 1954 and last year. In this season's tournament, the Shockers start play Saturday night against the winner of the Villanova-De Paul game.

Providence, which won this tournament two years ago, is seeded second behind Wichita. The Friars from Rhode Island, with a 21-4 record and the No. 13 national ranking, meet the Miami-St. Francis survivor Tuesday night.

Third-seeded Canisius (17-6) takes on the Fordham-Memphis State survivor in Saturday night's quarterfinals, while fourth-seeded Marquette (18-8) faces the La-Salle-St. Louis winner Tuesday night.

Frats, Dorms Combine For Grail Mural

Forty-two teams will be competing tonight for top honors in the Sixth Annual Grail Mural Sports Jamboree. Each social fraternity is paired with a dorm to form a Jamboree team. This year's teams are as follows:

ATO-Old East, Beta-Parker Pound, Chi Phi-Teague, Chi Psi-Graham, DKE Blues- Old West, DKE Reds-Lewis, Delta Sig-Winston, DU-Stacy and Kappa Sig-Manly.

Phi Delt - Ruffin, Phi Gam-Grimes, Phi Kap Sig-Everett Rogah, PiKA-AFROTC, Pi Lamb-Everett Exciters, SAE-Aycock, Sigma NU-Alexander, Sig Ep-Mangum, TEP-Avery, ZBT-Joyner, Zeta Psi-Parker Pack, and KA-Ehringhaus.

Starting time for the relays is 7 o'clock. All other events will begin on completion of the second round of the championship relay.

INTERNATIONAL NIGHT

Many exotic international dishes and a variety of entertainment will highlight the annual International Night to be held on April 27 at 6:00 p.m.

The affair, sponsored by the Cosmopolitan Club, will be held at St. Thomas More Church on Gimghoul Road.

Tickets will go on sale in Y-Court and at GM starting April 1 at $1.50 per person.

Sophomores Bolster Golf Team

By ED DUPREE

A trio of promising sophomores and five junior lettermen could make North Carolina's golf team the dark horse of the Atlantic Coast Conference this spring.

Last year Coach Ed Kenney's golfers posted an 11-5 record, finishing 4-3 in the ACC's regular season. In the ACC finals the Tar Heels finished second to Duke.

Kenney thinks highly of his sophs and Tommy Arnold, Les Fleisher and Skip Tucker could have a great deal to do with the team's success in their first year on the varsity.

The five junior lettermen are Abe Andes (11-3 dual match record last year), Mike Dore (10-4), Jerry Ayers (4-1) and Harvey Hill (6-7-1) and George Reams.

The first match of the season will be tomorrow at Winston-Salem in a three-way stroke play with Wake Forest and Duke.

Duke should be the toughie of the conference once more. Coach Dumpy Hagler has four lettermen returning from his team which finished third in the annual NCAA tourney held at Duke. He has seniors John Abernethy, George Smith, Rich Bassett and Jack Saalfield back. In Hagler's 30 previous years at Duke, the Blue Devils have won 17 conference titles.

Ken Folke leads Wake Forest's strong team which has several outstanding prospects up from the freshman team. Wake finished high in the NCAA finals last year as did all three of tomorrow's competing teams.

African Socialism Produces Power Centralization, Says African Affairs Secretary

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

G. Mennen Williams, Assistant secretary of State for African Affairs, yesterday outlined three major objectives that the African government is trying to achieve including "the removal of colonial servitude . . ., government with the consent of the people, raising living standards and standards of education . . ."

Addressing the 13th annual N. C. Conference on World Affairs Williams told the Carroll Hall overflow crowd, that he felt Africa's drive toward independence is progressing swiftly but "most African leaders are impatient because many Africans have not yet attained self-determination."

Williams said that African leaders realize they must rely not only on self-help but on help from external sources, such as the United States or the Communist bloc. "But," Williams added, "In all of these associations, however, Africans tread warily because to them democracy means self-rule, and they want no relationships that threaten exercise of their sovereign choice."

The second African objective Williams mentioned "is government with the consent of the people." Williams said that most African political parties seek to establish the people as the ruling class. He said that "scrupulous attention to popular sovereignty is found throughout political writing."

Williams said the African's third philosophical objective in democratic development is raising living standards and at the same time raise the standards of education.

G. MENNEN WILLIAMS
. . . Outlines African Goals

"Africans are anxious to overcome their age-old enemies — poverty, illiteracy, disease, malnutrition — and unless this is accomplished rapidly, democracy will be a hollow theory to them," Williams said.

The former governor of Michigan pointed out that the annual income of an African is $100 compared to our $2500 and many Africans have no money income at all.

"Only about 10 percent of the people have achieved literacy, and life xpectancy is low throughout much of the continent," Williams added.

Williams said that African leaders have turned to a type of socialism to help boost their economic and social standing. But he said that this so-called socialism was in no way connected with the Marxian concept of socialism. "It has no industrial proletariat upon which to build; it embraces all religions without causing conflicting loyalties; and it is cautious in its response to Communist overtures," Williams said.

Williams said this "socialism" has one bad effect on African development — strong centralization of power. He said the arguments for a one-party rule in Africa include: "experienced leaders shouldn't be divided; a time of emergency requires unity; strong central leadership is needed to counter possible tribal movements; present leaders are revolutionary heroes and have no mass opposition; and mature and loyal opposition is rare in a new state.

"While we hope the one-party system in Africa will be a sohrt-term, transitional arrangement," Williams concluded, "the principal point of our concern at the moment is whether these governments remain free and independent and give the people genuine choice and an opportunity for democratic expression.'

Dr. Graham Cites Importance Of UN

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

UNC's grand old man of education yesterday expressed his faith in the United Nations when he said, "During the last 18 years of this Atomic Age, the United Nations has become a moral imperative . . . and there should be at least one world torum in which we could talk things through instead of shooting them out."

Dr. Frank Porter Graham, former University president and U. S. Senator who now serves as a U. N. Mediator, spoke to the Annual Conference on World Affairs which met in Carroll Hall yesterday.

Speaking on "What Case Will You Make for the U. N.?" Dr. Graham said he changed his original topic at the last minute to answer "the double attack on the United Nations from the extreme left in the world and the extreme right in the United States."

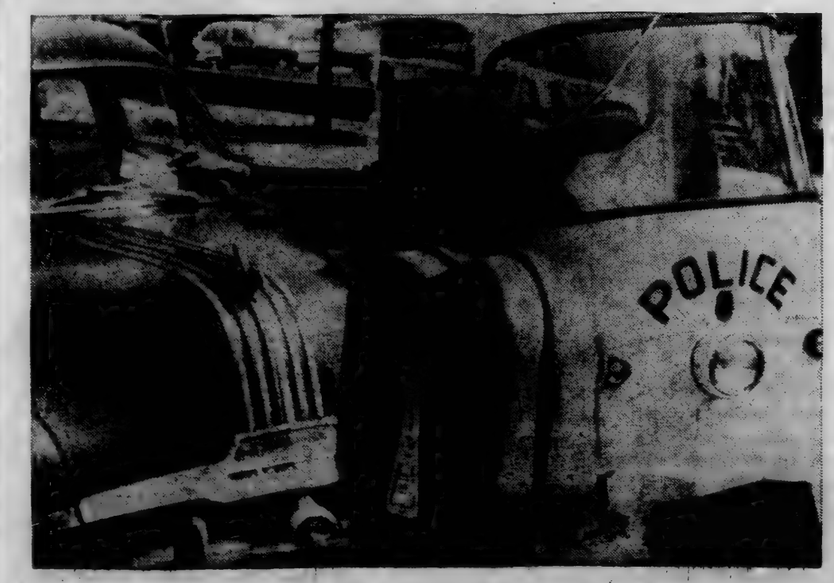
"The U. N. leans up against you," Graham said. "The real foundation of the U. N. is in the mind, heart, words and the prayers of the people and in the free and voluntary assemblies of all peoples in the world."

Dr. Frank, as he is affectionally known, said that in this atomic age, the need for a United Nations is even greater. "It is well for us to look back and see that the year that atomic power made its appearance, the U. N. made its appearance on the stage of the world . . . and since that time it has cooled off seven hot spots, the last being the Congo."

"The U. N. must be strengthened if it is to survive . . . and we must keep up the struggle incessantly," Graham said.

"We must have freedom, justice and compassion for peace on earth . . . and we must have long range pograms to enlighten and help the one billion people on this earth.

"As we discover new ideas, we must recover old ones . . . ideas that have become mechanisms and have tied this world together, ideas such as those from the commercial, industrial and atomic revolutions, ideas that have helped make this a more interdependent world.



Graham said th U. N. should settle stubborn international disputes through more use of the International Court of Justice. He also recommended emphasis on disarmament, the use of the General Assembly to settle disputes, use of the World Court, and "the use of an international police force to solve disaster.

Concluding his remarks, Dr. Frank said, "We all need to work for a more adequate United Nations . . . for a survival of all humans of earth . . . We must have equal justice, freedom and peace under law and human brotherhood under God."

SOFT WAY TO MAKE A LIVING — The long arm of the law, Chapel Hill Style, snakes out of one of the tiny vehicles that have been variously assailed as "attack bombers," "white marias" and "rolling outhouses" by victims of overtime parking tickets. Judging from the high rate of ticketing, the tiny patrol cars do a real service to patrolmen. No longer do they get callouses from walking. Now they get them from sitting. —Photo by Wayne King

Contributions To Campus Chest Said Going Well

The Campus Chest Drive, which began this year with the Tuesday night Auction and shoe shines in Y-Court, is off to a good start, according to Chest officials.

The Auction netted over $650.00 and the total for the shoe shiners so far exceeds $40.00. With the Carnival yet to come the prospects are good, officials say, that the chest will surpass its $6000.00 goal to aid four charities.

Reports from the solicitations committee, headed by Mac Boxley and Clay Kenan, are still incomplete but over $750 had been collcted by Wednesday evening. This $750 is from about 20% of the student body.

The last function of the Campus Chest Drive this year will be a Carnival on Saturday afternoon at 1:30 on the Intramural Field.

There will be five carnival rides including a roll-a-coaster, a tilt-a-whirl, a ferris wheel, a bullet, and an octapus.

Dormitories, sororities, and fraternities will also have over fifty booths ranging from a pitch penny and chance games, a combo, a dunking contest and a shooting gallery.

Student Releases Tear Gas; Action Taken By Court

A student charged with using tear gas in a dorm room was put on dormitory probation for one and a half semesters and given an official reprimand in an IDC trial Wednesday.

The student, after being squirted several times in a water fight, fired the tear gas into a room in which three students who had started the fight were hiding.

In an effort to open a window to let some air into the room one of the students climbed on another's desk. The student whose desk had been disturbed was home for the weekend. When he returned he reported the incident to the IDC.

The student who had fired the tear gas pleaded not guilty to a charge of possessing and firing a firearm and pleaded guilty to a charge of disorderly conduct. Both pleas were accepted.

The IDC pointed out that since there is a state law against possessing or selling tear gas mere possession of tear gas constitutes a violation of state law and can be regarded as disorderly conduct.

It was pointed out in the trial that since the cartridge does not leave the gun when the gun is fired, the gun cannot be regarded as a firearm.

The IDC Court said that the sentence was light in this case because most people and at least one store in Chapel Hill were unaware that there was a law against possessing tear gas. Any future use of tear gas, the court said, will probably be treated as both a civil offence and an IDC offence, and will be dealt with more severely.

ANDERSON TOURS WEST

Dr. Carl E. Anderson, assistant dean for student affairs and professor of Biochemistry and Nutrition, in the UNC Medicine is touring army, air force and naval facilities in the west this week in a program sponsored by Medical Education for National Defense (MEND).

An orientation tour for deans and coordinators in the nation's medical schools, the MEND trip is part of the organizations annual program, and is similar to tours arranged for members of congress.

Dr. Anderson will visit Aerospace Medicine, Brooks Air Force Base and the Brooke Army Medical Center at Fort Sam Houston, in San Antonio, Texas, where he will view medical services, field medical units, see demonstrations of emergency care and tour the Army Medical Research Unit.

The tour will carry the deans to San Diego, Calif., as well, where they will visit the Naval Air Station North Island, the aircraft carrier USS Oriskany, Submarine Flotilla One, and other facilities.

Political Parties Nominate Candidates For Legislature

CARNIVAL — The rides for the Campus Chest Carnival started going up on the intramural field next to Woollen Gym yesterday in preparation for the big day Saturday. Beginning at 1:30, this year's carnival will feature a roll-a-coaster, tilt-a-whirl, ferris wheel, a bullet and an octapus, in addition to dormitory, fraternity and sorority booths. While the men above worked on one of the rides, the small pooch at right, his leash tied to a piece of machinery, sat quietly by, perhaps waiting in anticipation for the fun Saturday.

Give To The Campus Chest:

A United Plea, A United Effort

I would like to take this opportunity to try to establish a state of mind about the Campus Chest and its goals for this Spring. On a personal level, the Campus Chest does two very important things: it offers an opportunity for active participation in a campus activity to many of our students; and it gives many more the opportunity to participate and contribute to this very worthwhile organization.

But why are the goals of the Campus Chest so worthwhile?

First of all, it gives Carolina students an opportunity to support not only one of their own scholarship programs, the Panama Exchange, but also the opportunity to promote goodwill and financial support with various other agencies. I feel that since students themselves have chosen, in addition to the Panama Exchange Program, to support the American Friends Service Committee, the Mental Health Clinic at Butner and the World University Service that we should all realize how worthwhile the charitable aims of the Campus Chest are this year.

Therefore, instead of urging each student to contribute, I would hope that each student will consider the values of the Campus Chest Drive and decide for himself that support is necessary.

In 1961 the IFC and Panhellenic sold "coupons" for 25 cents to help the student refugee problem during the years of the Algerian crisis. This was part of a program co-ordinated by the World University Service. This maybe little-known organization is one of the vital forces in the international student community. It provides funds: for the education of disenfranchised Africans in apartheid South Africa; for large quantities of food to be shipped to disaster areas abroad; in 1956-57 for hundreds of scholarships for Hungarian student refugees; and for fundamental education programs in underdeveloped countries in cooperation with UNESCO.

Our contributions also will go to the Butner Mental Health Hospital. Many of our nursing students do their practice-nursing at this children's mental health hospital. Ask our fellow students! They will tell us how much our dollars will do for these kids.

Jim Scott, a Carolina student just back from Panama, has been one of the organizers of the proposed Panama Exchange. Our contributions will bring together members of the respective student bodies toward better understanding of our individual cultures.

And while talking of exchanges, how many Carolina students have participated in the work programs or educational exchanges of the American Friends Service Committee—to France, to California, to Mexico, or to Germany? Our contributions will bring together students from the world over at summer work camps, will finance an American student's year-long stay in a French home in Provence, or will send someone from Asheville to Mexico for a summer of construction work in a village.

These projects merit and need our support. Let's give to the Campus Chest!

Most of us don't consider seriously a fund raising campaign for charity such as the Campus Chest. If approached by a solicitor, we might drop in a quarter never stopping to realize the benefits which would occur to the programs and people receiving this money.

Suppose every student on campus gave just $1.00, a mammoth sum of approximately $10,000 could be amassed without having a Campus Chest Carnival or Auction. For most of us this $1.00 is not much—one week's cokes in Y Court, cigarettes for four or five day's, a movie—yet we rationalize ourselves into believing we can't really afford to give $1.00.

Maybe we can't, but State and Dook students usually give more per capita to their respective charity drives than do we at U.N.C. I think we would all hate to admit that Dook and State could out perform UNC in any undertaking, least of all one that can be so easily achieved through the efforts of EVERY student here at Carolina. I would urge each student to be sure his dollar counts toward our overall goal.

LDC President

The Campus Chest needs your support. Every year during the month of March, Carolina's only Charity Drive asks for our help in supporting Campus Chest. So asking each student to give a dollar, they are not asking for a dollar for that week of solicitations but a dollar for the entire year. Being a student at this University encompasses a great deal more than going to classes. Each one of us has a responsibility to maintain the standards of Carolina. One of these responsibilities is a mature and generous attitude toward those charities which Campus Chest supports.

Support your campus Chest and show that, "We do care."

Support Urged For Hazard

To the Editors,

Just three hundred miles from here in Hazard, Ky. striking coal miners are fighting for a bare existence. Their strike, now in its seventh month, is hardly a strike for excessive unearned wages. Basically it is a result of a continual decline in employment due to automation. In the last twenty years the number of miners has declined by fifty thousand, but since job prospects elsewhere have been anything but bright, most of the unemployed have not moved out.

Largely due to this "permanent" unemployment, eastern Kentucky has become one of the poorest sections of the country. Housing conditions are among the worst. Despite a municipal housing program, most miners live in unpainted shacks without proper sanitation facilities and drinkable water. Children cannot attend schools because they have no shoes or warm clothes. Many families are suffering from malnutrition, some even dying as a result.

WHY?

One answer is found in the actions of the coal operators. Instead of trying to alleviate the already depressed conditions of the miners, the operators broke union contracts by leasing mines to middlemen — foremen, managers, etc. — who proceeded to undercut union wages. The middlemen rehired miners at non-union rates as low as $16 a week, thereby gaining in some cases a two month profit of $60,000. In addition they stopped paying the 40c per ton royalty into the United Mine Workers Fund, which had gone to pay pensions and cover costs of the union hospitals.

Another reason for the present miners' plight lies with the UMW leadership. The union leadership has gradually isolated itself from the miners through the years. At present local officials are appointed from above instead of being elected by the rank and file! The leaders, when approached by the rank and file, in effect shrugged their shoulders and said that nothing could be done. In such a situation the miners felt as Berman Gibson when he said, "If you are going to starve and mine coal, why don't you starve and stay out"

A strike was directed against all those mines not paying union scale wages. Strike committees were established in each county and Berman Gibson was elected as leader. The coal fields in these seven counties were practically paralyzed until the state police escorted scabs into the mines. They were brought in truck loads from nearby areas, many of them being young boys under the required age limit.

The operators organized a vigilante group called the "Perry County Committee for Law and Order" to intimidate the strikers. Picketers have been fired upon; homes and automobiles have been dynamited.

So far no government, local, state, or national, has come to the aid of the miners. In fact, the miners say state and local officials are against them and that federal officials seem unconcerned. Yet the miners remain united and determined. Racial barriers have been broken, and interracial cooperation unheard of anywhere in the South has been achieved. Through this unity they will achieve the following five basic demands:

—$24.25 a day (the union rate) at all mines.

—Election of local UMW officers by the union members instead of their appointment by higher union officials.

'Solution' To Run-Off Races

To the Editors,

In Sunday's editorial you complain of the extra expense and effort required of candidates for the editor's race in the event of a run-off. This extra expense is quite unnecessary, and may be avoided by asking voters to list all candidates running for office in order of preference.

Suppose there are four candidates, A, B, C, D. On the first count only first preference votes are considered. If one candidate does not have an absolute majority, the one with the smallest number of first-preference votes — say D, is eliminated. On all ballots with D named as first preference, D's name is crossed out and the next name on the list becomes that voter's new first preference. The other ballots remain unchanged, and a new count of first preference votes is taken. If there is still no candidate with an absolute majority, another candidate is eliminated, and the process is continued until one candidate gets an absolute majority.

The effect of this procedure is equivalent to that of holding one or more run-offs, and it may be used regardless of the number of candidates. The difference between this and existing method is merely that the voter decides in advance how he would vote in a run-off, if his favorite candidate were to be eliminated.

Betrayal . . . Disastrous . . .

Two Views of 'Kill A Mockingbird'

Negro Not Mockingbird

The Village Voice

"TO KILL A MOCKINGBIRD" relates the Cult of Childhood to the Negro Problem with disastrous results. Before the intellectual confusion of the project is considered, it should be noted that this is not much of a movie even by purely formal standards. Horton Foote's script is a fuzzy digest of Harper Lee's Pulitizer Prize best-seller, while Robert Mulligan's direction is slavishly faithful to the elliptical style of Miss Lee's action sequences. For example, Miss Lee describes the shadow of a spooky neighbor creeping up on a young boy. So Mulligan compliantly photographs the shadow of a spooky neighbor creeping up on a young boy. What could be more cinematic? Unfortunately, a director who manipulates a shadow without delivering its substance is only cheating his audience. Mulligan flubs the violent climax by the same misapplication of a literary effect to the cinema. A reader can always catch up on a mystifying action a page or two later, but a moviegoer wants to see what is happening while it is happening. All the talk in the world afterward cannot redeem a lost image.

Just Too Easy

What fools too many critics about a project like this is the trick of the child's point of view. The camera drops a foot, then darts and swoops with the child's erratic movements. The world opens up, and everything looks more profound and inventive. It is just too easy for a bad director to look good when the adult world can be reduced to homespun parables like: "Mockingbirds don't do one thing but make music for us to enjoy. They don't eat up people's gardens, don't nest in corncribs, they don't do one thing but sing their hearts out for us. That's why it's a sin to kill a mockingbird."

The movie begins innocently enough, trailing after a little girl who is even more adorable than the moppet in "Sundays and Cybele," another overrated trick film. The setting is Maycomb, Alabama, in the early '30s. The novel teems with relatives, neighbors, and assorted gargoyles arranged in an intricate network of political and social alliances, but the movie Maycomb comes out looking deserted and underpopulated, and lacking spatial unity besides. When Gregory Peck is assigned to defend a Negro sharecropper falsely accused of raping a white woman, Peck's adorable children help deter the obligatory lynch mob and then watch the courtroom spectacle from the balcony segregated for Negroes. (I daresay the Maycomb courtroom is still segregated thirty years later, and so much for Miss Lee's cleverly masked argument for gradualism.)

Liberal Construct

As usual, the Negro is less a rounded character than a Liberal construct, a projection of the moral superiority Negroes supposedly attain through their suffering and degradation. He is not only obviously innocent of the charge, and infinitely nobler than his white-trash accusers, father and daughter; he is also incredibly pure of heart. Brock Peters tries hard to break through the layers of moral whitewash, but he is finally smothered by Peck's unctuous nobility. When the Negro is convicted on evidence of a flimsiness sufficient to acquit Trotsky in a Stalinist court, Peck offers the glowing hope of an appeal. (This is in the days of the Nine-Old-Men Court.) When the Negro is shot (off-screen) for attempting to escape, Peck is so upset that, by some inverted logic understood only by Liberal Southerners, he deplores the Negro's unwarranted impetuosity. Here the movie tries to placate Dixie audiences by departing from the sacred text of the novel to omit a reference to fourteen bullets fired into the escapee's body. It never seems to occur to Miss Lee, Mr. Foote, or Mr. Mulligan, as it occurred to someone sitting behind me, that the Negro's reported escape is as malodorous as his unjust conviction. Aside from doubting the word of the local constabulary on a matter concerning the rape of white womanhood, the disinterested spectator is aesthetically justified in questioning the truth of something not shown on the screen.

Squaring Accounts

The plot takes a retributive turn of sorts with the redneck who started all the fuss getting his just deserts while attempting to murder Peck's children. The sheriff decides to shelter the redneck's murderer so that the dead can bury the dead and all accounts can be squared.

This is a heart-warming resolution of the novel and the film. Yet somehow the moral arithmetic fails to come out even. One innocent Negro and one murderous redneck hardly cancel each other out. How neat and painless it is for the good people of Maycomb to find a bothersome victim in one grave and a convenient scapegoat in the other. When all is said and done, Southerners are People Like Us, some good and some bad. So what? No one who has read the last letters of the German troops trapped in Stalingrad can easily believe in a nation of monsters, but the millions of corpses are an objective fact. At some point, a social system is too evil and too unjust for personal ethics to carry any weight. Perhaps ics to carry any weight. Perhaps the Negro and the redneck are brothers under the skin, both victims of the same system. Perhaps they are the nucleus of a new political coalition. It is too late for the Negro to act as moral litmus paper for the White conscience. The Negro is not a mockingbird.

Fancied Social Message

By CLYDE WILSON

There are no doubt thousands of educated idiots in New York who really believe that there are white women in the South who go around seducing Negroes.

This sort of plot is harmful in so far as it perpetuates the consideration of palpable absurdities in dealing with serious matters and confirms prejudices in the minds of provincial Northerners.

The South has suffered from a great deal of unnecessary disparagement for no other reason than that its writers have written more honestly and poignantly than most of their contemporaries.

It is very easy for the human message in a work like "To Kill a Mockingbird" to get eclipsed by a real or fancied social message on the part of those who seek every excuse to condemn the South.

To see in "To Kill a Mockingbird" only a condemnation of the South's racial system is like reading Shakespeare only to learn that Elizabethan Englishmen were cruel and immoral.

Many Northern critics and "intellectuals" have read into recent Southern literature, especially Faulkner's novels, a support for their own shallow schemes about society.

As they see themselves as misfits and rebels on the American scene, so they see Faulkner and other Southern intellectuals as misfits and rebels on the Southern scene. They lack understanding.

Because recent Southern literature has presented a penetrating examination of the evils of Southern society such people have assumed that the writers shared their motives and assumptions about the South. They have neglected to realize how most Southern writers have remained intrinsically Southern even while illuminating all the black in what they saw in the South.

The difference is that while the Northern intellectuals sat around coffee shops in the big city and talked about "literature", William Faulkner was out on his Mississippi farm hunting, fishing, digging postholes, drinking whiskey and writing real literature about real people.

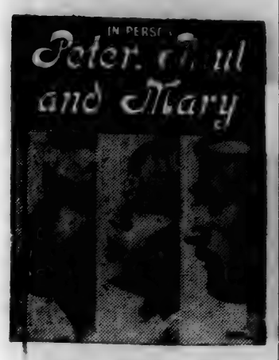
He wrote really simply because he was an integral part of and a sympathizer with the people he wrote about. His life and theirs made an organic whole. His understanding of humanity was too great to hold the shallow contempt of the typical Northern intellectual.

Faulkner achieved lasting greatness as a writer simply because he did not repudiate his Southern heritage, as many Northern intellectuals have repudiated their American heritage and made themselves Norman Mailers and Jack Kerouacs.

None of these men could have picked William Faulkner out from the other redneck farmers on the courthouse square at Oxford, if that hadn't seen his picture.

Strange it is that the man in Oxford, Mississippi was writing books which moved the world while all the Harvard Ph. D's could do was write books about him and think up theories about what he wrote.

Before anyone heaps contumely on the South for the revelations set forth in works like to "Kill a Mockingbird" let him reflect that the Southerner lacks similar ammunition only because no Northern writer has written as honestly, humanly, and skillfully about his own home folks.



WFB Plugs His New Book

For the benefit of those members of the community who did not hear my address on the Meaning of the American Right Wing in December, and failed to read it in Playboy Magazine (January issue), I take pleasure in calling attention to its inclusion as a chapter in my new book, Rumbles Left and Right (Putnam's, $4.95), available, presumably, at your local bookstore, in early April.

ATO Crowned Campus' Best

ATO, led by all-campus basketball candidate Roger Penland, jumped off to a quick lead and fought its way to a 39-33 victory over Teague for the 1962-63 All-Campus championship Wednesday night.

ATO took a 19-7 lead in the first half, but was outscored 26-20 in the second period as Teague made its challenge. Connecting on eight of 24 shots from the floor and 10 of 13 from the free throw line in the last half it looked for a while as if the dorm men could pull it out.

The smooth floor play of Penland and his accuracy from the ATO charity line was the difference in the ball game, however. He could manage only two of seven shots from the floor but his nine foul shots in 11 attempts, most of them coming in the second half, kept ATO in the lead. His 13 points were high for the winners.

Teague's all-campus candidate Junior Edge was the game's high scorer. He connected on five of 15 from the floor and five of six from the foul line for 15 points. Charlie Price added 10 for the losers.

ATO presented a well-rounded attack as Bob Moore and Sam Simpson connected for 10 and seven points apiece.

Overall ATO enjoyed a better evening from the floor than Teague. The fraternity representatives hit on a total of 10 of 28 shots for 36 per cent. Teague managed only a 15 per cent average in the first half but finished strong for a 27 percent total.

Because ATO captured the fraternity blue and white titles, the white team politely defaulted to the blues thus eliminating an all fraternity championship game.

Teague had to whip Winston, the dorm white champs, to earn the right to advance to the finals. In that game they displayed an awesome offensive punch that was missing somewhat in the ATO contest.

Edge, Tommy Ward and John Slack accounted for 42 points between them with Edge hitting on 73 per cent from the floor. Overall Teague hit an amazing 57 per cent from the floor.

Duke Wake First Test For Linksmen

The three strong arms of Atlantic Coast Conference golfdom will swing away this afternoon in the opening league match of the spring.

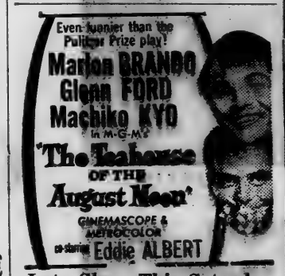
UNC's Tar Heels will travel to Winston-Salem for a three-way stroke-play meet with Duke and Wake Forest. The three teams should be the class of the conference this year.

Duke finished first in the ACC and third in the NCAA finals last year. Wake Forest finished third in the ACC and eighth in the NCAA. North Carolina finished second in the league and 11th in the nation.

With two reigning state amateur champions heading the squad, the Demon Deacon team could be the best Wake has ever had. The champs are junior Ken Folkes and sophomore Jay Sigel. Folkes captured the North Carolina title at Tanglewood last summer while Sigel won the Pennsylvania crown.

Folkes shared the ACC individual championship with Duke's returning John Abernethy. Sigel, ineligible to play for the Deacons last season after transferring from Houston, is a former National Jaycee Junior Champion. He also was runnerup for the 1961 USGA Junior Championship.

North Carolina, coached by Ed Kenney, will be missing the services of last year's senior All-American Pete Green. Three sophomores — Tommy Arnold, Les Fleisher and Skip Tucker — should keep the Tar Heels in the thick of the ACC title fight.



Abe Andes, who posted an 11-3 dual match record last year, heads the list of five junior lettermen. The others are Mike Dore, Jerry Ayers, Harvey Hill and George Reams.

In addition to Abernethy, Duke's Dumpy Hagler has three lettermen — seniors George Smith, Rich Bassett and Jack Saalfield.

Other lettermen on the Wake Forest squad are Bob Edgerton, Eddie Honeycutt and Dennis Milne. Honeycutt is the lone senior on Coach Jesse Haddock's team.

WESLEY PLAYERS

The Duke Wesley Players are presenting Nigel Dennis's "Cards of Identity" tonight and Saturday night at 8. The play will be given at the Methodist Student Center on Oregon St. off Myrtle Ave. in Durham. Tickets are $1.

'Great Season'-Skakle

By LOUIS LEGUM

"We expect a great season. With the material and depth we have, who wouldn't?"

These words might come from the heads of the Green Bay Packers or the New York Yankees, but they don't. Instead, these words are the sincere conviction of Coach Don Skakle about his tennis team. Skakle, not noted for his brashness, obviously has something to talk about, and a quick check of the record bears this out.

From a 1962 squad that was one of the best in the nation every player has returned except for one reserve. These include Skakle's "Big Five": George Sokol, who won the ACC singles crown; Ted Hoehn and Bitsy Harrison, who combined for the ACC doubles crown; and powerful Keith Stoneman and Charlie Shaffer.

Other members who saw a lot of action last season were Stan Cocke, Kirby Jones, George Zimmerman, and Sam Applegate, who comprise the "pit crew."

But for the now-famous Miami match the '62 Tar Heels turned in a perfect record. Add three very talented sophomores: O. H. Parrish, Pete Myers, and Joe Polin to that same team, and it would be hard to predict how far Carolina could go.

Skakle seems aware of his team's potential — which is to say, it's unlimited.

"I have four goals for my boys this year. We want to finish undefeated in regular season's play over powers like Miami, Michigan, Harvard, Rollins, and Clemson. Then we would like to win the ACC tournament, go on to take the Easterns, and finally, and very hopefully, win the National Championship."

This is a big order for anybody, but Carolina may be able to do it. UNC, in its depth, may possibly be as good as any other tennis team in the entire nation. It's been quite a while since any Tar Heel team could justifiably make such a claim.

A major factor in Carolina's future success, Skakle hopes, may be the innovation of intra-squad challenge matches. They begin this afternoon at two on the courts with the top twelve players going against each other. The feature matches will be Sokol-Hoehn, Harrison-Stoneman, Shaffer-Myers and Parrish-Polin.

Carnival Today Completes Campus Chest Solicitations

The Campus Chest Carnival, promising everything from bird cage casino to a case of beer, will begin today at 1:30 p.m. on the Intramural Field.

Booths and rides will highlight the affair. Nearly 50 booths, sponsored by various campus organizations, will offer such things as sponge throws, greased-pig races and penny tosses. Five trophies from T. L. Kemp's will be awarded to the best booths, and points for the highest percentage of pledge-participation will be given to individual fraternities for this Greek Week competition.

The swing, tilt-a-whirl, ferris wheel, paratrooper and octupus rides will begin operating as soon as people get on the field.

Among the many attractions will be the gift certificates given by Town and Campus for the lucky number on the back of the Campus Chest buttons, and the concession stands offerings of popcorn, peanuts, candy, cokes, ice cream and cotton candy.

All proceeds will go to the Campus Chest.

So far the Campus Chest fund has collected $2,008 in solicitations, $1,100 of which was handed in Friday, according to Mac Boxley, solicitations chairman. The auction netted $650 and the shoeshine $100.

Attorney General's staff for two years, until 1951, and has since been a practicing attorney in Raleigh. Currently in his third term as State Senator, Jordan has held numerous postions in the state government and the Democratic Party.

"Senator Jordan's speech could mark the beginning of open discussions of the issues which are of importance now and will continue to be so through the 1964 campaign, UNC-YDC president George Korndigay said yesterday.

GLOBE-CIRCLING FOLKSINGER Josh White will appear March 29 in Memorial Hall in a concert sponsored by Phi Mu Alpha, national music fraternity. Dormitory Spotlight: Grimes

After a slow first semester Grimes dormitory has begun to participate in campus activities.

Under the leadership of President Fred Harwell and Intramural Manager Jerry Rutledge, Grimes is entering soccer and softball teams in the all-campus competition. The dorm is also planning a series of faculty discussions and several parties.

Since no adequate provisions were made by the IDC for adequate leadership in this all-freshman dorm, residents had little awareness of what the dormitory program could be like. It was not until December that the residents (in the first all-dorm effort) deposed their first "caretaker" president and elected a full slate of officers.

Dormitory leaders and advisers say the major problem with a freshman dorm is the lack of continuity and attachment to the University community. Freshmen take too many of the same courses and are at similar stages of intellectual development with the result that the richness and diversity of University life remains abstract. The isolation of the first semester appears to be aggravated by dormitory segregation.

Kennedy Defers Fathers Through Executive Order

PALM BEACH, Fla. (UPI)—President Kennedy, bound for an important meeting of Central American presidents in Costa Rica, Friday ordered the Selective Service deferment of all fathers except doctors, dentists and veterinarians.

Draft-age registrants with children and previously classed as 1-A will, under an executive order signed by the President, be placed in class 3-A. Thus the President provided for the deferment, but not the exemption of fathers. Few fathers have been drafted in recent years, but many of them were eligible for classification in 1-A. The President's order Friday made formal what had been a general practice with many Selective Service boards.

The President signed the Selective Service order shortly before he took off from Washington at noon Friday. The chief executive stopped off for two days of rest in Palm Beach before continuing on to San ose, Costa Rica, early Monday when he will join the presidents of five Central American republics and Panama for talks about hemispheric economic improvement.

Press Secretary Pierre Salinger referred inquiries about the draft order to Selective Service headquarters in Washington. Salinger said, however, that generally it meant that chances of a father being drafted had been lessened considerably by the order.

The President, who flies back to the United States Wednesday night and reports on his visit at a televised news conference the following afternoon, will be joined at San Jose by Secretary of State Dean Rusk and key Democrats and Republicans from the House and Senate Foreign Affairs committees.

Kennedy is expected to assure the six small countries of strong U.S. support for Central American economic integration. The "little summit" gathering will attempt to speed progress in coordinating the area's economic programs.

It will mark Kennedy's third trip to Latin America. He went to Venezuela and Colombia on one trip last year and made another journey to Mexico. Both involved U.S. interest in the Alliance for Progress program.

Mrs. Kennedy, who made such a hit on the trips to Venezuela, Colombia and Mexico, will not go to Costa Rica.

Volunteers Held Not Sufficient For Top Strength

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Senate approved by voice vote Friday a four-year extension of the military draft law, the first major bill of the present session to be sent to the White House.

The Senate action followed a brief speech by Sen. Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., influential chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, who said continuation of the law was of "vital necessity to our defense posture."

Russell said the Defense Department cannot rely on voluntary enlistments to keep the armed forces up to strength and no one has proposed a "fair and satisfactory" substitute for the draft.

The bill, which ran into minor opposition in the House by some who favored a two-year extension rather than four years was passed almost routinely by the Senate in contrast to the early days of the program when it was a matter of major debate.

The measure would extend the draft to July 1, 1967. It makes qualified males between the ages of 18 and 26 years liable to two years of military service.

The Army expects to draft about 76,000 men this year. The law is also considered a stimulus to enlistments in the army and the other services.

The bill also would:

—Suspend for another four years the ceilings on the size of the armed services. The restrictions have been dropped regularly since 1950, the year the Korean War began.

—Extend for four years the government's authority to draft physicians and dentists. The Pentagon expects to call 1,300 doctors in the fiscal year beginning July 1, but may reduce this quota if enough physicians volunteer.

—Extend authority to increase the quarters allowances of enlisted men with dependents in the lower pay grades who allot a portion of their own pay.

Morse, en route to Costa Rica with the President, got Sen. Joseph S. Clark, D-Pa., to offer a statement asserting that Morse would have voted with "real regret" against the four year extension because there was no opportunity to vote on a two-year bill.

SL Urges Germans For Full Campus

Student Legislature Thursday night voted its approval of a resolution which states that the Germans Club should transform itself into an all-campus organization. An amendment, commending all those involved in efforts to adopt the Germans Club into an all-campus entertainment agency, was also included in the resolution.

Action on a bill to appropriate $723.50 to the International Students' Board for the payment of expenses of a Panamanian student here, starting next fall, was postponed.

A controversial amendment, stating that the Germans Club should transform itself into an all-campus group "when adequate facilities become available," was defeated by a 20-17 vote.

The resolution, as okayed by SL, says that Germans Club should act as a coordinating organization for "Big" weekends, concerts by nationally known performers and any other event which the group could effectively sponsor. It also states that conditions for membership in the Germans Club "should not be based upon any socially selective system but instead upon the ability to pay admission to the concerts.

The following representatives were absent from Thursday's session: Bill Bowerman (UP, TM 4); Roy Kirk (UP, TM 3); Fred Kadin (SP, DM 3); Bill Waumett (SP, TM 4); Harry DeLung (UP, TM 4); David Henry (UP, TM 3); and Gordon Shapiro (UP, TM 3).

Friday Performs Passive Role In Faculty Varieties

Flashing on the video screen will be well-known TV-show characters, such as Paladin, Marshall Matt Dillon, Drs. Kildare and Ben Casey, and a host of others.

Student script writers will picture the TV personalities as prominent faculty members and administrators in the University.

Wesley Players Give Dennis Play At Duke Tonight

The Wesley Players are presenting Nigel Dennis' "Cards of Identity" at the Duke Methodist Student Center in Durham this week. The play is a bitter laugh-filled account of members of the Identity Club—an organization devoted to the principle that none of us knows who he is.

Dennis has received less attention in this country than the angry young John Osborne and the angry young Kingsley Amis.

Like many of the now-not-so-young "angries," Dennis spent some time in the United States before returning to England to continue his work.

"Cards of Identity" was first published as a novel and received enthusiastic praise from W. H. Auden and other noted critics. The author's dramatic adaptation achieved a remarkable reproduction of his irreverent, meaningful book.

A large and exceptionally talented cast has been assembled under the direction of Richard Dozier, featuring Lola Powers Kramer and Carolina Playmaker Bob Malone, who just appeared in the Rhinoceros.

Remaining performances are scheduled for this afternoon at five o'clock and tonight at eight o'clock. Tickets are one dollar each and may be obtained at the door. The Methodist Student Center is located on Oregon Ave., off Myrtle Dr. in Durham.

The Campus Chest: An Occasion Of Cooperation

As the Campus Chest drive comes to a conclusion this afternoon with the Carnival, we would join in the praise of those students whose efforts have been concentrated on the collection of funds for worthy charities. No doubt, there have been some classes cut, some lessons untouched, and some sleep lost, as the usual small group of conscientious students has endeavored to fulfill its goal of some $6,000.

Surely, whether the goal is reached or not (and as this column goes to press, it looks as if it will be surpassed), we must recognize that a great deal of effort and cooperation has been extended in an attempt to demonstrate that today's student is not the carefree, self-indulgent parasite who is generally expected to waste his parents' monetary gifts.

If the hoped-for $6,000 is collected, it should be quite a feather in the collective cap of the Campus Chest Committee. In light of the fact that a similar drive at Duke recently netted but $700 (approximately 21 cents per student), the collection of $6,000 from this student body should be especially heartening and, if we might say so, cause for more than a little embarrassment to our friendly, neighborhood institution.

And yet, with all due praise to the members of the Campus Chest Committee and the unselfish contributions of the student body, we should not overlook the impressive donations of various Chapel Hill merchants. Several stores gave quite valuable items to be sold at the auction, and many of those same stores also donated numerous other items for use as prizes in today's carnival.

Indeed, the success of this year's drive would be an occasion of community cooperation which should make Chapel Hill justly proud of its school-town integration. (CW)

Attention, Candidates

The Tar Heel hopes to be able to provide better, more full coverage of this spring's elections, by assigning two of its staff reporters, full-time, to covering speeches and general campaign activity. In addition to news coverage, the DTH will ask each of the campus candidates to submit a 400-word statement on specified days — these statements should present different aspects of their platforms.

The following guidelines have been set for these statements (if it says statements should be in by 3 p.m. Tuesday, we mean 3 p.m. Tuesday. If not turned in by this time, they cannot be run).

Presidential candidates: 4 statements, to run Thurs., March 21; Tues., March 26; Thurs., March 28; and Tuesday, April 2. Statements for Tuesday are due at 3 p.m. Monday; those for Thursday at 5 p.m. Tuesday.

Vice-Presidential candidates: 3 statements, to run Sat., March 23; Wed., March 27 and Sat., March 30 —due at 3 p.m. the day before publication.

Secretary and Treasurer candidates; one statement, both to run Friday, March 29.

DTH Editor candidates: 4 statements, to run Thurs., March 21; Sun., March 24; Thurs., March 27; and Tues., April 2. Statements for Thursday must be turned in by 5 p.m. Tuesday.

WAA and CAA candidates: one statement, both to run Sun., March 31.

NSA Congress candidates: 3 statements, to run on the editorial page Wed., March 20; Friday March 22; and Friday, March 29. These must be approximately 300-350 words.

Political Paranoia

There seems to be some frenzied concern within the ranks of the Student Party about a supposed Daily Tar Heel bias in favor of the University Party. We have been scolded by irate alumni, attacked by clever letters, and just generally annoyed by excited SP members who charge: 'editorializing on the front page."

We would like to point out to these troubled souls that there has been no conscious or intended favoritism shown to either of the political parties within the news pages of this paper.

If it has seemed that the University Party is mentioned frequently, it might be that the University Party has done, and continues to do, things which merit DTH coverage.

If it has seemed that stories about the University Party are more interesting, it might be that UP actions are more interesting.

If it has seemed that the Student Party has suffered from poor, uninspired coverage, it might be that the SP has been a poor, uninspiring bit of news matter.

* * *

In short, all we intend to make clear is the understanding that if and when we choose to editorialize about the SP or UP, we will endeavor to do so on the editorial page, and that if and when the SP feels slighted by anything that appears on page one of this paper, they might raise their solemn lament, but let it be the wail of a faltering political machine and not the accusation of a petty, political paranoiac. Red China Today

Problems Of A Strong Nation In Isolation

Jacques Jacquet-Francillon
The NEW REPUBLIC

When I arrived in Peking in the fall of 1958, at the height of the delusions of grandeur entertained by the promoters of the "Great Leap," I was struck by the reactions of individual Russians present in the Chinese capital (diplomats, journalists, technicians): reaction of alarm, almost of panic. Today I am convinced that these reactions accurately reflected the state of mind of Russian officialdom when, from their offices in the Kremlin, they learned that China was suddenly turning a deaf ear to Soviet teachings and was now proclaiming to the world that henceforth, thanks to its gigantic potential for human investment and to the "enlightened thinking" of Mao-Tse-tung, it proposed to leap over and past all the normal stages of development thus leading the way toward the higher state of Communist society. The first caustic criticism of the Chinese Communists made publicly by Mr. Khrushchev dates from the period. Without any fanfare, but with a persistence which has been relentless since that time, Khrushchev promptly set about translating his words into strong action.

For close onto four years now, neither the high points nor the low points of Khrushchev's "peaceful coexistence" policies, nor the successes of bright skies and storm-winds which has alternately shone and blown, ideologically speaking, on the Sino-Soviet quarrel, nor even the temporary relaxation of the Chinese Party's internal "line" (paradoxically even more "de-Stalinized" than that of the Soviet Party as a result of the circumstances prevailing in China)— nothing, in short, has altered the Soviet Union's problems of underdevelopment.

Thus, at the beginning of 1963, the former Middle Kingdom appears to be more isolated than ever before during its three thousand year history. The China of Mao Tse-tung has been thrown on its own, abandoned to its misery as well as to its sense of great mission; to its traditional wisdom as well as to its excesses. This fact is the key to the present behavior of the Communist leaders in Peking.

The purely ideological aspects of the differences which are creating an ever widening and more obvious gulf between Moscow and Peking are by now well known in the West. The Asiatic world, on the other hand, has shown little enthusiasm for intellectual jousting. To most Asians the external ideological aspect of Moscow-Peking relations is less important than political and economic conflicts of interests. Just as diplomatic observers in Asia like to believe that Japanese foreign policy is that dictated by the needs of Japanese foreign trade, so they assume that the ideological position of the Chinese Communists is imposed on them by their terrible problems of survival.

"No true Marxist-Leninist worthy of the name has ever been paralyzed by fear of nuclear weapons in the hands of imperialists, nor has he ever for that reason abandoned his fight against imperialism and its lackeys . . ." So reads the editorial blast published last December 15 by the PEOPLE'S DAILY in Peking, and broadcast the same day in over thirty different languages and dialects.

It has often been said that China alone on our planet could survive the horrors of an atomic war without disappearing as a functioning national entity. This may be true; nevertheless, it is difficult to see how, under present conditions, the outbreak of general atomic war could benefit a China whose population is entirely occupied with the struggle against starvation, whose industry is barely functioning, and which, although it boasts the largest land army in the world, numerically speaking, will for many years to come still be lacking in nuclear power of adequate retaliatory strength. Of course it is always possible that the delusions of grandeur occasionally exhibited by China's leaders might lure them into a policy of "let the worst come." At present, however, their game seems more realistic and more subtle.

Spirit of Bandung

The China of 1953-57, which was benefiting by the full flow of Soviet technical assistance and economic aid, spoke an entirely different language from the China of 1963. In those days it was the apostle of the "Spirit of Bandung," and preached the "five principles of coexistence." How remote this seems from the harsher realities of today! 1959 was marked by the first repatriations of Soviet "experts" working in China. All who still remained departed en masse in August of 1960.At certain works as the colossal Sannen Narrows Dam on the Yellow River, the Russian technicians departed and took with them the plans for carrying out the project they were directing, a fact which has been verified by extremelast year when the Soviet Union dely reliable sources. 1960 was also the livered industrial products in the form of direct aid to its Chinese ally in any appreciable quantities. Russian exports to China, which has risen to 859.1 million New Rubles in 1959, fell to 735.4 million in 1960 and dropped to a mere 330.6 million in 1961 (in other words, a drop of 50 percent in one year). Moscow's imports from China dropped from 900.3 million NR in 1959 to 763.3 million in 1960, and to 469.2 million in 1961. The excess of China's exports over its imports (as shown by the above figures) which emerge as the total volume of Sino-Soviet trade drops, in no way indicates an advantage for Peking. Very much to the contrary, these figures are proof that, despite the seriousness of the food crisis and the sad plight of Chinese light industry, Moscow has continued to demand a progressive reimbursement of past aid in the form of deliveries of farm products and finished goods (mainly textiles). In its present propaganda campaign designed for domestic consumption, the Chinese CP also claims—and this is confirmed by various and specific spices of information reaching Hong Kong—that the Russians now seek not only to obtain reimbursement for past economic aid, but also the repayment of assistance supplied in the name of military aid during the Korean War. Emerging from a dramatic three-year crisis which has forced it to mobilize all its vital forces and look toward an essential new start in its agriculture, China is in no condition to push even a modest industry recovery without substantial foreign aid. Moscow has progressively withdrawn this aid from China, and is now refusing it point blank.

Mr. Khrushchev's adamant and hostile attitude can be attributed to several complex motives:

—to a fear which was made more acute by the crisis of China's "great leap forward." As I stated before, I witnessed the birth of this fear in 1958 among the ranks of the then numerous Russian colony in China. I encountered it anew in 1961, three years later, as strong as before, among the Soviet officials I met along the 8,000-kilometer length of the Russo-Chinese border in Eastern Siberia;

—to the discouragement he felt when Red China squandered the fruits of five years of extremely expensive economic aid, despite repeated warnings;

—to the danger of Chinese competition in the countries of the uncommitted world, particularly in Africa and Latin America.

—to the rapidity with which the Chinese chief took over as their own certain former frontier claims of the old China. The reasoning which Peking advanced to contest the validity of the McMahon Line could be equally well applied to the boundaries between Manchuria and the Far Eastern Soviet provinces (Region of Amur, Territory of Khabarovak, Primorje) which were unilaterally imposed in 1958 in the name of the Czar of all the Russias on the representatives of the then decadent Celestial Kingdom, through the Treaty of Aigun. Moreover, Peking still considers the territory of the People's Republic of Mongolia—a direct satellite of the USSR—as an integral part of China. The Chinese Region (so-called autonomous) of Inner Mongolia has for the past several years been the focus of intensive propaganda activity, especially the glorification of Genghis Khan, designed to arouse Pan-Mongolism.

The Golden Age of Chinese Communism—in other words the period when Moscow gave unstinting material aid to Peking—corresponded to a period of high international tension. The Khrushchevian era of "peaceful coexistence," on the other hand, has been marked by a policy of abandoning China to her own difficulties. There is thus a certain logic in the viewpoint, based on experience over the past years, that a return to a protracted climate of international tension might in the long run operate to China's advantage.

These are the considerations on the basis of which many Asians specializing in Chinese affairs explain, at least in part, the sudden belligerence of Peking in launching the Himalayan conflict at the end of October. They believe that during the months to come other moves may be expected from China aimed at inflaming the situation in Southeast Aisa. There must be a reason, these observers point out, why work on a strategic highway link Laos with Yunnan is at present being stepped up to a forced-labor pace. Had aerial surveillance of the area been maintained, it would have revealed that this work is even being carried on at night, by torchlight. And surely there is some reason why, since the end of September, the Chinese Communist banks have been systematically raffling all the Vietnamese piastres available in Hong Kong.

Hardening Policy Lines

Finally, the decisions approved last December by the Central Committee of the North Korean Labor (i.e. Communist) Party have put the West on the alert. This Supreme Council, which met in secret sessions through December 18, appears to have concerned itself primarily with military and security problems. The official communique, which was extensively publicised by the Peking press and radio, states that ". . . the reinforcement of our defensive capacity must be given an absolute priority, even if this means a delay in the development of the national economy." According to certain specialists in Asiatic military problems, decisions of this sort presage a move to put North Korea on a wartime footing. This has aroused special concern in Japan.

Whatever the merit of these pessimistic prognoses, one point remains undisputed: Japan has been overcommitted to Washington for so many years that Japanese aid to China is out of the question. Only the Soviet Union can help, and there has not been the slightest change in Mr. Khrushchev's resolutely negative attitude in the matter of aid, despite certain Chinese ideological concessions in mid-1962.

As a result, China's leaders have no other alternative than to harden their present position. The only feasible play, in their eyes, is to try and prove the dangers of a "peaceful coexistence" policy and bring about a replacement of the Khrushchev team by persons more favorable to their cause. Their attempts over the past several months have, however, so far boomeranged (the reaction of the European Parties proves this), sevring only to intensify China's isolation.

Homosexuality: Crime Or Sickness?

An article lately reprinted from the University of Michigan—written by a student, and not by a doctor or psychiatrist—has dealt with the problem of sexual inversion in a sensitive, restrained, intelligent fashion. The writer was probably a psychology major or a pre-med., but a brave boy in any case. This is still such a compromising topic that most fellows prefer not to get involved in any public discussion of it. But homosexuality must be frankly and seriously dealt with, and I think we can treat the so afflicted with sympathy and understanding without making their practice respectable.

I am not a psychologist, but I have studied the case of Oscar Wilde enough to know the prevailing psychiatric view of this abnormality. Most investigators see it as a form of arrested development, usually coming at the start of adolescence when normal heterosexual tendencies theoretically emerge. Lord Alfred Douglas, in his last book, wrote that in Wilde's time the vice was considered far worse than murder; the most tolerant attitude held it to be "a devilish form of insanity" which should not be mentioned without opening all the windows in the five-mile radius. Sir John Bridge, when Wilde was committed for trial, refused bail on the grounds that there was "no worse crime" than the one for which the dramatist was arrainged. This is so absurd that that it scarcely merits comment, but the magistrate was speaking for virtually all of British society at that time. Wilde served the maximum sentence and died in exile. Nowadays Britain has a guilty conscience about him, but the law under which he was prosecuted and sent to prison has never yet been repealed.

I have all the normal distaste for homosexuality, if it still is normal, which contemporary moviegoers and playgoers may be tempted to doubt. The Victorian attitude has largely disappeared, though in some quarters it still persists, even among educated people. But the views of Sir John Bridge are primarily confined nowadays to white-haired old men, and indeed one has cause to fear that the opposite extreme has taken root among young men on college campuses. An exaggerated spirit of tolerance in the university-age groups probably makes us more vlunerable to abnormal propositions, if only because it increases the likelihood of such advances being made. This is also, by the way, the most popular tactic of character assassination in United States, and almost every controversial politician is subjected to a whispering campaign against his sexual morals.

It has been noted of Wilde that he was proud of his inverted sex instinct and fond of crediting the same propensities to Shakespeare, though the evidence for this view is practically nil. And heaven forbid that anyone should be encouraged to feel proud of such tendencies. But, while we condemn the practice and try to rehabilitate those who are addicted to it, we should make every effort to abrogate the laws which, in North Carolina and elsewhere, still impose criminal penalities for "the bestial crime against nature;" i.e., the private homosexual behavior of adults. Such a cruel, hypocritical, and self-defeating statute can scarcely be imagined. If we continue to prosecute people, torture and harass them for their personal problems, we stand forth as being equally sick and perverted in our own way—and perhaps the greater sinners.

UNC Grad Now Success As Non-Beatnik Sculptor

Notable works of sculpture, formed by the artistic hands of a young man who is not a rebel nor a beatnik, are meeting the public eye in some of New York's major museums.

Edward Higgins, who took his first course in art while a student at the University of North Carolina, is now a leading contemporary American sculptor whose works can be found in the collections of the governor of New York, in addition to museum and industrial collections.

Higgins is a UNC B.A. graduate of 1954. He has just had a piece of sculpture purchased by the Ford Foundation from New York's Whitney Museum of American Art's 1962 Annual Exhibition of Contemporary American Sculpture and Drawings. The Whitney Museum has elected to keep Higgins' sculpture for its permanent collection. The sculpture is entitled "Catafalque."

A native of Gaffney, S. C., Higgins entered UNC as a freshman in 1949 with no idea of becoming a sculptor. At that time, he was considering becoming an aeronautical engineer, an airplane pilot, or an advertising man.

Business Major

Higgins decided to get a degree in business. He actually enrolled in the UNC School of Business Administration, but decided to take a course in art to fulfill an elective and this course changed all his career plans. Higgins switched from the business school and decided to major in art.

According to UNC Associate Professor of art Robert Howard, who served as Higgins' advisor, Higgins' first experience in art was here in the UNC Art Department. Higgins took both painting and sculpture courses in the department and somewhere along the road, he decided to go into sculpture — which is also Prof. Howard's forte.

"My feeling is that he had this genius in him," said Howard. "Business just did not interest him," he said. "It is a tremendously difficult thing to commit yourself to art because of the economic insecurity involved," Prof. Howard added. The only thing left is the individual's faith and love in his own abilities."

Auto Welder

After leaving UNC, Higgins went to Atlanta, Ga., where he worked part time as a welder in an automobile plant. When not welding, Higgins worked on sculpting.

About two years later, Higgins went to New York where he worked part time in a table factory — still working with his hands like a true craftsman. He continued creating sculpture pieces and after about three years, when his art work began selling, he took up sculpting full time.

The native South Carolinian has also exhibited his works at locales including the Museum of Modern Art in New York; the Andrew Dickson White Museum of Art, Ithaca, N. Y.; Martha Jackson Gallery, N. Y.; Galerie Claude Bernard, Paris, France; Boston Fine Arts Festival; Carnegie International, Pittsburgh; Chicago Art Institute; Houston Contemporary Arts Museum; Institute of Design, Chicago, Ill.; The Dawn Gallery, Los Angeles, Calif.; the "Art Since 1950" exhibition at the Seattle World's Fair; and in "The Joseph Hirschhorn Collection," The Guggenheim Museum, N. Y.

Lincoln Center Sculpter

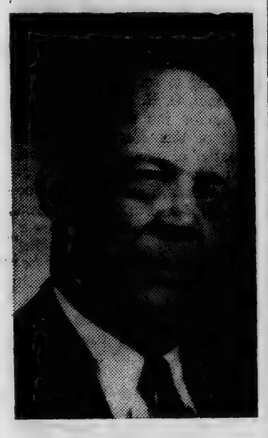
Among numerous citations and honors, Higgins received the 1961 Tiffany Award of $2,000. Collectors of his work include New York's Governor Rockefeller and Alfred H. Barr Jr., director of the Museum of Modern Art. His works are also in the permanent collections of The Museum of Modern Art, The Albright-Knox Gallery, Buffalo, N. Y., and the Chase Manhattan Bank, N. Y.

In the fall of 1962, Higgins received a commission to execute a sculpture screen for New York's Lincoln Center of the Performing Arts.

Higgins lives on a farm in Rigelsville, Pa. His studio is in the barn which is equipped with old plows, harrows, and other of old farm machinery which he has collected from junkyards for use in his sculpting. Higgins began constructing his sculptures in a combination of plaster and steel and is now using a combination of plastics and steel.

Higgins has been characterized by his friends in Chapel Hill as a quiet young man with intellectual interests who is not a rebel and not a beatnik. He likes literature and sports cars. He owns a Morgan sports car which, presumably, will not become a piece of sculpture if Higgins has anything to do with it.

Prof Writes About English Periodical



Kenan Professor of English Richmond P. Bond is writing two books at once on the 18th century English periodical, with emphasis on the "Spectator" and the "Tatler" of Addison and Steele.

Prof. Bond is on leave from his duties with the English faculty at UNC and will devote his time until June to the two volumes on the famous British newspapers and other periodicals.

He was selected by the governing board of the Newberry Library in Chicago to be a "resident fellow" during the Spring semester. The Newberry Library is one of the major private libraries in the United States and is famous for its important collections of books of the 18th century as well as books on Renaissance history and culture.

Professor Bond's published works on English periodicals have covered a span of more than 30 years. He has been a member of the English faculty here since 1929. Since 1960 he has worked in the British Museum in London and in the Bodelian Library at Oxford University, gathering material on Addison and Steele and others associated with them. In 1962 he lectured to the Bibliographical Society of London on "The Pirate and the Tatler," meaning the "pirate-printer," Henry Hills. He is also author of "New Letters to the Tatler and Spectator," publishd by the University of Texas Press (1959). One of his early published works was "English Burlesque Poetry," published by Harvard University Press in 1933.

During World War II, Prof. Bond served as an officer in the U. S. Navy, serving first in teaching and training assignments in Navy Schools at Harvard and at the University of Virginia and later aboard ships in the Pacific.

Auditions Held Here For Kentucky Outdoor Drama

Another outdoor drama production will be auditioning for actors, dancers and singers at the annual outdoor drama tryouts to be held March 23 at UNC's Forest Theatre.

William C. Trotman, director of UNC's new Outdoor Drama Institute, announced today that "Home is the Hunter," a new outdoor drama to be produced at Harrodsburg, Ky. this summer, will hold its auditions here along with auditions for North Carolina's three major outdoor drama productions: "The Lost Colony, "Unto These Hills," and "Horn in the West."

Director of the new production at Harrodsburg, Ky. will be Samuel Selden, former chairman of the UNC Department of Dramatic Art and for 12 years the director of Chapel Hillian Paul Green's outdoor drama "The Lost Colony."

Selden will be in Chapel Hill for the auditions and for sessions of the Outdoor Drama Conference. He is recognized as one of the leading authorities on outdoor drama in the United States.

Selden has also directed "The Stephen Foster Story," produced at Bardstown, Ky., "The Confederacy," which was produced at Virginia Beach, Va., "Wilderness Road," which was produced at Berea, Ky., and others.

Currently chairman of the Department of Theatre Arts at the University of California, Selden was recently awarded the 1962 American Educational Theatre Association's award of Merit in recognition of his significant contribution to the theatre and to the association.

Author of "Home is the Hunter" is Robert Emmett McDowell. The play is a saga of America's pioneer heritage and tells the story of the establishment of the pioneer settlement of Fort Harrod in 1774.

UNC Grad Manager

General manager of the new play will be John R. Caudle, a UNC graduate of the Dramatic Art Department, who until now has been the general manager of the "Stephen Foster Story."

The Outdoor Drama Conference and the annual tryouts will be drawing to Chapel Hill top outdoor drama authorities from both coasts. Topics receiving special attention at the conference include architecture and theatrical design; symphonic drama as a medium for the playwright; directing and staging the outdoor play; management and promotion of outdoor theatre; and the role of the actor in the open air.

Conference director Trotman is a veteran of the Carolina Playmakers and is a native of Winston-Salem. He is an actor, playwright, director, production manager, and stage and scenery designer. He recently served as resident designer for the Ford Foundation—backed Alley Theatre in Houston, Texas.

Glass To Speak On Genetics For McNair Lectures

Dr. Bentley Glass, one of the foremost investigators in the field of molecular genetics, will deliver the annual McNair Lcetures on Science and Religion at the University of North Carolina, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 26 and 27, at 8 p.m. in the Carroll Hall Auditorium.

The lectures are open to the public, it was announced by Nathan A. Womack, M.D., UNC professor and chairman of the Department of Surgery. Dr. Womack is chairman of the University's Committee on Established Lectures.

Dr. Glass, a professor of biology at the Johns Hopkins University, has made important contributions to the field of human genetics and in recent years has served on the Advisory Committee for Biology and Medicine of the Atomic Energy Commission and on the Committee for Genetic Effects of Atomic Radiation of the National Academy of Science.

The McNair Lectureship on Science and Religion was founded by the Rev. John Calvin McNair of the UNC class of 1849. The first lecture was delivered in 1908. The object of the annual series is "to show the mutual bearing of science and theology upon each other and to prove the existence and attributes, as far as may be, of God from nature."

For a number of years, Prof. Glass has been a dominant leader in the social direction of science. As an author and educator, as well as an investigator, Prof. Glass continues to play an important part in the position that the study of biology exerts not only in schools and universities but in everyone's daily life.

MARKING ON THE CURVE—AND WHAT TO DO ABOUT IT

Twonkey Crimscott was a professor. Choate Sigafoos was a sophomore. Twonkey Crimscott was keen, cold, brilliant. Choate Sigafoos was loose, vague, adenoidal. Twonkey Crimscott believed in diligence, discipline, and marking on the curve. Choate Sigafoos believed in elves, Julie London, and thirteen hours of sleep each night.

Yet there came a time when Twonkey Crimscott—mentor, sage, and savant—was thoroughly outthought, outfoxed, outmaneuvered, outployed, and outwitted by Choate Sigafoos, sophomore.

"You and your ideas!"

It happened one day when Choate was at the library studying for one of Mr. Crimscott's exams in sociology. Mr. Crimscott's exams were murder—plain, flat murder. They consisted of one hundred questions, each question having four possible answers—A, B, C, and D. You had to check the correct answer, but the trouble was that the four choices were so subtly shaded, so intricately worded, that students more clever by far than Choate Sigafoos were often set to gibbering.

So on this day Choate sat in the library poring over his sociology text, his tiny brow furrowed with concentration, while all around him sat the other members of the sociology class, every one studying like crazy, every one scared and pasty. Choate looked sadly at their stricken faces. "What a waste!" he thought. "All this youth, this verve, this bounce, chained to musty books in a musty library! We should be out singing and dancing and cutting didoes on the greensward! Instead we are here."

Then, suddenly, an absolute gasser of an idea hit Choate. "Listen!" he shouted to his classmates. "Tomorrow when we take the exam, let's all—every one of us—check Choice 'A' on every question—every one of them."

"Huh?" said his classmates.

"Oh, I know that Choice 'A' can't be the right answer to every question," said Choate. "But what's the difference? Mr. Crimscott marks on the curve. If we all check the same answers, then we all get the same score, and everybody in the class gets a 'C'."

"Hmm," said his classmates.

"So why should we knock ourselves out studying?" said Choate. "Let's get out of here and have a ball!"

So they all ran out and lit Marlboro Cigarettes and had a ball, as indeed, you will too when you light a Marlboro, for if there ever was a cigarette to lift the spirit and gladden the heart, to dispel the shades of night, to knot up the ravelled sleeve of care, to put spring in your gait and roses in your cheeks, it is filtered Marlboros—firm and pure and fragrant and filled with rich, natural, golden tobacco. And, what's more, this darlin' smoke comes in soft packs that are actually soft and flip-top boxes that actually flip.

Well sir, the next morning the whole class did what Choate said, and, sure enough, they all got 'C's, and they picked Choate up and carried him on their shoulders and sang "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" and plied him with sweetmeats and Marlboros and girls and put on buttons which said "I DOTE ON CHOATE."

But they were celebrating too soon. Because the next time shrewd old Mr. Crimscott gave them a test, he did not give them one hundred multiple choice questions. He only gave them one question—to wit: write a 20,000 word essay on "Crime Does Not Pay."

"You and your ideas," they said to Choate and tore off his epaulets and broke his sword and drummed him out of the school. Today, a broken man, he earns a living as a camshaft in Toledo.

Willard Becomes A Diamond Injury

By BOB QUINCY

When a professional baseball scout slyly tried to discourage Ken Willard from playing football, he remarked: "You sure can get hurt on the gridiron" . . . Answered Fullback Willard: "I could get hurt walking out of my back door."

* * *

Oddly enough, Ken was the first serious casualty of the North Carolina baseball campaign. . . . He caught his foot in a slide during an intra-squad game and limped off with a painful sprain. . . . "It's really a dandy as sprains go," commented Trainer John Lacey, "but Ken is making a good recovery."

* * *

Willard and Quarterback Junior Edge, who is making a strong bid for the pitching staff, usually take in football drills—but from the sidelines. . . . They normally finish their diamond duties an hour before the spring grid action halts. . . . They're steady observers.

* * *

Because of the the rain, football workouts have been taking place in Kenan Stadium, rather than on Navy field, because a tarpaulin is available. . . Coach Jim Hickey works with 100 hopefuls, while high above a construction team is digging and setting concrete for the framework of the double-deck "new look" for the picturesque stadium.

* * *

Don't let anyone tell you the little man is forgotten in sports. . . . Young Ronnie Jackson (5-8, 162) finished third in the 60-yard dash at the recent Indoor Games and will figure prominently for a halfback spot on North Carolina's first grid unit. . . . Meanwhile, 5-8½, 160-pound Harrison Merrill of the swimming team won a triple crown in the ACC championships. . . . He's a human motorboat.

* * *

Two football candidates, QB Jim Gallagher and Fullback Hudson, underwent knee surgery this week. . . . One of the real promising newcomers to the varsity is Guard John Harmon of Statesville. . . . He has rated raves for his fire-and-brimstone brand of play. . . . He should help solve the linebacking problem.

* * *

Billy Cunningham, the basketball whiz bang, may apply his super leg drive in track this spring. . . . Coach Dale Ranson has been discussing the broad jump with Billy, the Kangaroo Kid. . . . "I was in a little track action as a high schooler," said Billy, "but I'm green at actual competition. I'm willing to try."

* * *

Charlie Shaffer, whose desire was exceeded only by his injuries during the basketball season, will be battling hard for a tennis position when challenge matches are played later this wek. . . . Shaffer is a superb athlete—and would have been a real stickout at quarterback had not a knee sidelined him for good on the grid.

* * *

Athletic Director Chuck Erickson and Golf Coach Ed Kenney are considering a switch in sides on the spacious and beautiful Finley Golf Course here. . . . "We're planning to reverse the front and back sides," said Erickson. "I feel this will speed up play. The present front side offers a Par 3 hole as No. 2. This tends to slow action on a busy day. The present back side presents four holes before encountering a par three."

* * *

Coach Walter Rabb was irked at the manner in which a pitcher fielded a bunt at practice the other day, but displayed a remarkable choice of words. . . . Rabb jumped off the bench and yelled: "Son, you're supposed to charge those bunts. Now I won't say you loafed, but I will say you fielded it a little too deliberately."

Sokol Outlasts Hoehn; More Matches Today

By LOUIS LEGUM

On the evidence of much of the play on the tennis courts yesterday afternoon, Coach Don Skakle's experiment of intra-squad challenge matches looks like it may work.

The matches will resume this afternoon at two. Feature matches will be Hoehn-Harrison, Stoneman-Shaffer, Myers-Parrish, and Poplin-Jones.

Before a surprisingly large crowd of sweatered onlookers, the UNC tennis team served notice with only five days of practice that they're going to be awfully tough to handle this season.

In the main match of the somewhat windy day, number one player George Sokol wore down Ted Hoehn at number two, 6-4, 6-4. Sokol, who is ranked as the 41st mens' player in the United States, rallied in both sets from a small deficit to defeat his red-haired opponent.

Hoehn made many brilliant shots, from backcourt lobs to driving drop shots, but too often he slammed the easy forehand return out of bounds or into the net.. The bulldogging Sokol waited patiently for his openings to rip a scorching forehand down the vulnerable sidelines, or more often, return the ball with a murderous consistency that brought an error from Hoehn.

A pleasing and somewhat surprising note was the showing of Bitsy Harrison at number three. Evincing a more serious attitude than he often demonstrated last season, the towering Harrison was very impressive in defeating number four Keith Stoneman, 6-4, 6-0. Stoneman, obviously off his usual game, could only stay in the match through the first set. Yet it was definitely Harrison's day. He set the pace of the match and had the ex-Tar Heel captain moving all over the court, chasing sky-high backcourt lobs and then precisional placements that dropped over the net on the twist of Harrison's racket.

Charlie Shaffer's sledgehammer-like attack was simply too much for the tempered groundstroke play of Pete Myers. The number five Shaffer was able to press his big serve and aggressive net play to overpower the less experienced Myers who was seeded number six for the afternoon.

Appearing to serve notice to the whole team, O. H. Parrish was responsible for the most convincing triumph of this March afternoon. In a matter of minutes that almost seemed like seconds, Parrish, at number seven, steamrolled Joe Polin, 6-0, 6-0. Parrish employed a classic combination of power and consistency in vanquishing Polin, seeded just below him. According to an impressed Coach Skakle, Parrish, for a sophomore, has an exceptional amount of experience, and native court intelligence, and should be a mainstay of this year's team.

A couple of mild upsets saw veteran Kirby Jones beat Stan Cocke, 6-0, 6-3; and newcomer Don Long defeat Rich Henderson 6-4, 6-2. Other results included Sam Applegate over John Schlacter, 6-0, 6-2; and J. K. McDonald over Toubvner, 6-0, 6-4.

UNC's Brown And Poteet To Play In Senior Contest

UNC's basketball co - captains, Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet will compete in the Fifth Annual Boys Home Invitational Basketball game next week at High Point and the Tar Heel seniors shouldn't be lonesome. The coach of the Big Four team is Carolina's Dean Smith.

The Big Four, with some help from Davidson and South Carolina, take on a Carolina Conference team in a battle of senior stars from North and South Carolina.

Duke's Blue Devils will not participate in the contest unless they fail to win the NCAA Eastern Regionals this weekend. If Duke loses, Art Heyman and Fred Schmidt will join Wake Forest's Dave Wiedeman and Bob Woollard, State's Ken Rohloff, Jon Speaks, John Key and Jim Whitfield, along with Carolina's two members.

Bill Jarman, the lone senior and Davidson's strongest team in history, and South Carolina's Scottie Ward round out the Big Four team.

Lenoir Rhyne paces the small college team with four men—Jerry Wells, Jim Wiles, Tommy Burton and Don Schley. Western Carolina has two members—Mel Gibson and Gaston Seal. Atlantic Christian, High Point, Pfeiffer and Elon each placed one man.

The Big Four holds a three to one edge in the series, losing only the first game in 1959. None of the games have been one-sided.

The event is sponsored annually by the High Point Jaycees and the proceeds are turned over to the Boys Home at Lake Waccamaw.

LaSalle, St. Louis Play In TV Game

NEW YORK (UPI)LaSalle and St. Louis clash before a national television audience Saturday afternoon on a doubleheader program that winds up the first round of the National Invitation Basketball Tournament.

Then, on Saturday night, top-seeded Wichita and fourth-seeded Canisius start play against quarter-final opponents at Madison Square Garden.

The game between LaSalle (16-7) and St. Louis (15-11) will be televised by the National Broadcasting Company, starting at 1:45 p.m. EST. The afternoon program winds up with a game between Miami of Florida (22-4) and St. Francis of New York (16-6).

Wichita, the tournament favorite because of its No. 6 national ranking, faces Villanova (18-8) in the opening game of the evening doubleheader. Canisius (17-6) takes on towering Memphis State (19-6) in the nightcap.

Catchers Omitted

In Thursday's UNC baseball preview the Tar Heel catchers were left out of the story. Bernie Isgett caught the Tar Heel pitchers during many of last year's games and will handle most of the catching. Backing up Isgett are Bob "Hot Rod" Hundley, a converted first baseman, and Merle Kruer.

FISCAL REPORTS

All organizations which have received money from the Student Government for the present fiscal year and have not yet submitted a report of this year's expenditures to the Finance Committee of the Student Legislature must do so if these organizations expect to be considered for an appropriation for next year.

These reports must be submitted to the chairman of the Finance Committee by Tuesday, March 19, George Rosental (120 Craige Dorm or in the Student Govt. offices).

Sigma Nu-Alexander Win

Although they won just one event and placed in only one other, a balanced Sigma Nu-Alexander team took top honors in the Sixth Annual Grail Mural Sports Jamboree held Thursday night.

Amassing 108 points and finishing well up in almost every division, the winners may now rest on their laurels and await the steak dinner to be held in their honor Tuesday night.

Badminton was the only event the Sigma Nu-Alexander team could sweep. Tillman King and George Stretcher defeated a Chi Psi-Graham duo, 16-10.

Peter Ruth, Pete Williams, Garry Roser, and Joe Williams won the event for Phi Kappa Sig-Everett Rogah with a 47.8 second time for the 100-yard freestyle event.

To the untrained eye the proceedings were nothing more than planned confusion. Order was at all times present, however, and the Jamboree was run with a minimum of delays.

The round robin basketball tournament was the night's most inclusive event taking most of the evening to complete.

When it was all over a Phi Kappa Sig-Everett Rogah team had given ATO its first taste of defeat this year. They won 10-4 over ATO-Old East in a hard fought finals match.

Tommy Dail, Billy McCombs, Wendell Brande and Conrad Powell teamed up to put an almost air-tight defense on the ATO-Old East guns.

A Kappa Sig-Manly relay team refused to be worn down and took top honors in the four-division relay event.

In the foul-shooting division only seven teams advanced to the finals. Many of the original participants were eliminated as they failed to make the 35 of 50 qualifying throws.

Jim Taylor and Stu Eizenstat of ZBT-Joyner emerged the winners as they connected on 39 of 50 for 78 per cent.

Somewhat of a marathon developed in the table tennis finals as DKE-Old West and ZBT-Joyner locked horns in a 38-36 contest.

Ed Murray and John Morgan of DKE-Old West emerged the winners.

Another DKE-Old West team swept the handball event from ZBT-Joyner also. Joe Churchill and Rex Savery were the victors in this contest.

The top archers on campus met in the final event of the evening and Bill Oliver and Sumner Martin proved to be the best of the lot. Their win gave TEP-Avery their lone win of the night.

Red Planes Over Alaska Chased By U. S. Fighters

Reconnaissance Aircraft Said In Violation

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Two Soviet reconnaissance planes flew over American territory in Alaska Friday and were chased back to Russia by U. S. jet fighters, it was disclosed Saturday.

The United States protested sharply to the Kremlin, demanding the Soviet Union "take all necessary measures to prevent any repetition" of the air violation, the first of its kind.

The Defense Department said the invaders penetrated 30 miles inside U. S. territory. They were over American soil for about a half an hour and set off a "scramble" by U.S. fighter pilots at Alaskan bases.

The Pentagon said that F102 jets "intercepted" the planes but no shots were fired.

Asked why the U.S. fighters did not fire on the Russian planes a Defense Department spokesman said:

"When the interception was made, the Soviets were clearly on a course which would take them out of U.S. air space."

The F102 "Delta Dart" fighters used in the interception are supersonic, and could fly at twice the 460 mile-an-hour maximum speed at which the department said the Russian planes flew.

No Description

There was no description of the Russian planes other than that they were reconnaissance types. This would usually imply that they were not heavily armed.

A State Department spokesman told newsmen it was "the first clearly established incident of a Soviet overflight of the United States."

There have been reports that Russian planes from Cuba have flown over Southeastern United States but Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara has emphatically denied all such claims.

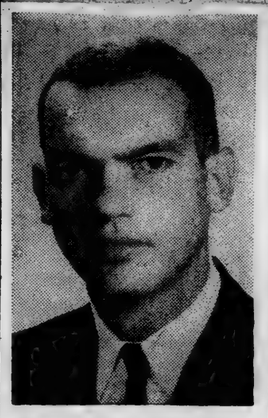
A defense Department spokesman said the Russian planes were spotted on radar approaching southwestern Alaska. They came in from the west southwest over Kuskokwim Bay, about 200 miles north of the Aleutian Islands. They flew at an altitude of from 17,000 to 35,000 feet and at speeds of 400 to 460 miles an hour.

TO STUDY IN FRANCE

Wales Picked Tour Scholar

Pete Wales, a junior English major from St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, has been named UNC's second Tours Scholarship winner, Al Fairchild, selections committee chairman, anncunced yesterday. Ann Spencer, a native of Chapel Hill and a French major, was named as alternate.

The Scholarship provides for a year's study, at Tours, France, including room and board with a French family and transportation, is administered by the International Students' Board here.



Wales, stated in his application for scholarship that he felt this trip would add considerably to his education to know and have a better understanding of a people of a different country. He added that "he has career ambitions for the Foreign Service so that his mere being in France and being in contact with French people would be tremendously useful as well as educational for him."

Wales, a member of the Chi Psi Lodge, has been active in both student government and fraternity affairs. He has participated in the freshman and sophomore Honors Program and served on the Men's Honor Council for two years.

Dean Henderson Lands Role In Faculty Show

Dean Charles Henderson

. . . Let Me Entertain You

Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson will be among the stellar cast which will venture onto the boards in the Student-Faculty Variety show slated for Thursday night under the sponsorship of the Junior Class.

Although the script for the show has not been released, rumor has it that Henderson will portray a Japanese kamikazi pilot who mistakenly crashes into South Building during WW II.

According to an informed source, Henderson is not currently rehearsing for his role, but will rely on his natural abilities as an actor.

Adams of UNC, March 28; Dr. Romane Clark of Duke University, April 4; Dr. Wilfred Sellars of Yale University, April 18; Dr. Henry Aiken of Harvard University, April 25; Dr. Thomas Thompson of State College of Iowa, May 1; Dr. Paul Welsh of Duke University, May 9; Dr. John Dreher of UNC, May 13; and Dr. Eugene Luschei of UNC, May 16.

Dr. Hall, formerly Kenan Professor of Philosophy at UNC and Chairman of the Philosophy Department, was regarded as one of the nations' outstanding philosophers. He was the author of "Our Knowledge of Fact and Value," "What is Value?" and other philosphical works.

Dr. Hall taught at Ohio State University, Stanford University, and the University of British Columbia before coming to Chapel Hill in 1952. In 1958 he was a Fulbright Professor in Japan. He died here on June 17, 1960 at the age of 59.

STATISTICS COLLOQUIUM

"Confounding and Fractional Replications for Asymmetrical Factorial Designs" will be the topic of Dr. J. N. Srivastava at the Statistics Colloquium Monday in 265 Phillips Hall.

Dormitory Spotlight: Joyner

"It should be a good semester."

"We have made careful plans for the remainder of the year, and if we can get the participation we have had in the past, we will be able to present a very diversified program."

"The 'Lewis Casino' will be in operation for the Campus Chest Carnival, and we will have something up for bids at the auction."

"We have a good social program lined up for spring, including a beach party during the Azalea Festival in Wilmington and a combo party in the quad," Joyner said. "However, these are not definite."

"The social room will be renovated. We will put in new furniture and will paint it this summer," he added. "A new TV set was put in in November."

"Our intramurals have been good this year, and we have had excellent participation. Bill Eller has done a great job, and in addition to the regular program we will have an interdorm ping-pong tournament in the latter part of this month."

Residents have access to a good quiz file, which was started three years ago. The dorm newspaper, edited by Bob Pustilnik, is above average and the dorm stands ninth in the race for the "Best Dorm" trophy.

Game-Rigging Charge Aimed At Georgia, Alabama Teams

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (UPI) — A sweeping investigation involving the FBI and the U. S. Senate was triggered Saturday by charges that former Georgia Athletic Director Wallace Butts and Alabama Coach Paul (Bear) Bryant conspired to rig a football game.

Southeastern Conference Commissioner Bernie Moore called a news conference to announce that his office was looking into the allegations contained in the forthcoming issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

Moore brushed aside suggestions that a scandal might erupt that could shatter the 12-member conference.

In Washington, the FBI said it has made "preliminary inquiries" into the charges. A spokesman for the Senate's permanent investigation subcommittee, which has been looking into "racketeering aspects" in point-spread fixing in amateur and professional sports said the group also will delve into the controversy that erupted like a bombshell.

A Justice Department spokesman said that while no active investigation was under way by the department, developments were being closely followed.

The Post story — called "The Story of a College Football Fix"—quoted an Atlanta man, George Burnett, as saying he accidentally overheard a telephone conversation in which Butts gave Bryant Georgia's plays and outlined its offensive formations.

Denies Charge

Butts, who resigned at Georgia Feb. 28 after 25 years as head coach and then athletic director, and Bryant, both denied the charge.

Butts called it "the most fantastic and ridiculous thing that I can imagine."

William H. Schroder, attorney for Butts, said Saturday Butts intends to file a libel suit against the magazine shortly after the magazine hits the streets.

Schroeder said the suit probably would be for $10 million.

Bryant, who is suing the Post about another article, said in a statement issued through attorneys that the charge was "completely false."

Bryant's defending national championship team was a 17-point favorite for the Georgia game played the night of Sept. 22, 1962 in Birmingham. Alabama won 35-0. It was the opening game of the season in which the Crimson Tide won 9 games and lost one. Georgia's 1962 record was 3-4-3.

Coach Johnny Griffith replaced Butts as head coach when Butts became athletic director at Georgia in 1960. Butts, in submitting his resignation, said he was stepping down because of business and personal reasons.

Burnett Testifies

M. Cook Barwick, attorney for the University of Georgia Athletic Board, told the United Press International Burnett gave testimony to the board in which he confirmed the alleged telephone conversation between Butts and Bryant.

Barwick said Burnett submitted to a lie detector test and that Butts was offered the opportunity to take a lie detector test and refused.

Moore, at his news conference, said there had been suggestions the charge might destroy the SEC whose football teams compete regularly in such major post-season bowls as the Sugar, Orange and Cotton.

"The Southeastern Conference has had an outstanding athletic program since the formation of the conference and will not be interrupted or destroyed by the article appearing in the Post," Moore said.

He read this statement to reporters:

"The administrative officials of our 12 great educational institutions believe thoroughly in such a program and will continue to support it. I am also sure that the students, the faculties and the public will continue their interest and support.

"Since this matter has come to my attention an investigation is in progress but has not been completed. The investigation will be completed when all facts and records are available.

Executive Committee

"Upon the completion of the investigations it will be referred to the Southeastern Conference Executive Committee, which committee directs policy when the conference is not in session."

Moore said he had talked to Butts and Bryant for a "couple of weeks but at the time I didn't consider it an investigation. I also talked to President O. C. Aderhold of Georgia and President Frank Rose of Alabama.

"I don't know that that adds anything to it," Moore said.

Moore was asked what action he could take if the allegation were true.

"Now you have asked the $64 question," he replied.

J. Wayne Reitz, University of Florida; Edwin D. Harrison, Georgia Tech; T. A. Bickerstaff, University of Mississippi; Ralph Draughon, Auburn University; and Earl M. Ramer, University of Tennessee.

A veteran member of the Alabama team was asked if there had been anything unusual in the preparations for the Georgia game.

The player, who asked that his name not be used, told UPI: "No, definitely not. I think this thing is ridiculous. Our practice for Georgia was the same as it is every year."

An inquiry also will be made by the Senate permanent investigations subcommittee. Jerome Alderman, the subcommittee's chief counsel, told a reporter: "Of course we'll look into it."

Alderman said the subcommittee, headed by Sen. John L. McClellan, D-Ark., has been looking for some time into a broad area of alleged rigging of college and professional football and basketball games.

Orientation

Diana Teasdale, Coordinator of the Woman's Orientation Program announced yesterday that counselors for the program will be selected next week.

An explanation of the counselor's duties and contributions will be presented this week in dorm meetings, she said, and application blanks will be handed out then to all interested students. Scheduled times for interviews will be posted on bulletin boards in the women's dorms.

Interviews, lasting five minutes each, will be held starting Monday, March 18, and will run through Thursday, March 23, on the second floor of Graham Memorial.

Girls will be interviewed by members of the Orientation Committee.

New Polls

Students living in Craige and Ehringhaus dormitories will be able to vote in Y-Court in this year's campus election, according to a ruling made this week by the Elections Board.

This new polling place is designed to make it easier for students in these two dormitories to vote. Prior to this ruling, students who left their dorms early in the morning and returned late at night were not able to vote.

The Elections Board approved a petition which also sets up polls in the Law, Medical, Dental and Pharmacy School buildings.

The Board approved an item calling for an increased number of polltenders in both Craige and Ehringhaus to eliminate the lengthy lines at these polling places.

Jr. Class Contest

Entries are now being accepted in the Junior Class Essey contest which closes April 1. The essay should be based on "My Personal Evaluation of Carolina."

There is a 1500 word maximum and first prize will be $10. The essay should be typed and double-spaced.

The contest is open to all undergraduates and will be judged by Chancellor R. B. House.

Entries should be turned in to the GM information desk.

Voice Students To Give Recital

Martha Gibbs and Harold Lowry, voice students in the UNC Department of Music, will sing in a recital of music from all periods this afternoon at four o'clock in Hill Music Hall. Both are pupils of Dr. Joel Carter and are in their junior year here.

The purpose of such student recitals, required of all music majors, is to demonstrate the progress and musical abilities of the students. Miss Gibbs and Mr. Lowry, the first student recitalists of this year, will alternate singing songs drawn from the established repertoire in German, French, Italian, Spanish, and English.

The program will close with an aria from Verdi's 'Ernani', sung by Mr. Lowry, and an aria from Stravinsky's 'Oedipux Rex', sung by Miss Gibbs. Robert Steelman is accompanist for both singers.

Miss Gibbs is a mezzo-soprano from Greensboro. Before entering UNC last fall, she was a frequent soloist with the Brevard Choir. She is presently a soloist at the University Methodist Church and has sung on WUNC-TV's 'Hill Hall Presents' series.

Mr. Lowry, a baritone from Norfolk, Va., attended Georgia Tech before entering UNC in 1961. He also is a soloist at the University Methodist Church and has appeared on WUNC-TV.

Both Miss Milner, a soprana, and Miss Gibbs, an alto, are students of Professor Joel Carter of the UNC Music Department.

Thirty singers participated in the preliminaries here. About 30 will be in the regional finals from Florida, Georgia, Virginia, West Virginia, North and South Carolina next month.

Fraternities: A Problem Of The Wrong Questions

There does not seem to be a college student, faculty member, or administrator at any university in the country who does not welcome the opportunity to expound on the supposed "woes and noes" of fraternal existence.

Attend alumni banquets or national fraternity conventions, stop a college dean on the street or just simply get four men together, and, sure enough, the prevailing topic of conversation will eventually be the whys and wherefores of the "faltering fraternity system."

Slick-paper magazines pad circulation, asking: Is the fraternity a dying institution?

And every session of the National Interfraternity Conference over the past five years has sought to answer: Is the fraternity a dying institution?

* * *

The editor of the Daily Nebraskan, a fraternity member and past president of the Nebraska IFC, felt so moved by the question that he proposed the following analogy:

"The college fraternity could be compared with the dinosaur. The dinosaur had history, tradition, and strength, but failed to adapt to the changing environment."

The analogy is extended a bit further, but there is no need to follow it. It asks the same question: Is the fraternity, . . . And, typically, disappointingly it finds the usual answers.

The answers? Well, they normally go something like this:

"Fraternities will survive, the same as any human institution, if they are useful, purposeful and alert."

Touching? Perhaps.
Informative? Not really.

The answers fall short, drastically, catastrophically short, of any real or possible solution. They all sound good, mainly because they all sound alike. But as for tangible or realistic measures essential to the sought-after bootstrapping, we are left wanting.

We are left wanting because those who are asking questions are not providing real answers, even to their own questions. . . . Because, and on this point we hope to repeatedly elaborate, they neither know why they are asking the questions, or if the questions being raised are the questions that deal with the heart of the matter.

We would contend that they do not. (CW)

Thursday Night "Meeting Time"

Hopefully, some questions of significance will be leveled at candidates running for seats in Student Legislature during the two weeks remaining before campus elections. Thursday night's session of SL again illustrated the need for some questions to be answered.

A resolution for the Germans Club to transform itself into an all-campus type organization was under discussion. The author of the bill had done little, if any, research into the background, or plans of the Germans Club, consequently the SL plodded through three hours of questions and debate before passing an amended version of the resolution.

Most of these complications could have been eliminated (1) if the representatives in SL knew a little more about Student Government and (2) if the author of the bill had clearly explained the present situation of the Germans Club at the outset of the meeting.

This evident lack of preparation of bills has, in recent weeks, become the rule rather than the exception. Also, since many bills have been so poorly worded, numerous necessary changes have been made in order to make the bills more understandable.

Thus, a lot of time has been wasted on preliminary matters before discussion on a bill ever begins.

Some questions to be raised of the candidates for Legislature might include — besides questions designed to find out whether or not the candidate can read, write and speak intelligently — what is the candidate's position on the types of resolutions which SL should consider? Whether or not the candidate has had any experience in student government affairs? And if so how much and where, etc. Also, the voter might try to find out if the candidate's interests seem sincere and honest.

This might illustrate whether or not the prospective representative would ever be adequately prepared to consider bills when Thursday night "meeting time" rolls around.

Perhaps an even more important question might be whether or not it is too much to ask to have an informed Student Legislature?

Letters To The Editors

UP Poll Was For Real

To the Editor,

This is in answer to a letter by John H. Atkins, Jr. (roommate of Haynes McFadden, Treasurer of the Student Party) who was obviously biased against the UP Poll. The first point I would like to make is that, in my opinion, you showed an incredible lack of reflection in your letter.

The recent poll of two hundred students WAS taken and was designed to take a cross sampling of the campus, and more specifically, the dormitory areas. The weight I would like to place on these questionnaires is very heavy. Did you happen to know that the Gallup Poll, which is usually very reflective of the trends in the U.S.A., interviews only two thousand people across the country?

As for the questions that were asked, did you know that no one has ever polled the campus concerning student use of the union? I feel sure that you would not know if the university conducted a poll concerning three-man rooms, yet the administration says that we dorm people "won't really mind three-man rooms." Admittedly the poll was not very controversial in your viewpoint, but what if the majority of the people had said that they never use the student union? This might have been quite controversial. Why don't you check on poll No. 3 which was recently conducted? By the way, if you consider it such a farce, why are you concerned about poll No. 2?

'Bad Day At Black Rock'

To the Editors,

Saturday, February 9, was a lousy day. It was one of those days where we almost got the bacon—we could hear it popping in the skillet, even smell its aroma. Yet, when it came time to eat, the bacon wasn't on our plate. That crispy, delicious taste of victory went to a Deacon.

The University of North Carolina was on the verge of excellence Saturday afternoon. The Tarheels aren't the Frank McGuire team of 1957 that captured the NCAA Championship by winning 33 consecutive games, yet they were good enough to arouse pride in any true Tar Heel, be he student or alumnus.

What many of you (students and faculty) perhaps did not realize, however, was the fact that the UNC-Wake Forest game was being televised to thousands in the Washington, D. C. area. Here was a golden opportunity for the University of North Carolina to show its best side to TV viewers in the Nation's Capitol—to project some of its greatness onto the screen. Not just its athletic prominence (what prominence remains from the days of Sunny Jim Tatum and Frank McGuire) but the genuine validity of the University, its students and alumni.

Only two Saturdays before, Duke University was host for the Duke-West Virginia game (on the same Washington station) and a movie at half-time was shown pointing to the heritage and future of the University "down the road." It was a good movie and it made Duke appear to be a fine university, which it undeniably is in many ways.

No university, regardless of its size, standing or purpose can afford to "drop the ball" when it has it nestled in its lap. The University of North Carolina is a great university but it can not afford to be mute and shy.

Half-time at the UNC-Wake Forest game found a retired Carolina track coach, who successfully coached the Tar Heel teams over 30 years present awards to the outstanding soccer player and a current outstanding UNC barefoot runner. The presentation speech, made in all the hullabaloo of the usual half-time confusion, was read verbatim. The old gent was barely audible and one scarcely knew for whom or what the awards were intended. Moreover, it would have taken a UNC official only a mite of foresight to pass on to the TV broadcaster that Jim Reston, Jr., one of the recipients, is the son of the renown Washington correspondent to the New York Times, whose face is familiar from Washington's current TV show "The New York Times of the Air," and who has been the object of full page spreads in Time Magazine twice in the past month. Finally, since the theme was predominantly track, Jim Beatty '58, winner of tens of track events and present record holder of the mile event, could have at least been mentioned by someone.

Perhaps this is not the kind of publicity the University wants. I don't know. I do know, however, that UNC, like any great University that aspires to become greater must relay its validity to the general public.

South And The Southerner

McGill's Book Reveals South's Pride

THE SOUTH AND THE SOUTHERNER, By Ralph McGill, Atlantic-Little, Brown, 297 pages, $5.00.

The Charlotte Observer

The title of this book is alliterative, but it is too vague. It should be "Ralph McGill: The South He Sees."

For more than 100 pages at the start of this book, McGill lazily reminisces. But these reflections are not as much of an indulgence as it might seem at first, for the stories McGill heard as a boy about the Civil War, his early attitudes on slavery, remembrance of menial jobs he held side-by-side with Negroes, his first-hand knowledge of southern politicians and institutions —all these helped build the window through which McGill now sees he South.

Though he speaks with pride of the South's recent advances and of those persons who have had the courage to make the South move, he cannot hide his sadness at its many short-comings. He talks of poverty and second-rate economic machinery, of illiteracy and an educational skeleton that still lacks sinews, of laws that are not blind, of ignorance and suspicion that manacle real advance.

Through it all shines the face of the Negro—the slave, the underpaid Negro schoolteacher and the self-conscious Negro county agent.

* * *

McGILL IS NOT too modern to lament this "guilt of the South." To him, the impossibly intricate veneer of justification for this inhumanity, this "peculiar institution"—but moral wrongness of slavery and its successor, segregation —lurk behind each southern failure. There are many problems that we share with the rest of the world, he concedes, but our burden is doubled by this guilt.

McGill, who won a Pulitzer Prize for editorial writing for the Atlanta Constitution in 1958, is an idealist and has long been indignant about those southerners who claim they have rights that other Americans do not share—the right to legally treat a large segment of the population as inferior, the right to stifle a region's economic advance to maintain a myth, the right to close schools because of a court order, the right to claim immunity from constitutional provisions by disinterring such fancies as "interposition."

But McGill reveals in this book that he also has had a practical eye cocked to the events of the day. When Dr. James B. Conant, author of "The American High School Today," visited Atlanta in 1960, McGill opened the news columns of his paper to publicizing Conant's speech. With the threat of public school closure hanging over Atlanta, Conant "spoke of what had been learned in his studies of the nation's secondary system. He mentioned the need for competent, well-paid teachers. He recommended equal tax assessments (which the Southern states do not have) as the only fair basis for financing. He talked calmly, logically and convincingly about our national lag.

"By a stroke of luck, the National Education Association had released a report on the support of education by the states just a few days before Dr. Conant's visit. It showed Georgia as fifth from last in support of schools. All the southern states were at the bottom of the heap."

Integration was never mentioned by Dr. Conant or McGill at this moment. But the schools stayed open.

* * *

McGILL SPECULATES briefly about what men history will remember as the "twig benders," men who exploited the Negro to their own ends and lit the straw of violence in the process.

But it is the autobiography of this book that fascinates.

Ralph McGill is a moralist. He has preached equality, fairness, opportunity, moderation and many more words that may have dulled through repetition. Since he started writing for the Constitution, some other southern editors have followed with the message of moderation. A few of these have been even more "modern" than McGill, claiming that "the South" and "guilt" and all that now are just words, made meaningless by time and misuse.

Being a preacher, McGill has tried the patience of some liberals and angered forever many of those who answered "Never."

But McGill was there when it counted. "The South and the Southerner" helps us to understand why.

Yumpin' Yimminy! Not E'en A Drop?

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (UPI)—Joesse Bergqvist, who lives in the Swedish hamlet of Emmaboda, has not seen his brother for 10 years, his cousins for 12 years and his father for 15 years.

But the whole clan plans to get together this weekend—because Joesse has one of the few bottles of liquor still undrunk in this unhappy land.

Such family reunions were the silver lining in the dark, dry cloud that has hung over Sweden since the deliverymen who supply that nation's state-owned liquor stores went on strike two weeks ago.

Thirsty Swedes, fearing a drought, have bought up almost every drop of hooch in sight. A few bottles are left on the shelves—but they are going at up to 100 kroner $20 each.

"It's panic," said a Stockholm liquor commission inspector. "We still have a few bottles left. But our stock probably will not last the day. We will decide then how many shops we must close."

A black market in booze was growing here and lines continued to form outside the emptying stores, where rationing limits each customer to a half-bottle each.

Off-the-beaten-path inns and restaurants, accustomed to visits by handfuls of regulars, were beseiged by parched tourists in search of a drink. Most came from Stockholm, where the situation is most critical.

The cruelest blow of all, most Swedes felt, was Finance Minister Gunnar Straeng's proposal Friday that the tax on liquor go up an average 15 per cent.

A reconciliation committee is expected to try early next week to settle the strike. But officials said they probably will be unable to fill the liquor stores for several weeks.

Delinquents Making Tours To Save Others From Crime

CORNELIA, Ga. (UPI)—He was introduced only as "Wink" and when the crew-cut youth stepped to the center of a high school auditorium platform here a hush fell over 700 teenagers.

"I wanted to be a man before I was ready," he said soberly. "When I was 17, I decided all it took to be a man was to do the things I saw men doing. I got married but when things got rough, I picked up a gun. I pulled the trigger."

"Wink" is serving life imprisonment and is one of 800 youths committed to the Georgia Industrial Training Institute on a mountain ridge in the North Georgia Blue Ridge foothills.

He is one of six volunteers in a dramatic "Operation Teenager" program that is sending young convicted criminals into the schools of the state to tell teenagers what the end of juvenile delinquency looks like.

"Being a teenager is like standing on the end of a diving board," Wink told the students here. "We are so anxious to jump into the water of adulthood. But instead of making a clean dive, too many of us just do a belly burst. That was me.

"Marriage is not for boys and girls. We fought that out the hard way. It takes more to be a man or woman than the emotional dream you see on television.

"We thought we were different. We went into marriage with the amazement of wide eyed children . . . but our high school dreams faded, our vows became warped. There was blame and recrimination. Then I picked up a gun and ended the dream for good."

"Crime isn't choosy about who it picks," an adult prisoner, "Jim" told the Cornelia students. "Our place at Alto a few miles south of here represents all sides of the track.

"We've come here because some of you may be well on your way to where we are now. You still have a chance to change. It's too late for us because we can't take back our records."

"Patrick," who was 14 when the theft of a child's toy set him off on a crime spree of 30 burglaries, said his well-meaning parents saved him three times from prison but finally "the judge couldn't be convinced any more."

Another youth organized a gang in an orphanage when he was only 8 and later in his youth suggested acts of vandalism to his brother.

"Now I have a background of 75 bulglaries," the youth, who will serve out his present sentence at the age of 21, said.

"You must understand that teenagers are not equipped to handle themselves without the help of parents or other adults," he said.

"My first dropout from school was the wrong step," another prisoner identified as "Clive" said. "Eighty per cent of the homos and tramps have one thing in common—a school dropout."

"Harold" helped organize a gang after being dishonorably discharged from the Army. "We were kings of the alleys," he said. "Now I'd swap 10 years of the discipline from my father that I thought was too hard for two years of imprisonment."

Folksinging--Everybody's Up On It, Even Carpenters

Folklore, folksongs, and academics caused a member of a San Francisco carpenters' union to give up his trade as a shipright, or builder of boats, and devote his time to studying industrial and labor folksongs.

Archie Green, who years ago was a member of Local 1149 in San Francisco, is now on the UNC campus lecturing on labor, folklore and folksongs to a special institute for 18 full-time labor union employees.

Green, who is librarian of the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations at the University of Illinois, began work in the shipright trade following his graduation from the University of California. At that time, his interest in folklore and folksongs was a hobby; he did not have time enough to devote to it.

"I finally reached a point where I wanted to write a book rather than build," said Green, who decided to go back to school to study trade unions and folksongs.

Green is now an authority on industrial and labor folksongs, is well known from California to Cornell University as a lecturer who appears before academic groups, folklore societies, and trade union institutes such as the one now underway at UNC.

He has tapes of labor folksongs which he plays for his classes. Most of the materials on his tapes he has collected personally during summer field trips to various regions of the United States, particularly in the South and in central and western North Carolina.

On his field trips, Green selects those folksongs which mirror the local industrial scene. Green's tapes cover songs from about 10 Southern states and encompassing such industries as railroading, stevedoring, coal mining, and textiles.

Within North Carolina these folksongs are of two types: those dealing with the general industrial situation, such as songs reflecting the reactions and conditions of the workers who begin working in an industrial establishment for the first time; and those "almost forgotten songs" which come out of the period of the strikes of the thirties.

North Carolina has its share of strike songs, according to Green. He cited "Mill Mother's Lament" and "Chief Aderholt" as two. "Chief Aderholt" is about a police chief who was killed during a strike.

Green says that one of his primary interests is to make people aware of folksongs as the embodiment of a culture, particularly American culture which is a "society without roots." The Southern area is the richest for any type of folksong, according to Green.

Green would like to see more students collecting folksongs. He said that here in North Carolina students have an excellent opportunity to collect Textile lore.

A member of the American Folklore Society and the Modern Language Association, Green is now working on the book he has been wanting to write on industrial folklore. He also plans to bring out a long-playing record of textile songs from North Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, and Tennessee.

The Institute at which Green is lecturing is the Southern Staff Institute sponsored by the National Institute of Labor Education and the UNC Extension Division. The institute began on March 7, and will continue through April 4.

Funny (?) Stories Abound In Classes

By BILL STROUPE

Carolina classes tend to produce a bumper crop of funny remarks. Just in the 1962-63 term alone these gems have come up:

In a psychology 20 class one student "put on" Dr. Wallach when he asked, "Do dogs have technicolor dreams?"

But instructors do most of the talking. So, most of the remarks come from them.

For instance, Mr. Robert Walker, telling his Spanish class to pronounce Don Quixote correctly said: "Dont call hom Don Quickshot. He didnt' even have a gun; he is not the Spanish version of 'The Rifleman.'"

And Associate Professor Stuart Sechriest usually keeps his journalism classes lively. Suggesting short terms to use in headline writing, he said:

". . . Use Meet for Convene; use Mum for b.o.—I mean . . ."

Also in Mr Sechriest's class, one student made everybody laugh with his explanation of the origin of the term "O.K.:" "I think it's Swahili for 'yes,' or something like that."

Two men were sipping coffee in the Gem Cafe. "Shot my dog yesterday," one said. "Wad he mad?" "Well, he wasn't too pleased about it."

But Dr. Earle Wallace, recently chosen by the Junior Class "Teacher of the Month," has probably made most of the clever comments. "The Senate," he said one day, "is the South's revenge on the North for winning the Civil War."

Another day Wallace stated, "And so George Washington reluctantly accepted leadership of the Continental Army—reluctantly, perhaps, because he was the only one in it."

Thursday he had several things to say about the Depression: "It was getting so that it was not safe to walk down Wall Street—because someone might jump on top of you from a window."

"Hoover said 'Prosperity is just around the corner,' but that's the longest block we've ever seen!"

"It got to the point where you could put together any three letters of the alphabet, and (Franklin D.) Roosevelt would have an agency to match them."

Finally, Mr. Frank Meadows, a Spanish teacher, is more likely to be remembered for his sage advice before a test: "When you take this test, follow the directions on a mayonnaise jar: 'Keep cool, but do not freeze.'"

Wake Takes Golf Lead; UNC Third

WINSTON-SALEM—North Carolina's golf team fell behind in the first round of a 54-hole three-way match with Wake Forest and Duke Friday, but Coach Ed Kenney found out early in the season that his sophomores will be a big help to the team.

Sophomore Tom Arnold led the Tar Heels with a four-over par 76 on Pine Brook Country Club's 6,684-yard championship course. Trailing Arnold were soph Ed Hoopes with a 77, soph Les Fleisher with a 79, soph Skip Tucker with a 97 and junior Mike Dore with a 79.

Led by sophomore Jay Sigel, Wake Forest moved into a 16-stroke lead over Duke. Wake's seven men used 530 strokes to complete the first 18 holes of the stroke-play match. Duke trailed with 546 and Carolina with 555.

Sigel, a transfer from Houston and the current Pennsylvania State Amateur champion, matched par as did Duke's Rich Bassett. Trailing the leaders were Ed Honeycutt of Wake and George Smith of Duke with 74s.

Jimmy Thompson and Frank Merchant of Wake came in with 75s and Ken Folkes carded a 76 as the Demon Deacons took five of the first eight places. Folkes and Carolina's Arnold tied for seventh.

The second round will be played April 17 at Chapel Hill and the final round April 26 at Duke. The tournament does not count in the Atlantic Coast Conference standings.

ATO Advances In Point Race

By virtue of their double wins in the fraternity blue and white basketball divisions ATO advanced one notch in each section in the overall intramural point standings.

Formerly number six in the blue division and number three in the white ranks, ATO now holds down the number five and two spots, respectively.

In both the blue and white divisions the top spot is held by Phi Delta Theta, a consistent placer in all sports.

The blue league race is still the three team affair it has been all year. Phi Delt's 600 points are enough for the lead, but right behind is DKE with 559 and SAE with 554.

After the top three it's a four team race for fourth place. Beta, ATO, Chi Psi, and Sigma Chi are all within 90 points of each other.

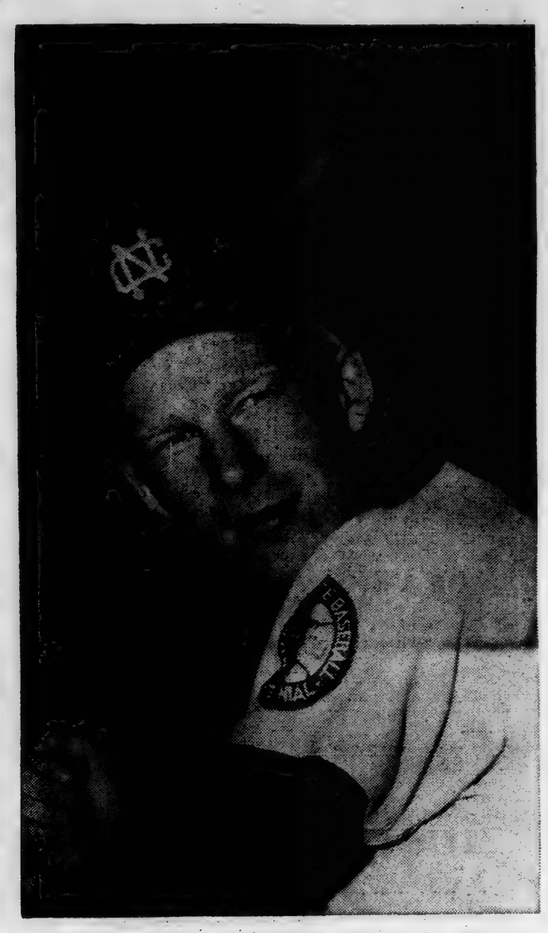
In the white division the battle lines are not so clearly drawn. Again Phi Delt's 375 points is good enough for first place, but any one of five other teams can offer a challenge.

ATO's 365 and Chi Psi's 341 appear to be the most likely at this time but SAE, Dke, and Sigma Nu are all over the 300 mark.

SAE and DKE are tied for the fourth spot with 314 apiece. Sigma Nu is sixth with 304.



READY FOR THE SEASON OPENERS. Carolina's tennis, baseball, and track teams will start their spring schedules this week and the three pictured athletes will have much to say about the success of their teams.

George Sokol, the defending ACC

Jim Speight, shortstop for Coach Walter Rabb's baseball team, will carry a big stick against Southern Illinois as the Tar Heels meet the northerners on Friday and Saturday.

Bob Hart, one of the top 440-yard men in ACC track circles, will get his first chance to compete outdoors this year when the Tar Heels run at N. C. State Wednesday. Saturday the trackmen travel to Clemson.

Jim Beatty Sets Another Goal

Prolific little Jimmy Beatty, who recently added a world indoor two-mile record to his trophy case with a time of 8:30.7, says he has new goals in mind—one of them a shot at the 5,000 meters mark during the Pan Am Games next month in Brazil.

"I felt great and I had a hunch before the Chicago meet that I could break Murray Halbert's old mark of 8:34.4," said Beatty. "I want to gun for record possible while appear to be at my peak of running strength."

In the near future Beatty will have his "showdown challenge" with Peter Snell for the honor of being the world's top miler. The belief is that Jimmy will allow that performance to determine his decision to attend the 1964 Olympics at Tokyo.

WHEN JIMMY was presented with the James E. Sullivan Award at the New York Athletic Club last month, the ceremonies had a distinct North Carolina flavor.

The accolade as the outstanding amateur athlete in America was presented Jimmy by another Carolinian, Louis J. Fisher of High Point, president of the Amateur Athletic Union.

"I was born in New York and my base for running operations is California," smiled Beatty. "But I am a Tar Heel bred and I definitely plan to return to my home state for a business career."

Beatty, as the 34th recipient of the heralded Sullivan Award, most coveted of all amateur athletic honors, paid tribute to the people who had spurred his success and to those who gave him courage to make a cinders comeback after retiring from competition following his graduation from the University of North Carolina.

* * *

AMERICA'S FINEST distance runner in history, a native of Charlotte, personally called on his wife, his mother and his parents-in-law to take bows for their sacrifices and words of encouragement which enabled Beatty to ascend the heights. He saluted his current coach, Hungarian Mihaly Igloi, whom he called the "greatest distance running coach in the world."

Dale Ranson, UNC maestro, was acclaimed by Jimmy for the tutor's perserverance during the athlete's collegiate days, plus Ranson's advice to "join" Igloi on the West Coast when he returned to competition.

In accepting the award Beatty declared, "There is no greater award an amateur can win. This is the epitome of athletic achievement above the breaking of track records. I'll admit that I had dreamed of winning the Sullivan Award sometime—in fact all amateur athletes should dream of winning this award and working to that end."

"In 1962 James T. Beatty established five American distance running records as well as the world record for the two-mile run for the finest distance running performance in the history of track and field in this country. He is the 1962 National A.A.U. indoor and outdoor one-mile run champion.

The story of a classic

In many ways the story of the Thunderbird is one of the most unusual in the automobile business. The whole idea of the car was born at one of the great European automobile shows. The then president of our company pointed to some of the small, lush sports cars that are always a center of attention at such shows and asked his companion, "Why can't we build something like these?"

The companion, who later became a vice president of the company, said, "It just so happens I have one on the boards. I'll show it to you when we get back to Detroit." Then as fast as he could discreetly get to a transatlantic telephone he called his assistant and told him, "Remember that car we've been talking about? Finish those sketches on it."

The Thunderbird became one of the few cars ever built that was produced essentially as the original sketches presented it. Most cars undergo countless changes in the design period. But there was a natural clarity and cleanness to the Thunderbird design that immediately captured all of us at Ford.

It was probably this clean, sharp look that won so many friends so fast when the car went into production. That first Thunderbird had its drawbacks. For example, it was too soft-sprung for true sports-car handling. But, the truth is, it was not designed in the European tradition of the fast performance car. Some people called it a sports car but we never did. We called it a "personal" car; a small, fairly luxurious car that was fun to look at and fun to drive. It had its own integrity: it was one alone.

We built the Thunderbird as a bellwether car for Ford. It was our intention to test new ideas before we put them into our Fords, Fairlanes and Falcons. The new Ford ride and Swing-Away steering wheel appeared first on the Thunderbird, for instance. However, we never foresaw the extraordinary influence Thunderbird would have on the whole automobile business here and abroad. Almost everybody offers the Thunderbird bucket seats these days. And the Thunderbird look is the most decisive styling of the '60s.

The Thunderbird is a classic, made so by a peculiar blend of magic ingredients of which we would love to know the secret. We're building cars right now we hope will become classics, but the truth is, we don't make classics, we make cars. People make the car a classic. And that's the story of the Thunderbird.

Court Says Georgia Unit Elections Illegal

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The Supreme Court declared Monday that Georgia's county unit election system is unconstitutional because it discriminates unfairly against city dwellers in favor of rural voters.

The vote was 8-1 with Justice John M. Harlan dissenting.

For the majority, Justice William O. Douglas said that the unit system violates the 14th amendment's equal protection clause.

"One person, one vote" must prevail, Douglas said.

He commented: "If a state in a statewide election weighted the male vote more heavily than the female vote or the white vote more heavily than the Negro vote, none could sucessfully contend that discrimination was allowable.

"How then can one person be given twice or ten times the voting power of another person in a statewide election merely because he lives in a rural area or because he lives in the smallest rural county?"

Under the Georgia system, election winners are not determined by popular vote. Instead, each county is assigned a number of unit votes, ranging from 40 for Fulton county which includes Atlanta to two for Echols county, which has the smallest population. The candidate winning the most county units is elected.

The system was challenged by James O'Hear Sanders, a retired Atlanta businessman who claimed it weighted the voting power of those in the rural counties at the expense of the heavily populated ones.

Maryland and Mississippi also have unit system election laws on their books but in the latter state, it is rarely used.

Georgia did not use the unit system in last November's balloting because its constitutionality had been challenged in the courts.

A three-judge federal court had ruled against the procedures and had suggested possible remedies.

College Voids SG In Rights Squabble

Student body officers at the small Methodist College 30 miles northeast of Charlotte had earlier declared themselves inactive in protest against what they called slow action by Pheiffer President J. Lem Stokes on approval of a bill of student rights and responsibilities.

Stokes then dissolved the student government Wednesday and reactivated it Thursday with administrative officers in control until new elections could be called.

There are two basic areas of disagreement on the bill of rights, former student body president Larry Crumbly said yesterday.

Compromise seems remote, Crumbly said, on an administration speaker ban, which allows it prior consorship of speakers.

The students had asked the administration to establish set policies on speakers so that any speaker could be heard whose topic conformed to these previously stated policies.

Crumbley also said there was conflict over a clause protecting students against arbitrary action by the administration and/or the faculty.

Dr. Stokes said last week that most of the rights asked for are already covered by administrative practices. He said the delay in action on the statement was caused by the necessity of consulting with the faculty and trustees on the matter. The statement of rights was first presented to Stokes last fall.

The bill of rights asked for closely resembles one endorsed by the National Student Association.

Stokes dissolved the student government under a clause governing inactivity of the organization. Crumbley said the officers had gone inactive under instruction from the Student Senate.

Council Gives One Probation Verdict

One student was placed on definite probation and two others were found not guilty in recent Men's Honor Council cases.

A student was found guilty of copying a classmate's homework and was placed on definite probation for two full academic semesters while receiving an automatic F in the course.

Two defendants were found not guilty of lying to an investigator in connection with an IDC case.

Permits Lost With Failure To Regtster

Approximately 15 students have had their car privileges terminated for the year, and approximately 60 students have had their University Registrations cancelled and have been required to pay the $5.00 reinstatement fee due to failure to register their automobiles or failure to display their automobile registration stickers.

"A thorough check for unregistered automobiles is planned for the near future," Bill Harriss of the Dean of Men's office said yesterday.

According to Harriss, there has been some confusion over the fact that a student who brings a car to campus has 48 hours to register it.

Several freshmen have brought cars to the campus, he said, and felt that it was legal as long as they did not keep them 48 hours; this is a misinterpretation of the regulation. Any student eligible to have a car at the University of North Carolina has 48 hours in which to register it. Students that are ineligible to have an automobile are not covered under this provision.

Freshmen who are found to have unregistered cars, Harriss stated, are subject to having their automobile privileges terminated thru their sophomore year in addition to paying the $5.00 fee for reinstatement.

YWCA OFFICERS—Donna Bailey (right) turns over the president's gavel of the YWCA to Lucy Kennerly who will take over the post next week. Also elected as officers for this year were Laurie Clark, vice president; Becky Jo Green, secretary; Gayle Metts, treasurer; Sally Rawlings, membership chairman; Charlotte Wheland, religious emphasis chairman, Dee Johnson, freshman coordinator; and Betty Ward, executive coordinator. Interviews for Y cabinet positions will be held today through Thursday at the Y from 2-5 p.m.

Di-Phi Considers SG Value Tonight

By HUBERT HAWKINS

A strange and controversial resolution will be debated by the Di-Phi tonight, beginning at 7:30 p.m. in the Di-Phi chamber on the third floor of New West.

The resolution, as submitted to the Ways and Means Committee by Jim Reston, proposes to abolish Student Government.

WHEREAS: Student Government was conceived as a grand design for the general degeneration of American youth into narrow-minded, short-sighted bureaucrats, and

WHEREAS: The communists launched this design in order to mold Americans into their image of the petty bourgeoisie, thus making America ripe for a takeover, and

WHEREAS: This design is approaching fruition as student government becomes more and more entrenched as a "worthwhile" and prestigious institution for the development of "good American citiens," and

WHEREAS: The evidence for the coming takeover is clear in the narrow interests, apathy toward greater issues, lack of intellectual aliveness, physical softness, and sexual impotency of the American student, and

Assembly May Cause Rent Increase Of $40

By BOB SAMSOT

Dorm residents here may face a $40 increase in room rent next year if the Joint Appropriations Committee of the State Legislature, which meets today in Raleigh, does not approve the Consolidated Universitys' appropriation requests for capital improvements for the 1963-64 year.

Appropriations for a new student union and an addition to the heating plant and steam-piping center will also be considered, according to A. H. Shepard, business officer and treasurer of the Consolidated University.

So far the committee has approved the requests to build these new buildings, on a 100 per cent self-liquidating basis, but has not appropriated any funds for them yet.

"Although these improvements are necessary, if the current 100 per cent self-liquidating terms remain in effect it may result in too great an increase in student expense," Shepard said yesterday. He added, "We do not want to price students out of the University by setting ability to pay as an attendance criterion."

Today the University will ask that new dormitories be limited to one, instead of two as originally requested, but with the original request of $1,272,000. Under this proposal a new men's dorm with an increased capacity of 925 students, and a women's dorm would be created from an old men's dorm. The project would be on a 50 per cent self-liquidating basis.

The full cost of a new two-million dollar student center and half the cost, at $690,000, of the heating plant addition will also be asked. The total appropriations for capital improvements requested for UNC will be $3,962,000.

The committee could reach a number of decisions on these requests. It could approve them, put them in the form of a bond issue, or decide not to do anything about them.

Shepard said, "If the committee ignores the requests, there would be a decision as to whether or not the present plans would go into effect. He said that the requests are needed, but that the University would not want to keep qualified students away because of financial matters, which might occur if plans remain on the present self-liquidating basis."

Also included in today's proposals for UNC are requests for a new physical science building.

PUBLICATIONS BOARD ENDORSEMENTS

The Publications Board yesterday announced its endorsement of all three announced candidates for the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel. These candidates include: Chris Farran, Harry Lloyd and Garry Blanchard and Dave Ethridge (as co-editors).

Printers May Lose Payments In NYC

NEW YORK (UPI)—Union Chief Elmer Brown denounced the striking printers' rejection of a new contract in the 101-day-old New York newspaper blackout Monday and raised the possibility of withdrawing strike benefits if the printers fail to come to terms with publishers in a few days.

There was little possibility of the blackout ending before next week at the earliest.

Brown, president of the International Typographical Union (ITU), was plainly irritated because ITU Local 6 turned thumbs down by a narrow margin Sunday on what he described as a "fair settlement" with the publishers.

Publishers and printers reopened negotiations.

"I wouldn't make any book on the printers' getting a better offer from the publishers," Brown said.

He stressed that the international union was reluctant to flex its muscles and force the local to end the dispute, although it is empowered to do so. He said internal "pressure" to end the strike was building.

Brown met with the executive committee of the ITU Monday and said the committee had reached agreements on three "big points"—whether to cut off strike benefits, whether to order a referendum, or whether to order a larger membership meeting to vote on the proposed contract.

"We are withholding making an announcement regarding our decisions for a couple of days," Brown said. "We do not want to put additional pressure on the local union until they have an opportunity to make an attempt to negotiate an improved contract."

However, Brown made it plain that both he and leaders of other newspaper unions thought the possibility of a better contract was unlikely.

Strike leader Bertram A. Powers, president of Local 6, was not present at the executive council discussion. Brown said that he had been unable to contact Powers by telephone.

A spokesman for the ITU local said Powers had no immediate comment. The next step, the spokesman said, would be for Powers and union negotiators to report to the publishers on the rejection. He said this meeting would be held as soon as possible.

Negotiations on new contracts continued between the publishers and other newspaper unions. The photoengravers threatened to go on strike if an agreement was not reached quickly.

The printers' vote to reject the proposed contract Sunday was 1,621 to 1,557 — a margin of 64 votes. There are 11,000 members in the local, including 1,500 retired printers eligible to vote. Only 3,178 did so Sunday.

If the local does not take action within a couple of days, Brown said the international union would "direct" the next move—possibly order a referendum and set a deadline for withdrawal of strike benefits.

"The proposals should have been adopted," Brown said. "I told them that. The executive council considered the assessment program of the ITU in which all members in the nation are assessed 3 per cent to help pay for the New York strike.

"Pressures are mounting up on us. We feel there is some justification for the pressures coming from those who are paying the assessments. And our contracts tell us that practically all other unions consider it (the tentative agreement) a fair settlement. They think it's not possible to get a better contract at this time."

The publishers and union negotiators had agreed on a weekly package increase of $12.63, including an immediate pay raise of $4 and another $4 in the second year.

Blue Law Backer Speaks To Demos

State Senator John R. Jordan, who introduced a Blue Law bill in the General Assembly last week, will speak to the Young Democrats tonight at 7:30 in Gerrard Hall.

His topic will be the "Role of the Democratic Party in North Carolina."

Jordan, who has already announced he will be a candidate for lieutenant governor in 1964, is also expected to speak on some of the issues he will raise in that campaign.

Jordan's Blue Law bill would put a statewide ban on the Sunday sale of specified objects to be named in the law. His bill would not allow local option on the law as a 1961 law did.

The 1961 Blue Law was overruled in the State Supreme Court last year because its prohibition of the sale of specified objects was held to be uncertain and arbitrary by the Court.

Chapel Hill had approved the law under the local option clause, but its passage caused the resignation of several merchants from the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association which had backed its passage.

Senator Jordan, a native of Winston, is a 1942 graduate of UNC and a 1948 graduate of the Law

Wilson Recipient Declines For Marshall Scholar

A General George C. Marshall Scholarship for advanced study in British universities and colleges has been awarded to a UNC senior, Fred Anderson of Rutherfordton.

The Marshall Aid Commemoration Commission in London announced through the British Ambassador in Washington, D. C., the names of 24 American students who have been awarded two-year scholarships in England, in memory of General George C. Marshall, United States Military Chief of Staff in World War II and author of the Marshall Plan for Aid to European and other nations.

Anderson will study at Exeter College, Oxford University, and will study and travel also in other institutions. He will major in jurisprudence, history and philosophy of law.

One previous UNC student studied in England under a Marshall Scholarship. He is Lloyd E. Berry of Houston, Texas, who was graduated in English here in 1958.

The Marshall Scholarships may be renewed one year after the regular two-year scholarship. Anderson was named as a recipient of a Woodrow Wilson grant last week, but has turned it down.

Anderson is the son of Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Anderson of Rutherfordton. He is a Morehead Scholar, a member of the Order of Golden Fleece, the Grail and the Order of the Old Well.

He was in the freshman and sophomore honors program and now is reading for history honors. He is secretary of Phi Beta Kappa.

By special arrangement in the University, Anderson is permitted to pursue an entirely independent curriculum. He attends no classes and takes no examinations. Instead, he reads and writes for graduate credit under direction of three faculty members in English, in languages and in history.

Anderson was chairman of the International Students Board on the campus here and organized the first tour exchange whereby a student from University of Poitiers, France, will come to Chapel Hill, and a UNC student will go to Poitiers. Last year he won the senior class essay on "The University and Its Meaning." He was a political intern last summer in Washington, serving on the staff of the late Congressman Clem Miller of California.

Academic Tour Sponsored By Consolidated University

Dr. Ernest Beal of N. C. State College has room for 135 persons on an 8-week academic tour of Europe next summer.

He will meet with interested juniors, seniors, graduate students or teaching faculty or members of their families in Roland Parker Lounges II and III Thursday night at 7:30 p.m.

Dr. Beal is chairman of a committee recently set up by Consolidated University President William Friday to plan a combination academic-pleasure tour.

Transportation to Frankfurt, Germany, will be by jet from Raleigh-Durham on July 13.

Though a knowledge of German is not prerequisite, as the first three weeks will be spent studying in German-conducted classes.

The following four weeks will be devoted to the arts, history and political economics of Europe and Germany—in classes conducted in English.

During these first seven weeks, the students may live with German families and study at either Bonn, Heidelberg, Mein, Gottingen or Munich universities.

The final week will be spent in Munich, with excursions to Innsbrook, Austria, and Saleburg and a one-day hike to the foot of the Alps.

There will also be travel in connection with the classwork, plus a trip on the Rhine the day prior to departure. Return will be by jet on September 7.

Tentative cost for the trip is $650, which will include transportation, meals, lodging, texts and fees. It is possible that some term arrangements can be established for payment, with $75 down and the balance with interest payable over a two-year period.

Juniors, seniors, graduate students, teaching faculty and their immediate families at the three branches of the Consolidated University are eligible for the tour.

McDevitt And Spearman: A Shotgun Marriage

The leap was too great and the leapers too hesitant, and the University Party, in an exaggerated parody of its old self, last week nominated a Larry McDevitt-Boo Spearman slate for the spring elections.

Several party leaders had hoped, in one great stride, to carry the party out of the clumsy grip of the Old Greeks, and into a firm, recognized position as the all-campus political party. The negation of these hopes came from a series of personal, non-political events, which in the context of political realities, made the McDevitt-Spearman selection necessary.

* * *

The nominations did not bring the head-on clash between New Greeks and Old Greeks, which had been expected by some. Things were worked out behind the scenes, and when the negotiators emerged, they had a unified party — unified with the lesser attributes of both groups.

The New Greeks had supported Spearman and Ford Rowan for president-vice president — in them, they saw a truly all-campus ticket, since Rowan would have been the first non-Greek to win a 'Big Two' nomination in modern history. (In his nomination of Larry McDevitt, Don Curtis said, "Some of my best friends are dorm men," — and he laughed, but no body else did . . .)

Problems arose for the New Greeks: For health reasons Rowan had decided to drop out of school; Spearman's plans concerning the length of his academic residence in Chapel Hill had changed . . .

In the background was vice-president Mike Lawler, the square block who refused to fit in the nice round hole reserved for him by the New Greeks. As the UP convention approached, it became evident that Lawler, who defeated McDevitt last spring, would run for president — and probably would win.

Meanwhile, party members were being warned of the 'dangers' of power politics, and were told that the New Greeks wanted to institute a power elite to run the party. (McDevitt said at the convention, "There is no place for power politics at Carolina" — as if everyone doesn't know the UP has always been in the hands of a 'power elite.')

As the personal and political problems loomed larger and their determination became weaker, the party leaders swallowed their grand designs for the moment, and settled for the McDevitt-Spearman ticket.

* * *

The convention was a strange event. Somehow, the applause was more canned than usual, the speeches more set, the smiles on the faces of party leaders more false — there was the feeling you had seen this all before — that the sheep had been sent to the sacrifice altar before, and nowhere, was there that exuberant, uncontrolled optimism which marks the winning campaign.

So this is the University Party—faltering before its greatest opportunity, taking one step forward and two steps back, with hope for a better future, but with the prospects of a difficult spring. (JC)

Mediocrity & Moral Fibre

We have repeatedly attempted to draw the attention of the campus to the attitudes and actions of a worthy organization called the Society for Indecency to Naked Animals. We feel that, in this age of anxiety and despair, all fine Americans need to belong to some cause. Students should give themselves, totally and unselfishly, to the perpetration of noble ideals.

SINA offers such a fine opportunity to join, to belong and to martyr, one's self that we fail to see how students can ignore this movement.

SINA speaks for the student. This short excerpt from a letter by Clifford Prout (SINA pres.) demonstrates the sincere concern for ideals and truth that is so characteristic of today's younger generation:

"In spite of friendly classroom courses that teach idealistic knowledge, one must become a discerning and practical thinker in order to rise above mass mediocrity; you must seek and learn the truth first hand, so as to be more fully prepared to face and adjust to the outside world which is grim and often unreal. Without a wide variety of mental stimulations your moral fibre is at stake; your destiny, without purpose or direction, becomes vague and your only true identification is perhaps your social security number?" Tar Heel Has 'UP-Slant'?

Why Was Brady's Chosen?

To the Editors,

If the State of North Carolina is dedicatedly against segregation; and if the University of North Carolina shares that policy; then why are the winners of the Sixth Annual Grail Mural Sports Jamboree to be "rewarded with a big steak" at Brady's, an avowedly segregated restaurant?

'Black Court' Defended

To the Editor,

I am shocked by the opinion expressed by an educator in one of our nations most distinguished schools—Harvard. Dean of the Law School Griswold "hits Black absolutism." This article in a recent issue of The Daily Tar Heel, smacks of Yankee cracker barrel conservatism and makes me wonder if the allegations of radical groups such as the Black Muslims are justified after all.

Griswold censures Black for his interpretation of the first amendment to the Constitution which reads, "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof . . ."

The basic controversy is whether this means Congress may not establish religion in the sense of a state church, or whether it (government) should stay out of the realm of religion entirely.

Dr. Griswold wonders why America, as a country of toleration developed from "Christian doctrine and ethics" must give up her history and tradition for this toleration.

I would point out that our founding fathers didn't want to give up their history as Englishmen, but when they received no toleration they were forced to. The basic freedoms of the first ten amendments were an intrinsic part of the union and a guarantee against insufficient toleration. Proper toleration of individual beliefs guarantees "Christian doctrine and ethics."

Dr. Griswold says:

"Does our deep seated tolerance of all religions—or to the same extent, of no religion—require that we give up all religions observance in public activities? Why should it? It is hardly likely that it was entirely accidental that these questions did not even come up before the court in the first 150 years of our Constitutional history."

Perhaps these questions did not come up before the courts, but that is no indication that they were not present. Jefferson, when President, refused to designate a day of thanksgiving or prayer. He also refused to permit services on the property of the University of Virginia, a state supported institution.

The question of the establishment of religion to the founding fathers was related to the sphere of religion, not a specific one or type. Even the tacit agreement in the doctrine of an almighty power is a sphere of religion.

Poor Showing For Concerts

To the Editors'

Having already observed that Kenan Stadium is far larger than Hill Hall, and realizing the low rating which chamber music generally has among students I was not surprised at the poor attendance at chamber concerts throughout the year. Nothing, however, prepared me for the pitiful size of Sunday night's audience—twenty is a generous estimate, and not all were students.

The works played are marvelous, and the quartet performed them excellently. To describe the concert further would be meaningless except to those who already have a love of this type of music.

Chamber music possesses a quality not found in other musical dimensions. People are fond of quoting the symphonies they know by Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, and others, if they know any others. They forget that it is almost impossible to understand a composer unless you are well acquainted with his so-called smaller works. It is in these that he often achieves a kind of intimacy lacking in the larger compositions.

If anyone considers chamber music boring or stuffy then he has obviously missed the delightful wit, the excitement, the tension, the beauty of the music in general, and of the three works by Haydn, Bartok, and Schubert played Sunday evening.

DTH Editors Favor UP

To the Editors,

I believe that in the last week or two that I have begun to notice a definite University Party bias in the Tar Heel. A paper has the right to be biased, but on the edit page and not on the front page as his been the case with the Tar Heel.

In the lead article of the March 15 issue, the headline claims that the Student Party is vieing for only 25 seats in the Student Legislature; whereas, in fact, they have already nominated 35 candidates and have the intention of nominating 15 more to have a full slate. Is it that the editors of the Tar Heel know of 10 candidates of the Student Party who do not intend to vie for their seats in the Legislaure?

In a previous article the SP is criticized for having a lack of contests for party nominations. Nothing is said in this same vein about the UP nominations. Could it be that the Tar Heel is unaware that there was not a single contest for the UP legislative nominations; that there was not even any discussion of the nominations? Or is it that the Tar Heel has a UP bias?

I think that is is high time that the Tar Heel declared itself as to which party it is supporting so that the readers will be able to separate the fact from the propaganda on the front page. Or if this editorializing on the front page is not the fault of the editors, they print an apology and put an end to this practice.

Peace Group Urge Attend

To the Editors,

The members of the Chapel Hill-Durham branch of the Woman's International League for Peace and Freedom, in keeping with its policies, believes "that a vigorous and democratic labor movement is the best safeguard for the rights of workers, and contributes to the best interests of a sound economy . . . We recognize that strikes are often labor's only effective means to obtain redress of legitimate grievances. We believe that negotiation of disputes between labor and management should be based on mutual respect, and both should maintain a strong sence of responsibility to the community.

We urge everyone to attend a meeting on March 20th at Carroll Hall at 8 p.m. when the plight of the miners of Hazard, Kentucky will be discussed by Mr. Behrman Gibson.

Correction

To the Editors,

I alone am responsible for a mistake which I think has occurred in including the Di-Phi's name as signer of a published letter headed "Support Urged for Hazard." The Di-Phi chose to sponsor Mr. Berman Gigson, strike leader from Hazard, Kentucky, on purely educational and not necessarily partisan grounds.

The letter in question was vague in its intent; it urged "attendance and support" of Mr. Gibson's talk, which the Di-Phi endorses. But the Tar Heel heading implied an exhortation to political or financial support, which the Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Society has not endorsed as a body.

A recent letter from the Di-Phi to the Tar Heel made clear that we are sponsoring Mr. Gibson "to hear his point of view." We think to do so is important, and we again urge attendance at his talk. But we have taken no action for or against his cause.

Clerk, Di-Phi

TWO VIEWS ON EDUCATION PLANS

University Must Retain 'One-Ness'

RALEIGH TIMES

There is real danger in the fact that State College partisans seem to have won, in a House Committee anyway, their fight to win separateness for their college in the name-change proposal. The danger is not in the name itself, but in the fact that this brings a real sense of two-ness into a University system where the best interests of all North Carolina demand that there be a genuine sense of one-ness.

The State College partisans, in a real pressure campaign aided by some who don't give a hoot at all about the name of State College, have enough strength in the House Committee on Higher Education to have their institution named "North Carolina State University, the University of North Carolina." Educators and the Carlyle Commission on Higher Education had agreed on the name "North Carolina State, the University of North Carolina at Raleigh."

The name change was, and is, part of a sensible blueprint of the course higher education should take in North Carolina during the crowded and important years just ahead. The name change was asked to emphasize the fact that there must be just one real public University in North Carolina, a Consolidated University composed now of three campuses, in Raleigh, in Chapel Hill, in Greensboro. That one real University was designed in the plans to be the capstone of higher education in North Carolina, to be the real center to which all higher education roads would lead in this State.

That whole plan hinges on the very real necessity for having the very real sense of one-ness in the University. The whole plan of one-ness within the University was designed to make sure that North Carolina would channel her available resources into the most productive areas in the field of higher education. The whole thought of one-ness within the University was designed to see to it that there continued to be the one real University within the public education system. Otherwise, North Carolina would run the real risk of seeing local pride in various areas of the state bring into being a series of so-called regional universities, which would be universities in name only. Such a dilution of resources could bring only a weakening in all the system of higher education in North Carolina.

There are many sincere people who have fought hard for the "North Carolina State University" name for State College. They had their own good, personal reasons for making that fight, and they cannot be condemned for having made it. It should be realized, however, that they have had the aid of people who hate Terry Sanford and who see in this an opportunity to embarrass him, for the name-change recommendations were made by a Commission naed by him. They also have had the aid of some of those who want the Dixie Classic reinstated, not for reasons of helping higher education but simply because they want to see a good holiday show or because they want to improve their own businesses. They also have had the aid of some who have never given up the fight to de-consolidate the Consolidated University. They also have had the aid of those who have contended that President Friday of the Consolidated University has used higher education simply to further non-existent political ambitions. They have also had the support of people who feel that good government centers about cutting budgets and who would set educational brother against educational brother in the full knowledge that such a fight could lead to chances to whittle budgets.

There are all those unworthy things in this fight, and those who must make the final decision must, in fairness to themselves as well as in fairness to all the people of the state, must recognize the presence of those things.

If this name fight is to be lost by the Carlyle Commission, by the University Trustees, by the educators, then so be it. It will be important that all concerned know some of the basic reasons for its loss. It will be more important that all concerned realize the importance of shoring up the rest of the blueprint for higher education, to restore to it as much as possible the sense of one-ness which the University must have if the blueprint is to help North Carolina through the hard educational days ahead.

. . . Unconditional Surrender?

GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS

Rep. Carl L. Bailey Jr., a member of the House Higher Education Committee, remarked Wednesday that 99 per cent of North Carolinians believe the Legislature's omnibus higher education bill involves only name-changing.

This remark pinpoints the tragi-comedy of the matter. If Representative Bailey is right, rank and file Tar Heels have the unparalleled lobbying activities of interested alumni groups to thank for their ignorance. One would think that State College had been "State" longer than Padua has been Padua, or Oxford Oxford.

And the background of this agitation says little for the good faith of the State College alumni faction led by Charles Reynolds of Spindale. A Consolidated University trustee committee, led by Thomas Pearsall, weighed the name-changing issue at length. That committee, acknowledging the vociferous campaign of State College friends against the proposal that State become "the University of North Carolina at Raleigh," asked responsible State alumni to submit a list of alternatives. "North Carolina State, the University of North Carolina at Raleigh" — endorsed if not preferred by Mr. Reynolds — was one of those transmitted to the Pearsall group. The committee accepted it.

But if Mr. Pearsall and the trustees naively thought the matter closed, they did not consider the capacity of the State alumni for changing their minds. In fact, they seemed to change their minds very quickly. That, at least, is a generous interpretation of events. Their endorsement of "North Carolina State, the University of North Carolina at Raleigh" lasted from the day Mr. Pearsall's committee reported till the approximate day the Legislature convened. Then Mr. Reynolds and others buzzed down upon the legislators and began to lobby once again for the original "North Carolina State University" name. To the literal-minded, it may have seemed that the State alumni were running out on an agreement; but that is of course a matter of opinion. It is anyone's prerogative to change his mind.

That omnibus education bill is now due a final hearing Tuesday. There are other vital matters to settle — such as the future of three established community colleges. The name-changing matter continues to dominate the discussion, and the House Higher Education Committee's patience is ebbing. Rep. Roger Kiser of Scotland County told one reporter that he had been "propagandized to death." His exasperation is widely shared. For it seems that interested alumni groups are so bent on ruling or ruining that the whole name-changing project is in danger of death or abuse.

That is too bad. If the Legislature fails to accept these carefully-considered proposals (including the name-changes) to steer the Consolidated University into a new phase of consolidation, it is the sons and daughters of this state, not the graduated alumni who make the racket, who will eventually suffer.

No mistaking it, the name-changes, while not absolutely essential, are vital to the higher education package. Woman's College in Greensboro cannot pursue its new projects in undergraduate and particularly graduate instruction if it cannot be, in name and truth, a full branch of the university.

Nor will Consolidated University officials warm to State College's projected undergraduate liberal arts program unless the alumni pressure groups signify their willingness to be (and be called) part of the University of North Carolina.

The designation "North Carolina State University" is a warrant for separatism, no less. And taxpayers in this state, who realize we will do well to have one first-rate university, let alone two, are not ready to issue such a warrant.

It strikes us that the Pearsall Committee and the Carlyle Commission, after months of hard work, have gone to great lengths to appease Mr. Reynolds and his group.

Is the next step to be unconditional surrender?

UNC took two second places and three honorable mentions last week in the First Annual Student Art Competition sponsored by the Erdahl-Cloyd College Union at N. C. State in Raleigh.

Dick Mandell and Marjorie Schiffman both placed second in paints and drawings, respectively. Miss Schiffman and Margie Crosier also won honorable mentions in paints. Marlene Ginsberg also won an honorable mention in prints.

The contest was conducted for students in the Research Triangle Area.

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophes, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

"Big Four" Seniors Team Up Tonight

A patched up Big Four all-star team will play a Carolinas Conference team in a battle of the senior stars from the Atlantic Coast Conference and the smaller league in the Fifth Annual Boys Home Invitational Basketball Game at High Point tonight.

The correct title for the "Big Four" team would be the Big Four — Minus Duke — Plus Two. Duke's seniors, Art Heyman and Fred Schmidt, will not compete since the Blue Devils are busy with the NCAA playoffs. Scotti Ward of South Carolina and Bill Jarman from Davidson of the Southern Conference will join players from North Carolina, N. C. State and Wake Forest.

UNC's backcourt co-captains, Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet, will play and the team will be coached by Carolina's Dean Smith.

Wake Forest sends Dave Wiedeman and Bob Woollard to High Point and State's squad members will be Ken Rohloff, Jon Speakes, John Key and Jim Whitfield,

The Big Four team is loaded with guards. Brown, Poteet, Rohloff, Speaks, Wiedeman and Ward are all guards. Jarman and Woollard are the only big men. Whitfield is 6-4, but was one of the better jumpers in the ACC.

Western Carolina's Mel Gibson and Gaston Seal lead the Carolinas Conference team. W.C.C. finished second in the NAIA playoffs in Kansas City last week.

The game will be a benefit for the Boys Home at Lake Waccamaw and is sponsored by the High Point Junior Chamber of Commerce. Game time is 8:00 p.m. at the High Point College Gymnasium.

"MILTON'S HAS ARRIVED" AT THE NATIONAL LEVEL AS TRADITIONAL STYLE LEADERS.

We quote from the Feb. 22, 1963 edition of Men's Wear—the leading apparel trade journal—from an interview with Mr. Bill Ullman who came to Chapel Hill to visit with us—

"Strictly from Dixie"

How about the fashion leadership angle? I queried several of the "in" manufacturers on my return and they confirmed the statements of several southeastern college shops that some of today's hot numbers are strictly from Dixie. And that ain't cornpone brother; that's fashion!

I worked up a medium sized sweat because I spotted a few bolder patterned sport jackets on the Yale campus last fall. However, when I visited Milton Julian's store across from the University of North Carolina's campus, I found his stock liberally larded with bold shetlands and he was a bit surprised that I was surprised.

Sport Jacket "Wardrobes"

'Selling them to the old grads?' I asked, drawing on the experience I garnered in the Ivy League shops. 'Sure,' said Milton, 'but just as many to the undergrads.' He explained that the trend to bold—even loud—shetlands and tweeds has been a thing with N. C. students for quite some time. He also pointed out that those well-dressed students, balanced thei rsport jacket 'wardrobes' with solid color camel shades and the smart herringbones. The very important blue blazers he tossed off as 'simply a must.'

Brightly striped reps, only recently reappearing on Ivy campuses, are now staples in the South and he spotted a trend to reps with a good deal of silver in the stripings, that had not yet registered in the North.

He said the best 'bones' in sport jackets were softly shaded tans and browns . . . the very best, a soft olive. Mr. Julian also noted that some bigger bones in black and white were going well, as were some 100% camel hairs.

As far as clothing goes, he noted that the vested suits outsell others three to one.

'Theatre Shirt'

Milton's Clothing Cupboard also sells a little creation called a 'Theatre Shirt'. It is a pleated bosom number with a traditional button-down collar that the boys wear with tuxedos and dressy suits, explained Mr. Julian.

A feature of the Cupboard decor is a 2/3 scale reproduction of the white pillared, gold domed 'Old Well,' a campus landmark. Located at the rear of the store, it serves as the entrance to the small ladies' department."

If you'd like to see some of our fabulous new pace-setting ideas, won't you drop by at your earliest convenience while our spring stocks sparkle?

Lee Shaffer To Instruct Youngsters

RALEIGH — Two of professional basketball's top stars, Lee Shaffer of the Syracuse Nats and Frank Ramsey of the Boston Celtics, will be instructors at the 7th annual Everett Case Basketball School for Boys this June.

Shaffer, who gained all-America honors while playing for the University of North Carolina Tar Heels in 1959, is currently one of NBA's hottest scorers as Syracuse gets set to battle Boston and Ramsey in the Eastern Division playoffs.

Ramsey was an all-America at Kentucky and was a lecturer at the school a year ago.

Also assisting Case in his school, which runs from June 2 to June 21 at the N. C. State Fairgrounds, will be State assistants Press Maravich and Lou Pucillo, as well as some of the Wolfpack's current players.

A feature of the Case School is that the youngsters are broken down into age groups, with drills and fundamentals fit to their level. The junior boys, 9 to 11, are in one group, while boys 12-14 are in the intermediate bracket, with the senior boys, 15 and over, working together.

There will be three weekly sessions, June 2-7; June 9-14; and June 16-21, and two two-week sessions, June 2-14 and June 9-21.

Football Investigation Continues As Burnett Gives Full Support

ATLANTA (UPI)—An insurance man who said he overheard a telephone call that touched off reports that the 1962 Alabama-Georgia football game was rigged promised Monday to cooperate fully with the state and federal investigators looking into the charge.

George Burnett of Atlanta issued a terse statement in which he said:

—He was motivated only by "an impulsive desire that the truth be known" when he reported overhearing the call betwen former Georgia Athletic Director Wallace Butts and Alabama coach Paul (Bear) Bryant.

—He felt the "truth will be eventually told in full" after the "competent investigators" assigned to look into the charge finish their work.

Both Deny Charges

Both Butts, who resigned last month after 25 years at Georgia, and Bryant, whose team won the 1961 national championship, have denied the allegation contained in the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

Georgia Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook opened one phase of the investigation Monday with a preliminary conference with Cook Barwick, attorney for the Georgia athletic board.

Cook said he intended to question Butts, Bryant, Burnett, present Georgia football coach Johnny Griffith and other officials of the two universities.

Southeastern Conference Commissioner Bernie Moore also is investigating the charge. The FBI has said it has made "preliminary inquiries" into the case and a spokesman said the Senate rackets subcommittee would look into the charge that fell on the 12-member SEC like a bombshell.

Burnett, father of seven children, including a son who is a plebe at the U. S. Military Academy, issued his statement through his attorney, Pierre Howard, then went to an Atlanta television station to tape his remarks for broadcast.

Says Plays Revealed

Burnett is quoted in the magazine article as saying he overheard Butts outlining Georgia's offensive plays and other secrets to Bryant prior to the Sept. 22 game which Alabama won 35-0.

Burnett said after hearing the conversation by accident he reported it to Robert Edwards of Atlanta, a friend, who in turn gave the information to Griffith, who succeeded Butts as head coach at Georgia in 1961 and University of Georgia officials.

Butts cited business and personal reasons in resigning as athletic director. His attorney was reported preparing a $10 million libel suit Monday to file against the magazine.

Hoehn Keeps No. 2 Position

By LOUIS LEGUM

According to the rules book, which most sports seem to cherish for some inexplicable reason, points in a tennis match aren't awarded to the player who can slam his racket onto the surface most energetically or let out the most mournful wail of disgust.

Yet on the courts yesterday afternoon in the second round of the intra-squad challenge matches, some of Coach Skakle's players would gladly have taken points on the basis of their personal dissatisfaction. It was just one of those days in opening practice when more than the usual number of careless mistakes were made, alternating with a sizable number of brilliant shots.

A good example was the challenge between number two player Ted Hoehn and number three Bitsy Harrison. Both contestants had their bold serves working well in the hot March sun. For each server it was simply a matter of slamming the serve over, rushing up to the net, and putting a hesitant service return into the backyard of Cobb Dorm.

But it didn't work that easily, at least for the somewhat pained Mr. Harrison. Too many of his serves were unable to intimidate Hoehn, and too often one of Hoehn's returns would nastily pass by the charging Harrison. When Harrison was finally able to gain the net with some authority, a relatively simply volley would drop into the cords or burst wildly out of bounds.

Hoehn was a little more fortunate in his offensive maneuvers. His crisp serve, much stronger than usual, got vital assistance from his ability to take advantage of staying at the net. The result was a 6-1, 6-4 victory for Hoehn.

Charlie Shaffer and Keith Stoneman more or less followed the same script in their aggressive style of play. However, there was a bit more drama on the number two court, as Shaffer grabbed the number five post from Stoneman with an exciting 6-4, 14-12 victory.

Again it was a matter of two strong serves and stronger net games. When things were working, both players experienced a minimal amount of trouble in holding service. But it was Stoneman's misfortune to be the more susceptible to errors. The match was punctuated at important moments by a leaping, crashing overhead (the style, a hangover from the basketball season) administered by Shaffer. Thus, in the 25th game of the second set, Stoneman's service was broken by the very determined Shaffer, and that was the match.

If O. H. Parrish does it once more, it's going to get almost boring. For the second consecutive match he choked off his staggered opponent without giving up a point. This time the victim was Pete Myers, who surrendered his number six post to Parrish with more of a whimper than a bang. The 6-0, 6-0 score was the product of Parrish's usual game of aggressive, relentless play, particularly at the net.

In a couple of other interesting and intensely fought matches, Joe Polin rallied in the third set to block Kirby Jones' aspirations of advancement, 6-2, 2-6, 6-3. Jim Talbot was generous enough to hand Stan Cocke the first set, 6-1, but to Cocke's disappointment, that's all he was able to get, as Talbot took the final two sets to win the match, 6-3, 9-7.

Don Long, new on the Carolina courts wrapped up his second win in a row as he defeated John Schlacter, 7-5, 6-3. Sam Applegate had even less trouble in gliding to a 7-5, 6-1 victory over George Zimmerman.

Wednesday will be the last day for challenge matches before the first team encounter with Dartmouth Friday and Saturday. The feature matches Wednesday will be Sokol—Hoehn, Harrison—Shaffer, and Parrish—Stoneman.

Delta Sigs Break Mural Bowling Mark

Carolina's bowlers are knocking down pins more often than ever this year. Already four teams have thrown for a 2,000 or better total in all-campus competition.

Last Thursday the Delta Sig A's set a new record pinfall for one team when they defeated the Avery Avengers, 2111-1777. The previous record was held by Beta in a March 9, 1962, contest when they topped Phi Gam, 2079-1966. Allen Clay's 640 series led Delta Sig.

The Beta-Phi Gam total of 4045 remains a record high for two teams.

Other teams bowling over 2000 sets have been Navy (2045), Ruffin Blue (2015), and Teague (2004). Navy and TEP came close to the two team record in their contest as TEP rolled a 1904 game for a 3949 total.

A full week of badminton competition is on tap this week as 54 games are scheduled. In the dormitory division 34 teams remain in contention for hte title with defending champ Alexander in the thick of the race.

IFC Will Try Individual, Not House, For Misconduct

The Interfraternity Council passed an amendment to its Constitution on Monday night that will give the IFC court the power to try individual cases.

The amendment, which was passed by a vote of 18-6, contains four major provisions. The first will allow the IFC court to try individuals where it could only try fraternities as a whole before.

The second provision enables the court to decide whether the individual or the fraternity is at fault in a particular case. The third provision grants the court the privilege of passing a case on to the Honor Council when necessary. The 1st provision gives the court the discretion of punishment. An amendment to this provision, introduced by Dave Reyonlds for the court and passed by the body, states that the limit of the punishment that the court can mete is a $25 fine and an official reprimand.

This amendment to the Constitution was prompted by the new rule, recently adopted by the IFC prohibiting scholastic inactives from participating in fraternity functions. In this new situation fraternities would have been liable to punishment if any inactive was at the house for any fraternity function.

Brooks Emory, chairman of the IDC court, announced at the meeting that "The court will make every effort to ensure that all IFC regulations will be strictly enforced."

A questionnaire was also distributed at the meeting which will be given to every fraternity member. The purpose of this questionnaire, drawn up by the Office of Student Affairs, is to discover the "value" of the fraternity system, as seen by the individual member. The findings of this questionnaire will be published by the IFC in booklet at a later time.

Dan Moore Chosen New GM President

Dan Moore, a junior from Spartanburg, S. C., was named as president of Graham Memorial for the year 1963-64, Bob Rearden, present president of GM, announced yesterday.

Vice-president of GM and president of Winston Dorm, Moore is a history major with an all-over overage of 3.0. He is also a member of IDC, Consolidated University Student Council, and the Honor System Commission.

He has been associated with student government for three years and worked in various capacities at Graham Memorial for two years.

Rearden said yesterday, "I can speak very highly of Dan's qualifications. His two years of extensive experience with GM and his organizational ability will assure a highly successful year for GM in 1963-64."

Moore reported that "There are always many problems to be solved in an organization of this size. An extremely important aspect of Student Union work is the relationship between members of the various committees. Next year I hope to set up a program that will enable better communication between the various committees."

Know-Nothings Win Over Ruffin Dorm

The winning team of Bob Spearman, Walter Dellinger, Mickey Simmons and Henry Mayer trailed 50 to 5 in the opening minutes before a strong recovery gave them a 190-115 half-time advantage. An especially strong second half sparked the "Know-Nothings" to their final win of 440-200.

Hugo Spechan, Les Bailey, Bill Griffith and Tom Diners composed the Ruffin team.

The series of matches, based on the GE College Quiz Bowl seen on CBS-TV, features academic competition based on a quick recall of facts on almost every subject.

Dr. John S. Clayton, associate professor of radio, television, and motion pictures at UNC, acted as moderator. The matches last one hour with a ten-minute intermission. The teams compete for points by attempting to answer ten point toss-up questions, which if answered correctly allows them to attempt bonus questions worth a stated number of points.

The series is being sponsored by the Junior Class Scholarship Committee and is expected to run until late spring.

The Know-Nothings will place their winning streak on the line this week against a team from the TEP fraternity, winners last week over a DU team.

Freshman Dorm Idea To Be Junked

The University definitely will steer away from all-freshman dormitories after the failure of such experiments this year, William Long, dean of men, reports.

The all-freshmen dorms were reported as spectacularly high in property damages and noisy disturbances.

The experiment was instituted last fall strictly as an experiment and every effort was made to make it work.

And it is not that the youngsters were uncontrollable, but they were worse than others. "It is a relative thing," said Long. Upperclassmen have a positive effect on freshmen, he reported.

Grimes, one of the two dormitories involved in the experiment, had five times the property damage of similar nearby dorms housing mostly upperclassmen. The other freshman dormitory, Ehringhaus, had a rate two and two-thirds higher than a comparable dorm.

While damages in these dorms were spectacularly higher, overall damage to dorms is down thus far this year, said Long.

Tentative plans call for eight non-freshmen dorms, but all others will have a cross-section of the student body this fall.

Boyish exhuberance, expressed in water battles and shaving cream fights have led to "unsettled" conditions in the two dormitories. No one has been suspended for dormitory rowdiness and only two cases in the freshmen dorms have been serious enough to be brought before student disciplinary councils.

Housing Director James Wadsworth said "I think a roommate can have enough influence to help a boy make Phi Beta Kappa or flunk out, depending on how easily influenced he is."

Boys who know each other well, perhaps coming from the same high school or town, tend to be more noisy among themselves than with strangers, especially with awe-inspiring upperclassmen, said Wadsworth.

Long feels all freshmen dorms tend to perpetuate adolescence rather than maturity. Dean Henderson noted a freshman's first semester is a difficult period of adjustment. "We've taken the freshmen through the toughest part of the year. Let's see what happens now."

Henderson finds an encouraging decline in the campus noise this spring. He also thinks noisemakers often are students who do not apply themselves and therefore drop out of school at mid-year.

Med School Open House

The School of Medicine will hold an Open House on Saturday, March 23, for advanced pre-medical students interested in medicine as a career. Short talks by members of the faculty and student body, and a tour of the Medical School, will be followed by lunch in the Hospital cafeteria.

In addition to a visit to patient areas and student laboratories of North Carolina Memorial Hospital, the tour will include demonstrations in Neurophysiology, of the Elcteron microscope, and of a Recording Spectrophotometer.

Invitations have been mailed to pre-medical students who have not previously attended an Open House. Students and faculty advisers who did not receive an invitation and who would like to attend, may call the Dean's Office of the Medical School for information.

Men Orientation Counselors Will Be Selected Soon

Men Orientation Counselors will be picked next week, Chairman Archie Davis announced yesterday.

Interviews will be held in Graham Memorial from Monday through Friday, March 25-29, from 2 until 6 p.m. All applicants are requested to obtain applications from the Graham Memorial office, Scuttlebut, Y-Court and the Reserve Reading Room and then sign up for an interview in the Office of GM. Applicants are requested to bring their application blanks with them to the interview.

Davis stressed the need for 220 Men Orientation Counselors who would be willing to return to school next fall, September 15. All persons intersted in applying for Orientation Counselor must have a 'C' average and plan to be in school next fall.

There will be four training sessions for those picked as Orientation Counselors which will be spaced out from the time of selection until the end of school this spring.

Poverty, Injustice Temper Josh White's Singing Style

By R. LEE FERRELL

He faces the microphone, eyes shut tightly and deep wrinkles of concentration on his face. Fingers glide across six guitar strings.

A voice as intimte as a carress electrifies the audience.

Josh White is singing.

Born in Greenville, South Carolina, Joshua Daniel White served a long, tough apprenticeship in the deep South. His family was poverty-stricken, and as a child he knew the pains of hunger in his belly and the discomfort of winter rains on his bare feet.

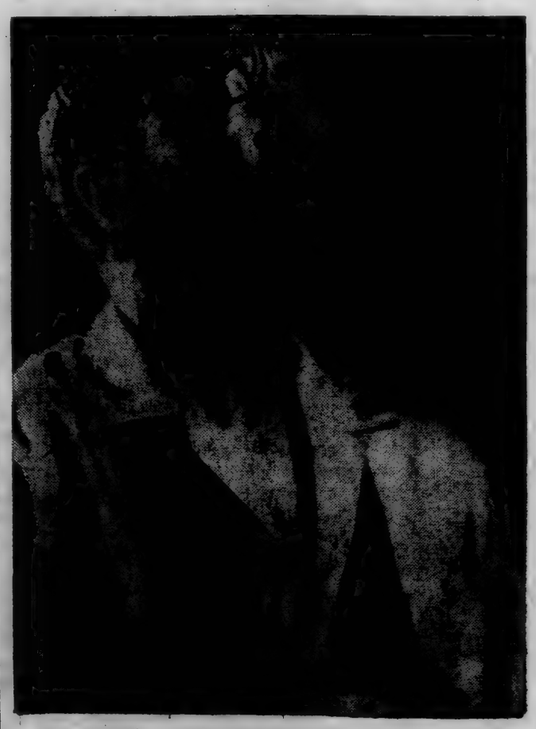
Josh found his first job at the age of seven. He lead blind street singers from one corner to the next.

When he was nine he had seen several lynchings and traveled the "Glory Road," as he calls it, from Macon to Louisville, Natchez to Nashville.

Some of the singers Josh met were truly masters of their instrumental and vocal music. They were cruel, embittered by fate, and they carefully guarded the secrets of the subtle and intricate guitar techniques. But Josh would watch and listen closely, then sneak away to practice what he had observed. He drew from all the great street singers of the period—Blind Blake, Blind Lemon Jefferson and Blind Joe Taggart.

He incorporated into his playing what he liked from each singer he heard. The result is a guitar style which is sensuous and brilliant.

Josh White became great through a little luck and much determination. No example could be told without twist. After he had his first big break in recording and bookings were beginning to look encouraging, Josh cut his right hand on a jagged milk bottle top. The cut was severe, and doctors wanted to amputate three fingers.



His guitar style requires the use of all fingers, in contrast to many modern folk musicians who use tortoise-shell picks. Josh would not consent to the operation. Taking a job as an elevator operator, he began nursing his paralyzed hand back to health. It took four long years, but he finally regained his accomplished guitar technique.

On Friday, March 29 at eight p.m., Josh will bring his songs and guitar to a UNC audience in Memorial Hall. His songs will be of joy and sadness, fostered by long years of experience.

As he has been throughout the western world, he will once again be recognized as the perceptive artist and versatile craftsman he is.

What is his theme?

Josh said, "Better than most people . . . I know the blemishes on American civilization. But a folk singer, it seems to me, is the voice and conscience of his time and audience. He tries to put into words and music what those around him feel. This I shall continue to do, with God's help, as long as there is suffering and discrimination around me and freedom and equality to be won."

Writer-In-Residence Plan Going Well Says Stallings

Chances for obtaining a writer-in-residence at Carolina appear good, according to replies to feeler letters sent out by Gil Stallings, head of the Writer-in-Residence program.

Although the resident artist would not be assigned a particular class, he would conduct seminars, lead discussion groups and essentially generate interest in his field.

Stallings, working with the administration and a faculty committee, has drawn up a list of the outstanding men in their particular area. The replies from Stallings' letters have been favorable and a Writer-in-Residence should be selected in the near future.

Those faculty members composing the faculty committee are Walter Spearman of the Journalism School and Ralph Dennis and John Clayton of the Radio, TV and Motion Picture department.

This afternoon at 3 p.m. in the Y building there will be a meeting of all those students interested in participating in the Writer-in-Residence program. The meeting is open to members of all four classes. Stallings has encouraged all those freshmen, sophomores and juniors who are at all interested to try and attend the meeting since a great many members of this year's committee will be graduating.

Faculty Skit Previewed; Friday Holds Star Role

By JOHN DOYLE

Bullets fly, white lightning gushes and song rolls forth Thursday night at eight o'clock in Memorial Hall.

It's the scene of the catastrophe of the semester known as the "Faculty Variety Show." The one-hour drama (?), written and sponsored by the Junior class, features an all-star cast of twenty composed of UNC's own faculty members.

The house lights dim, the curtains part and there is a typical Carolina student studying and watching TV—but wait! That's not really a student. It's President Friday!

The TV spoof continues with Chancellor House getting into a gun battle in "Paladin" and Otelia Connor (the only), as Grandma of the "Beverly Hillbillies", making her own brew in her own still. And then when she — nope, better save that for Thursday.

And that's about half of it! The show's not supposed to look professional. It's only been rehearsed twice.

The object of this money raising project of the Jr. class is simply to have fun (if not scandal) with faculty members. At just $.50 apiece for townspeople and students alike, it'll be hard to pass up the Faculty Variety Show, Thursday night, 8:00 p.m, Memorial Hall.

3 Sophomores, 10 Juniors Are Selected

Thirteen students were initiated in the Order of the Grail in pre-dawn ceremonies this morning.

The Order of the Grail is the highest undergraduate men's honorary.

The new Knights are Charles Henry Battle, Miami, Fla.; Archibald Hilliard Davis, Winston-Salem; Harry Leonard DeLung Jr., Atlanta, Ga., and Harry Whitney Durand, Lookout Mountain, Tenn.

Also: Robert Nelson Peery Jr., Newton; Charles Milton Shaffer Jr., Chapel Hill; Robert Walter Spearman, Chapel Hill, and Trawick Hamilton Stubbs, Atlanta, Ga.

The Order of the Grail was established in 1920 as a means of recognizing outstanding men of the University who exemplify the virtue of leadership as characterized by the four cardinal goals the Grail symbolizes: friendship, truth, courage, and service.

The specific problem which inspired the formation of the order was the growing awareness on the part of the founders of a serious lack of unity on the Carolina campus.

It was felt that growing antagonism between fraternity and dormitory men was impairing the effectiveness of united campus efforts.

The membership of the Order was thus divided between dormitory and fraternity men as a means of providing a representative group qualified to discuss the problem and to attempt to find a solution.

This year the Order has sponsored a number of activities in an attempt to bring the groups closer together including a pre-Christmas Holiday basketball tournament, campus-wide dances, and the annual Grail Mural sports jamboree.

Writer-In-Residence: A Possible Student Success

In the context of a student government only rarely successful, those who have worked with the Writer-In-Residence program have done (so far) a successful job. Their efforts are to be congratulated.

As it now stands, the committee "anticipates acceptance" of its offer of residence, by a young author. If he accepts he will be in Chapel Hill for a semester or a year; he will be available to work with graduate seminars, with Honors programs and academic discussion groups. He probably will give one or two campus addresses on writing and literature. He will teach no courses. His work is designed to "complement," not replace students' present curriculum.

This program has been evolved from initial proposals by a YMCA committee, under the leadership of Gil Stallings. The Y group has worked with faculty members and the administration in formulating their program. The writer's salary will be paid by the University through the English department.

Initiative for the Writer-In-Residence came from Mike Lawler's campaign for vice-president last spring, and was followed through by a Student Legislature resolution last year. Because the Y had the personnel and the willingness to do the planning and exploratory work for the program, Stallings took over.

* * *

The program, as it now stands, is admirable, for several reasons:

—The writer is not burdened with an oppressive amount of work, which would keep him from doing his own writing and from effectively working with students at an informal level. The elimination of original proposals to have the writer teach undergraduate literature or writing courses is good, too—this would greatly restrict his overall effectiveness, and blunt the very meaning of having a writer in residence.

—Direction for the program, for the next year, and for its continuance, lies with students. Funds come from the University and the faculty has consulted with students working on the program—but the vital direction and selection, as well as the original initiative, has come from students.

—The University, faculty, administration and students have worked together to bring a young writer to Chapel Hill. This, hopefully, will help spark a more lively interest in the creative arts, providing a chance for interested students to talk and work with a man in the peak of his creative years.

* * *

Some faculty and administrators have said student interest in the Writer-In-Residence program is, overall, low. So far most of the work has been done by a few individuals.

There will be a meeting today at 3 in the Y for those students interested in working with the program. There is still much work to be done, and we hope there will be a large student turnout to show student interest and to help in this major, worthwhile program. (JC)

'Amicable, Satisfactory'

A cloud of confusion has surrounded the Rialto Theatre in Durham for the past month. During that time the local NAACP-CORE chapters negotiated for the theatre's desegregation and, that failing, picketed it for two weeks.

Pickets were withdrawn last week after negotiations between theatre owner Maggie Dent and the integrationist groups. She said, "amicable and satisfactory arrangements for integrating the theatre have been made."

The NAACP-CORE, long dissatisfied with Miss Dent's position, are now satisfied. We hope those who supported their picket are satisfied.

Now the situation is that the Rialto is on weak financial grounds—the uncertainty and picketing of the past month have hurt the theatre. The concern is that there should be a theatre to be desegregated—an open theatre.

The Rialto now cannot be allowed to fold because of confusion remaining from the picketing episode, or for any other reason. The only art theatre in the area, showing consistently fine-quality films needs, and deserves patronage. (JC)

Hazard

A spokesman for the striking miners of Hazard, Kentucky will speak here tonight at 8 in Carroll Hall.

Berman Gibson, a former union representative for the coal miners, will attempt to explain the complicated issues behind the long, controversial, "wildcat" strike.

The Hazard situation has implications for labor and management relations everywhere, as well as the future of labor unions in automated industries—and we urge student attendance at the speech.

"It's called 'Grand Design'"

Says New Republic

Fed. Aid To Catholic Schools Legal

The New Republic

Sixty-four years ago the Supreme Court handed down a decision in the Providence Hospital Case (Bradfield v. Roberts) which every commentator on federal aid to education could profitably reread. Mr. Bradfield had gone into court to enjoin the Commissioners of the District of Columbia from financing an isolation ward for a hospital run by the Catholic Sisters of Charity. This ward was to be turned over to the Sisters on two conditions: that two-thirds of its beds be reserved for charity patients sent (and partially paid for) by the Commissioners, and that the private patients occupying the other beds be free to choose their own doctors and nurses. Mr. Bradfield argued that to give money to the Sisters of Charity to run a hospital was to violate the First Amendment by creating "an establishment of religion."

The Court unanimously disagreed. "Whether the individuals who compose the corporation under its charter happen to be all Roman Catholics, or all Methodists or Presbyterians or Unitarians or members of any other religious organization, or of no organization at all, is not of the slightest consequence with reference to the law of its incorporation, nor can the individual beliefs upon religious matters of the various incorporators be inquired into. Nor is it material that the hospital may be conducted under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Church . . . The meaning of the allegation is that the church exercises great and perhaps, controlling influence over the management of the hospital. It must, however, be managed, pursuant to the law of its being."

This opinion is relevant to the view expressed in the New Republic three weeks ago that the federal government might constitutionally subsidize secular instruction in church-related schools. So long as such a school is "managed pursuant to the law of its being" — so long, that is, as the school offers truly secular instruction in any subjects for which it receives state or Federal subsidies, can not a cogent case be made out for the constitutionality of such subsidies? Many readers have felt not.

FOR ONE thing, they have claimed that there is no such thing as "secular instruction" in the only church-related system which counts statistically in the United States, namely the Catholic system. (Of 46 million elementary and secondary school children in the US, about 85 percent are in public schools, 13 percent in Catholic parochial school, one percent in Protestant and Jewish schools, and one percent in "independent" schools.) All instruction in Catholic schools, it is argued, is, as a matter of principle, subordinated to the claims of Catholic thought; as a result, there is no analogy with a Catholic hospital, which treats 99 patients out of 100 (miscarriages, and cases requiring sterilization are sometimes exceptions) exactly as a public hospital would. In a great many instances, one is told, Catholic schools educate their pupils differently from public schools. Instruction in what are called "secular subjects" (chemistry, foreign languages, English, mathematics) could therefore only be brought into harmony with the secular standards which it is the duty of public authorities to promote if Catholic schools were to compromise what they now conceive to be their principles.

Why not put this theory to the test? If Catholics had reason to believe that by reorganizing parochial instruction they could get public subsidies for their schools, might they not do it? There is no good reason, for example, why Catholic schools have to employ only Catholics. Catholic colleges go outside the church for faculty. Likewise, there is nothing in Catholic dogma which precludes the presentation of divergent views about such questions as the origins of the universe, or the meaning of 16th Century European history in parochial school classrooms. Catholic students are often exposed to such diversity in college; why not before?

Let us repeat: we do not believe that the public can or should subsidize any form of parochial school instruction which does not seek to present the full range of academically respectable opinion on controversial issues — though presumably no school is required to present such theories as that the moon is made of green cheese. How such diversity is best assured remains a matter for discussion. Criteria need to be devised which are simple and easily enforced. Otherwise the result might be endless local bickering about what is secular and what is religious. But suppose for example, that the government were to subsidize only those educational programs which employed textbooks also used in the public schools? Or suppose that parochial schools seeking subsidies for a particular program had to show that in hiring teachers for that program they did not discriminate against non-Catholics?

Would the Catholic hierarchy accept such requirements, or any others which would ensure that where secular and Catholic standards of instruction conflict, secular standards would prevail? We don't know. Perhaps the hierarchy itself doesn't know. Certainly there is a difference of opinion among our Catholic reads. Nevertheless without such controls public aid would be unjustified and probably unconstitutional, for it would leave the Catholic hierarchy free to spend public funds in any way it saw fit, including the teaching of religious doctrines in the guise of history, physics or literature.

NOT ALL the critics of our proposals on church-related schools are worried about creating "an establishment of religion," however, or about possible violations of the Constitution. A few are merely disturbed by the possibility that in allowing church-related schools to compete on a more equal footing with public schools, irreparable damage might be done to the latter. As one of our readers said in the Correspondence Columns last week, an increase in state aid to private schools (whether church-related or secular) might accelerate segregation of pupils according to academic ability.

Let us consider the point. There is already a tendency among education-conscious parents to seek out schools in which the majority of pupils are being prepared for college. For some of the more prosperous parents this means sending a child to private school. For many others it means moving to a middle-class suburb. Whatever the means, the end is the same: to make sure that Johnny or Mary do not have to sit in the same class with children who hate the teacher, disrupt the class, and slow down academic progress.

The parochial schools do not, at present, go very far towards satisfying this middle-class educational ambition. Most are more socially heterogeneous than their public counterparts, especially at the elementary level, for they usually serve a larger geographic area. Few are restricted to an academic or social elite.

Nevertheless, parochial school children who cause serious trouble, either because they are very slow learners or because they don't accept the social restrictions imposed by most of these schools, can be shunted into the public schools (which must accept them) and often are. This is one reason why the parochial schools often have a more studious and disciplined atmosphere than the public schools.

If state subsidies and state standards were to bring parochial school instruction in secular subjects up to the level of the better public schools (classes in Catholic schools are now believed to average more than 20 percent larger than classes in public schools), they might tend to become elite institutions. If state subsidies allowed private secular schools to reduce their tuition or offer more scholarships, they too might attract many college-bound students now enrolled in public schools.

SUCH A development looks less alarming, however, when one asks what it might mean to particular schools. It is hard to believe, for example, that many parents in Scarsdale or Evanston or Pasadena will send their children to private schools, no matter how cheap they become, so long as the Scarsdale and Evanston and Pasadena public schools continue to provide a primarily college-oriented curriculum and so long as they remain almost entirely restricted to middle-class students. If more academically-oriented Catholic children in a typical slum are sent to parochial schools instead of public ones (because discipline is tighter and troublemakers easily eliminated, or because academically standards are higher) it is difficult to believe that this is really a great loss to the public school. Too few slum children are academically-oriented in the first place for their disappearance to matter greatly to the rest.

Likewise, the possibility of getting limited state subsidies is unlikely to mean the creation of many private or parochial schools in what is left of small-town America, for such towns would be too poor—even with state or federal subsidies—to finance more than one good school. Only a relatively large school can afford such things as remedial reading teachers, physics labs and fancy gymnasiums; and even in small towns most parents now want these perquisites.

The main impact of state aid to private and parochial schools would be on the medium sized towns and the more heterogeneous parts of the big cities, where public schools now serve both the college-bound and the dropouts. If substantial numbers of more ambitious students were siphoned out of the public schools into private or parochial ones, student culture in these public schools might change for the worse, and recruiting able teachers might grow tougher. But the harm this would do the pupils who remained in these schools ought to be weighed carefully against the advantages to the student who went to better schools.

In this entire discussion, there are two things of which we are reasonably certain: first, that poor education, whatever its auspices, is intolerable, and second, that rhetorical exchanges which invoke but do not carefully scrutinize the principle of church-state separation will not help improve the quality of American education.

"No principle, such as the separation of church and state," Reinhold Niebuhr has said, "is not subject to amendment in the light of new development. The particular developments which challenge this principle are two. On the one hand, the realization that absolute separation leads to the secularization of our culture, and that on the other hand the modern state with its wide taxing powers can not so easily be separated from any vital aspect of community concern as the fathers assumed." Even if one does not fear the first of these developments, it is important to recognize the second.

The Artists And The Commissars... A Liberalizing?

By Gleb Struve
Current Magazine

Professor Struve is professor of Slavic Languages and Literatures in the University of California at Berkeley and joint editor of the first edition of Boris Pasternak's Collected Works in Russian.

There can be no doubt that a clearcut division, among Soviet men of letters, into 'liberals' and 'reactionaries' exists today, the reactionaries being commonly known as 'the Black Hundred.' There are, however, reasons to suspect that to some extent this division is fostered by the government for its own ends: it enable the Party to alternate its pulls and brakes. . . .

To what extent were 'liberal' hopes —based on the publication of Evtushenko's and Solzhenitsyn's pieces — justified? It is, I think, first of all necessary to draw a sharp distinction between Evtushenko's poem and Solzhenitsyn's story. Evtushenko is one of the recent minor additions to the already rich realm of Soviet mythology. Though certainly not devoid of poetic talent and vitality, he has been greatly overpraised and overrated as a poet, while his reputation as the Soviet equivalent of an Angry Young Man is the combined result of carefully directed Communist publicity and naive wishful thinking, so widespread in the free world. His poem about "Stalin's heirs" is just another specimen of that new 'social command' which marked in literature the latest phase of deStalinization decreed by Khrushchev at the 22nd Party Congress. A further debunking of Stalin and an exposure of the worst evils of his regime, of which Khrushchev himself was an active accomplice, is needed by Khrushchev to enhance his own prestige and create an image of himself as a kind of 'liberator.' . . .

Alexander Solzhenitsyn's One Day of Ivan Denisovich is a totally different matter. . . . For the Westerner who has read many firsthand accounts of Soviet labor camps there are no revelations in Solzhenitsyn's story. It merely confirms—and does so with great artistic effectiveness — what was long known. Nor was it probably new to a great many Soviet readers: even among the Soviet intelligentsia there are a number of people who went through all this. What was new was the chance of reading it in a well-known Soviet magazine and of discussing it freely. Private reports from Moscow say that the entire 'liberal' faction of Soviet literary community has hailed the story as a symbol and a hopeful omen.

So far, however, there have been very few reactions in print. One of the first was an article by Konstantin Simonov in Izvestia (November 18). Coming from Simonov, a noted timeserver . . . many of the things he said must have sounded as somewhat hypocritical. He welcomed the story as the final and incontrovertible revelation of the 'black and bitter truth' about the iniquities of Stalin's reign of terror. It is significant, however, that Solzhenitsyn himself never mentions Stalin by name (one of the characters on one occasion refers to 'the big mustachio'd one'); nor are there any hackneyed references to the 'cult of personality.' But, scattered here and there throughout the story, are remarks and observations which may make a thoughtful reader question some of the basic premises of the Communist experiment and of the Soviet regime.

Whether Khrushchev's surprising permissiveness with regard to Solzhenitsyn will give rise to a new crop of works exposing the evils of Stalinism is difficult to say.

Letter

Stop Whistlin' Dixie, Clyde

To the Editors,

It was about two years ago that I found the need to attack one of Mr. Wilson's "letters to the editor." In this first letter "Dear Ole" Clyde found it necessary to attack, among other things, the tastes of New Yorkers. I promptly replied and told him not to judge things by daily life in the booming metropolis of Greensboro. I also gave him some other advice concerning "planting grits!" I now find it necessary once more to clear up a few things for this uninformed young man's opinions.

First of all he stated that there were thousands of educated idiots walking around New York. Well, out of fifteen million people I feel this is a pretty low percentage. The thousands of educated idiots walking around North Carolina composes a much more impressive percentage! Concerning his comment that these so-called idiots think it is a common occurrence for southern females to seduce Negro men, this is not so. He must admit that a thing like this might happen, and in actuality, occasionally does. This is all that was said in the movie, but of course Mr. Wilson had to exaggerate the situation. His comment about the Harvard Ph. D.'s was also quite amusing. Of course, he is above them because he is an undergraduate at UNC. They know nothing and merely waste their time. Perhaps Clyde is jealous that he could not also be wasting his time at this mediocre institution of the Great North! As for my advice to you, Mr. Wilson, read this. Stop walking around whistling "Dixie" and stop clinging to your southern tradition (in other words — don't be such a grit!) Try to see things more clearly — and thus, correctly. You definitely have some potential.

Richard King Wins Grant For Teachers

Richard King, a UNC senior from Chattanooga, Tenn., is the recipient of the Danforth Scholarship, which finances the cost of graduate study in any American University for three years. He was one of the five nominees from Carolina for the award.

King is an American History major reading for honors. He is in the Order of the Grail, the YMCA and the Wesley Foundation. During his freshman year he was in the Phi Eta Sigma honor fraternity and participated in the Freshman-Sophomore Honors Program.

King has applied to Yale for his graduate study.

The Danforth Scholarship, given by the Danforth Foundation in St. Louis, Mo., is given to outstanding students who plan to go into the teaching field.

Sanford Relates Plan For Stadium At N. C. State

RALEIGH (UPI) — Gov. Terry Sanford disclosed a plan today to build a new stadium at N. C. State College would be submitted to the trustees of the Consolidated University of North Carolina and the Legislature.

Sanford, at his news conference, said he was not able to reveal the approximate cost at this time but he said the plan called for the stadium to be financed by self-liquidating bonds.

"Riddick Stadium does not . . . attract crowds," he said. "It does not attract other teams to play there."

He said the state "traditionally" does not use public funds to build stadiums and that the proposal to finance the new stadium "looks like a good plan."

Riddick Stadium seats 19,000, he said. Sanford added that the proposed new stadium would be about the size of Kenan Stadium at Chapel Hill, which seats 43,000.

Dormitory Spotlight: Kenan

This is part of a series of articles on UNC dorms and is sponsored jointly by the dorm presidents and the Communications Committee.

Despite the disadvantage of being a graduate dorm, the girls of Kenan have been an active group.

Social life is centered around several big parties each semester and frequent breakfasts in the dorm on Sunday mornings. Under the direction of Dorothy Reisig, last semester's social chairman, a successful Christmas party was held. Betty Kelly, the present social chairman, has planned a dorm picnic this semester.

"The girls are working hard for the Campus Chest," commented president Vivian Conklin. "We try to be the leader in the women's dorms, and I think that we are well on the way to our goal."

Action Slowed On Scrapping Compulsory ROTC Programs

WASHINGTON (CPS)—An intra-service debate is currently delaying Congressional action on a drastic revision of Reserve Officers Training Corps (ROTC) programs at U.S. colleges and universities.

Pentagon officials hope to have the revised ROTC program on its way to Capitol Hill within two weeks for hearings by the House Armed Services Committee. But a debate between Army, Navy, and Air Force officials will have to be ironed out first.

Essentially, the revised ROTC legislation will end compulsory ROTC at land-grant universities, where male students are now normally required to take one or two years of military training. The new program would be selective and voluntary, with outstanding participants becoming eligible for government scholarships ranging from $1,000 to $2,000. UNC is not a land-grant school, although State is.

The new proposal grew out of a marriage of Air Force and Navy thinking on the efficacy and efficiency of the compulsory ROTC program. All three services, however, are not yet agreed on certain important aspects, such as the amount of scholarships, the length of training in college, and the degree of selectivity of the program.

Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara and the Bureau of the Budget have approved the new program in principle—but are leaving the services to thrash out their finer points of difference before the final proposal goes to Congress.

If the reserve representatives of the three branches of the armed services reach a stalemate in the negotiations on the ROTC question, it will be up to Navy Capt. W. S. Bradway Jr. to smooth over the debated points. Bradway is the Pentagon officer assigned to the development of the new program by the Defense Department. He described the current negotiations between the service branches as "crucial" to the success of the proposal.

The Navy pioneered the new plan when it introduced the so-called "Holloway Plan" offering scholarships to outstanding students who would plan on a Navy career. The NROTC "regular" program provides books, fees, tuition, and a living allowance for students on the program.

Air Force officials soon borrowed the Navy idea: after instituting a few changes of its own, the Air Force came up with essentially the program currently being debated. As envisioned, the new program would enroll only juniors and seniors. Freshmen would be interviewed each year, and those selected would enter training during the summer preceding their junior year. Formal military training would begin after completion of the summer camp, and would continue through the senior year, with a second summer training period after graduation.

Also being debated: when the student would be commissioned. One faction says after graduation, another says after the summer camp.

The section of the new proposal expected to come under closest Congressional scrutiny is the size of the scholarships the services hope to be able to offer. The Pentagon, however, isn't too worried about passage of the measure. The new program would certainly be cheaper than the tremendous overhead now required by mass compulsory ROTC.

The financial aspects of the new plan are also eliciting support of many college and university officials. Pentagon proponents assert. The smaller, selective ROTC program will be a boon to many schools with crowded physical plants burdened by large ROTC units. And, Pentagon officials are hopeful that all three services can be represented at many schools under the new plan.

Pentagon officials also note that many universities have decided not to wait for Congressional action to unburden themselves of compulsory ROTC programs. Land grant colleges and universities are required by law only to maintain military training programs—not mandatory ones, and a number of schools have switched to voluntary ROTC in the past few years, often after concerted student pressure had worked for some time to effect the change.

Pentagon personnel report that over a dozen schools have already eliminated compulsory ROTC in anticipation of the new plan, and many are offering only an advanced two-year program.

Baseballers Top Duke In Practice

By LOU ROSENTHAL

Aided by several outstanding individual performances, including a homer by Frank Gallagher that hit halfway up on the wall of Lenoir Hall, UNC won a practice baseball game, 8-4, from Duke, yesterday at Emerson Stadium.

Gallagher's smash was called by Coach Walter Rabb "the longest I've ever seen hit under game conditions. I'll have to play him somewhat."

The Tar Heels, behind strong pitching from Larry Jenkins, took an early 3-0 lead. Jenkins allowed but two singles in his three-inning stint.

After Jenkins left, however, Duke capitalized on two walks and a double by Marley, to close the score to 3-2. Then in the sixth, the Blue Devils went ahead on another pair of walks and a broken-bat single.

Carolina responded in their half of the inning, taking the lead for keeps. Dick Prindle walked, his third of the day, and Heyward Hull singled. After Gary Black got on base via an error, Captain Buddy Tilden rapped a single into right field to knock in the deciding runs.

The eighth saw Gallagher's prodigious wallop, which came after Dave Pope had drawn a free pass.

The moundsmen had their heroes too. Besides Jenkins' performance, Wendell Brande, a converted catcher, turned in a good job, before he tired and had to be lifted.

His replacement, Bobby Reagan, who played first base for last year's freshman squad, allowed but two hits in two innings.

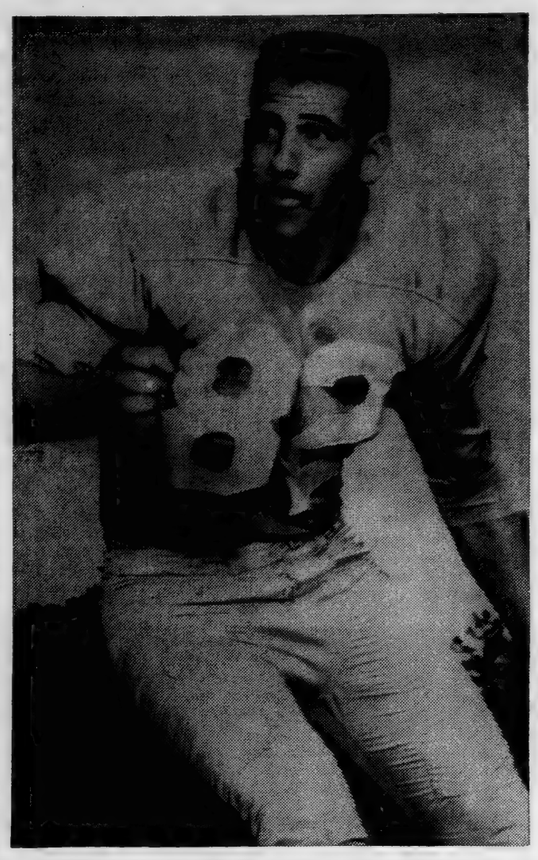
Joe White, another rookie, turned in probably the finest performance of the day. The Winston-Salem hurler struck out the first four men he faced, and after giving up a double and a base on balls, finished the job with his fifth strikeout in two innings.

The first UNC tallies came in the first inning, when Prindle and Jim Speight both walked and moved up one base on Hull's grounder. Two errors then enabled the Tar Heels to chalk up the game's first scores.

In the third, Bill Brown, who was replaced by Gallagher in the last part of the game, lashed a single down the third base line. The Duke left-fielder let the ball get by him for a three-base error, that gave the Heels their original bulge.

Gallagher said that he "knew it was gone" as soon as he hit the ball, although he didn't think it went as far as it travelled.

The blast came on the first pitch from Duke hurler Dean Helms, and hit Lenoir Hall, about 410 feet away.



Gallagher, who also is an end on the football team, hit .444 for last year's frosh squad with two homers. He had 18 RBI's to lead the frosh.

Prindle, Gallagher, White, and Reagan are all rookies.

Most of the starting lineup is open, as Coach Rabb shuffled his players after the third inning.

The regular season starts Friday, when Southern Illinois visits Emerson Stadium. Rabb will probably start transfer Bill Haywood on the mound. Other probable starters are:

Dick Prindle, sophomore, 2b.
Jim Speight, junior, ss.
Heyward Hull, senior, rf.
Bill Brown, junior, or Gallagher, 1b.
Bill Taylor, sophomore, 3b.
Buddy Tilden, senior, lf.
Bernie Isgett, junior, c.

FRANK GALLAGHER is an important man in North Carolina's football future, but Coach Walt Rabb is glad he's also on the baseball team. A football end, the sophomore first-baseman yesterday bombarded Lenoir Hall with one of the longest home runs ever hit on Emerson Field. The 400-foot-plus drive came in Carolina's 8-4 victory over Duke in a practice game.

POLITICOS TO SPEAK

WCHL Radio will present a "Political Panorama" of student political activity on the UNC campus this afternoon. Representatives of the New Left Club, Student Peace Union, Young Democrats Club, Young Republican Club and Young Americans for Freedom will each appear individually to explain the structure and philosophy of their organization.

The pre-recorded interviews will examine each organization institutionally, the place each feels it has at Carolina, the views of the future course of Africa and attitudes on specific issues as foreign policy, civil rights and social welfare.

Deacons Open Season Today

WINSTON-SALEM.—Wake Forest lifts the curtain on its 1963 baseball schedule this week with games against Kent State here tomorrow and Thursday afternoons.

The opener will be the first of eight non-conference games for Coach Jack Stallings' Deacons before they open defense of their ACC crown against Duke on April 6. The other-nonleague foes will be Southern Illinois, East Carolina, Colby and Virginia Tech.

Bobby Biddix, who had a 5-2 record last season, and Jerry Pardue, who finished with a 2-1 mark, are expected to share the mound duties in Thursday's game.

The remainder of the starting line-up is expected to be made up of six holdover lettermen from last season. Jim Israel, a converted shortstop, will be at first base with Bob Worrell, last year's No. 2 hitter, at third. David Miller at second base and Walt Noell at shortstop will be the two non-lettermen in the infield.

Miller is a transfer from Wilmington Junior College while Noell saw only limited action as a utility man last season. Noell will be subbing for Danny Loftin, who is being bothered by arm trouble.

The starting outfield will include all lettermen. Mike Budd will be in left, Bill Scripture in center and Wayne Martin in right. These three made up the regular outfield last year. Don Metzger, a reserve outfielder last spring, is expected to see considerably more action this year.

Law School Wins Grad Title; Don Walsh Scores 16 Points

The Grad division had an exciting windup to its basketball season as Law School turned back a late Dental School rally and won the divisional title 45-39.

Two former varsity players were back in action, this time as opponents, and provided the leadership for their respective teams.

Donnie Walsh of the Law School tied for high-scoring honors as he pumped in 16 points. Walsh was six for 11 from the floor and proved he still has the eye that set Carolina's best field goal percentage two years ago.

For the Dental School Sid Woody also got 16 points with a seven for 14 performance. Danny Lotz, captain of UNC's 1958-59 detachment, led the Dentists' second-half charge as he hit four of six from the floor and all three of his free throw attempts for 11 points.

The lawyers outshot the dentists from the floor in both halves and ended with a 47 per cent average. The Dental School had an overall 33 per cent average.

Connor dormitory slashed through both its opponents Monday night to capture the Intramural table tennis All-Campus championship.

In the grad-dorm finals Connor whipped the Physics Fiends, 3-0, and in the championship match they toppled DU by an identical score.

In both wins Essa Abdula and Gene Corpening handled their singles opponents with relative ease. The doubles team of Steve Hu and Alhasani Abdul were pressed to the wire in their first game against DU before winning it 24-22.

The DU's started their match to the championship with a 2-0 win over Phi Delt for the fraternity white crown. After DKE topped Phi Delt, 2-1, for the blue division title, the DU's turned the tables and beat them by an identical score in the all-fraternity final.

For DU, Brick and Kenny Oettinger were standouts in the singles matches. Their only losses of the night were to Abdula and Corpening of Connor.

Earey Looks To Next Year

By PAT SMITH

Earey's spunky Blue Dolphins finished fast to share an Atlantic Coast Conference swimming championship with N. C. State and Maryland. Next year, predicts Earey, the UNC performance could become the best in the school's illustrious tank history.

There are a good many reasons for optimism, two of which start with "M" — Thompson Mann and Harrison Merrill. But along with the All-America M & M boys the cream of this year's squad will be back plus four terrific swimmers up from the freshman squad.

"We've plugged up the holes," Earey said confidently. "All year we've been hurt by the lack of strength in the butterfly and breaststroke. Next year it will be a different story."

Tom Murphy and Fred Lipp, both butterflyers, along with Rick Forum (breaststroke) and John Sheldon (freestyle) proved themselves in freshman wars this year. All four have almost unlimited ability. Forum's times in the 100 and 200 yard breaststroke, for instance, equal the best freshman times of N. C. State's great All-America breaststroker, Pete Fordarasy.

And then there's Merrill and Mann. They give Carolina a one-two punch few teams can match. In the ACC Championships they single-handedly accounted for almost one-third of Carolina's 128 points.

Mann, who was named to the All-America team last year, set two new Tar Heel and one conference record in this year's campaign. His 50-yard freestyle time of 22.4 is the best in UNC history and 200-yard individual medley (2:05.7) the best in the ACCC. In addition he swam a leg on Carolina's 400-yard medley relay (3:47.3) and 400-yard freestyle relay (3:17.9) both of which set UNC and ACC records.

Harrison Merrill, only a sophomore, stands just 5'8½" but he's a big man in Coach Earey's plans. With Mann, he also swam legs on UNC's crack relays plus collecting records in three individual events. He erased former UNC All-America Harry Bloom's ACC mark in the 100-yard freestyle with a 48.9 performance and shoved the 200-yard freestyle ACC standard down to 1:48.9. In the new 500-yard freestyle event, Merrill owns the Carolina record of 5:26.0.

Many things stick out about a season once the final gun is fired—like the Dolphins' won-loss record (11-4). Previous Earey teams have never been beaten more than three times in one year. "We almost expected it," Earey said of the losses. "In order to improve, we had to have good competition." And in scheduling opponents, the tall, blond Tar Heel coach saw that his team got a double serving.

Carolina opened the season with five lop-sided victories—and then the boom fell. UNC traveled to New Jersey, squared off with Ivy League powerhouse Princeton, and got their sails trimmed 46-49. Next day against Navy the Heels were beaten again, this time by a 45-50 count.

Three defeats in 10 days is not standard procedure for Earey-coached teams. In his six years at Carolina the Dolphins have lost only 13 of 71 meets (and captured all or a part of 4 ACC championships). But in Earey's mind, a defeat at the hands of good competition can be better medicine than a string of wins against lesser foes.

"Look at Scott Smiley and Mike Bissell," the coach continued. "They worked hard and they made tremendous progress this year but undoubtedly without stiff competition they wouldn't be the swimmers they are today."

Smiley, a backstroker from Greenville, N. C., covered the 200 distance in 2:20.0 last year as a freshman. After warring with Earey's "stiff competition" he shaved almost eight full seconds off his time, down to 2:12.1. Now he's No. 2 in the ACC—and he'll be back next year.

Freestyler Bissell wound up fifth conference-wise in the 500 freestyle and second in the 1650 freestyle—and he, too, will be back. With UNC's Frank Lea gone, Mike will be the man to beat in the long distance freestyle.

"Schedule-wise we'll follow the same system next year," Earey said. "We've already rescheduled Navy, Florida State and the University of Florida and we're concluding an agreement with Princeton." This year, three out of Carolina's four losses were to those clubs.

"If I could, I'd bring the best in the nation here every week," Earey said. "Of course we might lose a few, but think of the improvement our boys would make," and his eyes almost gleamed with anticipation. "And then when the ACC Championships rolled around . . ." His voice trailed off but Earey got his point across—loud and clear.

Warrington Signs With Carolina

The son of one of the great football centers of Southern football history has signed a grant-in-aid with the University of North Carolina.

He is Caleb Van Warrington III, whose father made All-America honors in 1944 as a pivotman for the Auburn Tigers of the Southeastern Conference.

Young Warrington stands 6-3 and weighs 200 pounds. He attended Dickinson High in Wilmington, Del., where his family now resides.

Warrington enters the college scene with an excellent reputation as a linebacker and offensive center.

Warrington was signed by Joe Mark of the Carolina football staff. Head coach Jim Hickey and Tex were former teammates at William & Mary. Later Warrington transferred to Auburn. Warrington and Mark teamed up in the coaching ranks to handle athletics at Vero Beach High in Florida in the mid-1950's.

"We have high expectations for Tex's son here," commented Mark. "He has many of the characteristics that made his father such a standout on the gridiron."

Di-Phi Votes SG Abolition; Asks Legislature For Rent

The Di-Phi voted Tuesday night for the abolition of the Student Government and denied the use of its assembly hall to the Student Legislature.

The bill was passed as amended by a vote of 7-2 after debate had dragged on until almost midnight. Two representatives who had spoken strongly for the bill's defeat had to leave before the vote.

WHEREAS: Student government is detrimental to the intellectual life of the campus by focusing attention of the student body on its petty activities rather than on the important issues of our day which affect us far more, and

WHEREAS: Student government siphons off important intellectual resources of the University into the maintenance of this elaborate and time-consuming activity, distracts such resources from creative, imaginative pursuits, prevents such balanced development as might prepare them for national or international prominence, and cultivates an inward-looking, narrow-minded mentality, and

WHEREAS: The existence of the Student Government of the University of North Carolina has contributed to a cleavage of understanding and a polarization of interests within an academic community rather than cooperation between faculty, administration, and the student body, and

WHEREAS: The sum effect of an inert system of government by student politicians has been significantly expressed in the narrow interests—apathy toward greater issues, and lack of intellectual aliveness of a preponderance of the student population.

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED BY THE DIALECTIC AND PHILANTHROPIC LITERARY SOCIETY THAT:

ARTICLE I: Student government should be immediately abolished. Autonomous student publications are not to be construed as part of student government.

ARTICLE II: A statement informing the campus of this decision shall be posted in all places of the University alongside campaign posters of student politicians.

ARTICLE III: A committee shall be appointed to draft the reasons given by proponents of this bill, urging that students think before supporting a system of student government.

Following the passage of the bill the executive committee voted to deny the use of the Society's hall in New East to Student Legislature and Interdormitory Council. Further consideration will be given if the Student Government pays certain overdue bills for rent of the hall.

Lawler Stresses Leadership Role

"An essential theme of this campaign must be our evaluation of the role and purpose of student government. The last few years have been ones of crisis. Often we have reacted too slowly to the challenges facing us.

A strong argument for student government would be to suggest what our condition would be without it. We often fail to utilize our heritage of student expression and self-direction in affairs outside the classroom. We are unique in the degree of our autonomy which we must not allow inactivity and inertia to erode.

However, in our assertion of autonomy there is an inherent responsibility. The president must clearly lead and represent the students. Next year the emphasis must be on leading or else the students will not be represented. The president must return to student government that dynamism of thought and action that has given us our strength. His leadership must be placed in the context of a greater commitment to imagination and diplomacy, not in the context of care for unanimous sanction for his ideas. He must stimulate action towards the solution of problems by: talks in living units after elections, a streamlined executive-committee system, cooperation with the IFC long range planning committee and investigation of the feasibility of placing the Yack on a voluntary basis.

In many areas of student life we have been delegated complete autonomy to govern and direct ourselves. This is why I am concerned with the working relationship between the dorm advisors and the IDC on disciplinary matters and between the faculty and greek system.

A vigorous student executive must also revitalize our role and purpose as a partner with the administration. In many areas the administration and faculty employ our experience, opinion and counsel about comprehensive challenges facing the University. This is the importance of the president attending the Chancellor's cabinet meetings and of students being represented on the various faculty committees.

Fundamental to the cooperation of the elements of this University in meeting the challenge presented are two factors. First, there is a respect for the importance of and an understanding of the student viewpoint and secondly there is the commitment to student responsibility regardless of specific instances of its faltering.

The next President of the Student Body must bring together the faculty, students and administration with these two points as the groundwork for positive attention to the educational values of this University. Then will there be some fresh insights into the curriculum, some action on the high flunk-out and drop-out rate of qualified students in the entering freshmen classes and then maybe we can see more clearly the relative value of freshman dorms vis a vis the model dorm proposals. The paid intramural managers' program, the Dorm Improvements Committee, the coed visiting agreement — hise student programs have proven more practical.

ETHRIDGE-BLANCHARD

New Blood Needed For Improved DTH

Dave Ethridge and Gary Blanchard, only co-condidates seeking the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel in the spring elections, said yesterday their platform "boils down to putting campus news back into the Tar Heel and kicking meaningless editorials out.

"We are sick and tired of having one point of view and very few themes pushed down our throats day after day," they said in a statement.

"The Tar Heel must be re-oriented to give both sides of issues and not just once in a while, but everyday.

"It must be re-oriented to covering campus news, continually and in depth, and objectively. It must cease being a newspaper that reports on the campus in a hit-or-miss fashion. It must cease editorializing in the news columns.

"One of our opponents has noted that editing the Tar Heel is not a 'side-line' job. Yet he has had a leading role in the production of this year's Tar Heel, which more often than not has resembled one big UPI story.

"He has been working full-time but doing a 'side-line' job. We want to work full-time and do a full-time job.

"Our other opponent has also had a leading role in putting out this year's Tar Heel. Indeed, he is stressing that this is one of the reasons he should be elected to the editorship. Yet he too, by his own admission, has been aiding and abetting in the production of a third-rate newspaper. Where have his 'new ideas' been all this time?

"We think new blood is required, new ideas, new energies. We want no more of what we have had this year. We want to put out—full-time—a campus newspaper dedicated to covering campus news and organized so it can.

"We want to dedicate our efforts, experience and ideas to giving the campus the kind of newspaper it should and can have.

"The kind of Tar Heel we envision is the watchful partner, not the carping enemy, of student government; it is a campus newspaper dedicated to solving campus problems by exposing their roots and campaigning for needed changes.

"The kind of Tar Heel we envision safeguards student rights by keeping a constant, watchful check on the administration and the Town government and merchants; it reports on decisions BEFORE they are made, giving us an opportunity to influence those decisions, not merely live with them as facts of life."

Ethridge, a junior, began as a copyboy in high school and worked up to staff reporter on the Louisville Times. In his summers he has been editor of two W. Virginia weekly papers.

Blanchard, also a junior, now works as a staff writer for The Charlotte Observer and several area radio stations.

Dean Says Move Hasty

WRC Eases Rule On Visits To Apartments By Women

By MIKE PUTZEL

The Women's Residence Council Tuesday night repealed the controversial "Apartment Rule" for all upperclassmen during consideration of several proposals introduced by the Rules Committee.

The "Apartment Rule," which states that no woman student may visit in a man's apartment unless a minimum of two couples are present, has been the subject of much student-administration discussion this year.

Dean of Women Catherine Carmichael said yesterday that she does not yet consider the action of the WRC to be a final settlement of the issue. She added that she expects the rule change to go before the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline.

The faculty and Chancellor, according to the report of the Faculty Executive Committee, have "the duty to exercise full and final authority in the regulation of student conduct and in all matters of student discipline."

WRC Chairman Diane Blanton, in explaining the council's decision to change the "Apartment Rule," said, "The council felt that this is something it must do as a representative and legislative body of the women students on this campus.

"We do not feel that this is a rejection of responsibility on the part of the council, and I would like to point out that we continue to maintain full responsibility for all conduct on the part of the women students under the provisions of the Campus Code."

Dean Carmichael, in commenting on the WRC's action said that she considered it "hasty," and that she did not feel that it should go into effect immediately.

She stated that the council's action was "too rash, too precipitant," and that "if I want to veto any action taken by the council, I will feel perfectly free to do so." However, she did not say specifically that she would veto the rule change.

"If it doesn't stand on the books of student government, it can certainly stand on the books of the administration," the Dean said.

Both Miss Blanton and Dean Carmichael stressed that they were glad that the students and faculty have been able to work together in the past, and they hope to be able to work out the present conflict without destroying the student - administration relationship.

Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson was not available for comment. It was learned, however, that he has been informed of the action taken by the WRC.

Other rule changes which will go into effect immediately and be included in next year's handbook of women's rules concern late permission, House Council penalties, and several technical changes and rule clarifications.

Formerly, late permissions have been granted by both the Dean of Women and the WRC. However, by the new changes in the rule book, the Dean's office will have complete jurisdiction over late permissions.

The WRC, in connection with the rule regarding free late minutes after curfew changed the number of late minutes allowable from ten minutes a year to ten minutes per semester.

The House Councils, which enforce minor Campus Code violations, were granted the prerogative to change campuses in emergency situations without doubling the penalty. Other changes made for the purpose of clarifying standing rules concerned weekend guests, requiring hostesses to be present in the dormitory if they plan to have guests, and stating that no men would be allowed in women's residence halls before 8 o'clock in the morning.

Janus Society Honors 14 For Dorm Service

The Society of Janus annually honors students, faculty, and administrative officials for outstanding service toward the improvement of dormitory life. Thirteen undergraduates and one administrative official were thus initiated into the Society of Janus this morning.

The new Praetors include Albert Gordon Appell, New York, N. Y.; Charles Roland Aycock, Wilson; Philip Augustine Baddour, Goldsboro; Charles Robin Britt, Asheville; Edward Ramsey Burt, Biscoe; Dallas Alexander Cameron Jr.; Perino Marcellin Dearing, Covington, Ga.; Rufus Lige Edmisten, Boone; James Roy Fullwood, Jacksonville; Gerald LeRoy Goode, Hialeah, Fla.; William Arthur Hays, Franklin; James Edward Magner, Washington, D. C.; John Jackson Morgan, Alexandria, Va.; George Stewart Stretcher, Waynesville.

In addition to recognizing those who have thus contributed outstandingly toward dormitory improvement, the Society annually sponsors several projects, primarily blazer sales, the proceeds from which are used for the Robert White Linker Scholarship Award plus this year's new project of contributing to the Graham Emergency Fund.

SNEA OFFICERS

Newly elected officers for the Student National Education Association are as follows: president, David Outwater; vice-president, Em Howell; secretary, Betsy Lowry, and treasurer, Emilie Alexander.

Qualifications for the offices are active participation in SNEA activities and programs, interest in education, and affiliation with the organization.

McDevitt Outlines Presidency Goals

"The responsible extension of student initiative into areas not yet fully explored by Student Government lies at the foundation of the UP platform this year," UP Presidential candidate Larry McDevitt said yesterday.

"Working for the advancement of student welfare among all segments of the campus and the protection of student autonomy will be backed up by a position of uncompromising opposition toward those who would deny these rights," McDevitt stressed.

Acknowledging that "student life will become increasingly mechanical as the University grows larger unless Student Government takes the lead in drawing all portions of the campus into its activities," the Asheville junior noted that "Student Government must also put itself back on the campus instead of keeping its ideas and its officers on the second floor of Graham Memorial."

McDevitt then announced his plans for the immediate establishment of a Presidential Communication Staff, led by the President himself, which would visit in individual rooms discussing problems and ideas. "By getting more student opinion and increased student awareness of the work Student Government can accomplish, it should be possible to put more life into Student Government and restore life to the IBM-numbered existence of too many of our students."

In outlining important aspects of his plans for dormitory improvements, academic and cultural projects, student government reorganization, the student co-operative store, and other special projects, McDevitt noted the "importance of creativity" in attempting to do things next yearf that Student Government has simply been unwilling to try before."

To illustrate this point, McDevitt discussed the UP's plans for dormitory social improvements, citing the need for a "fresh and meaningful" approach. "Everyone has always talked about improving dorm social facilities, but no one has ever provided the means for getting the job done." McDevitt is proposing a program of Student Government and administrative financial assistance for the renovation of dormitory social rooms.

"A second example of this program of leadership through creative action," that McDevitt pointed out, "is the plan for the establishment of a system of several 'quiet' dormitories with a controlled admissions policy. In these dorms experimental house councils would be established for the handling of discipline problems within each unit.

"If successful," McDevitt continued, "this program of unit councils could be extended to all dormitories, and the IDC would then serve as only an appeals body."

McDevitt is also insisting that students be given positions on the long-range faculty and administrative planning committees so that student opinion and suggestions can be given concerning dormitory policies, the reinstatement of reading periods before exams, the working out of a more valuable and effective drop-add program, and continued all-University effort for the securing of the student co-op.

"Work on these projects in conjunction with the administration," McDevitt said, "is another example of my conception of the responsibility of the president of the student body. He has the obligation to lead the students and to present their views and ideas in cooperative planning sessions. He must be a strong executive and organize Student Government so that it can direct attention to the problems of student growth in a growing University."

Complete Coverage Of Sports Pledged

My first experience in newspaper work was in sports writing. Even though I have branched out into other fields, I still enjoy writing sports. Some of the most important news that can be carried in a college newspaper is the news of its athletic teams. A paper is certainly not fulfilling its responsibility to students if it fails to give complete coverage to the school's athletic teams.

If I am elected editor, I will see that the DTH does the best possible job of sports coverage. I want the sports staff to be as talented and as hard-working as any other part of the paper. I want all the space devoted to sports that it deserves.

Some of my opponents have said they wanted to give more coverage to "minor" sports. This is ridiculous. I don't think there are any minor sports at Carolina. Soccer is not a minor sport. Neither is track, wrestling, or swimming. It is just as important to cover the tennis team as it is to cover the football team. Golf and cross-country deserve as much consideration as do basketball and baseball. What I would like to do would be to give more complete and more interesting coverage to all teams.

Intramurals and freshman sports have not received the attention that they have deserved. There can definitely be some improvement along these lines.

For the Tar Heel to improve its sports coverage, it must have an editor who is actively interested in sports and sports news. It should have an editor who is not afraid or ashamed to give sports news the space it deserves, and one who can comment intelligently on sports news in the editorial columns. I think I am the only candidate who can meet these qualifications.

I am against de - emphasis of sports, because I think that participation and interest in sports does more to increase school pride and individual character than any other activity. I am for increased athletic participation by students—both as players and spectators.

I think it is unfair for students to have to pay for date tickets to football games when thousands of seats go unsold. I think the Dixie Basketball Classic should be brought back. I think all athletes should get the recognition they deserve, and college readers should get the sports news they want.

If I am elected, you can be certain that the Tar Heel will not overlook the importance of sports news.

UP First Party Naming Full List For Legislature

With the endorsement yesterday of Tim Snyder and Mal King, the University Party has become, according to available records, the first campus political party to endorse a full slate of candidates for the Student Legislature. As far as the Student Government archives show, no party has endorsed a full slate before without double endorsement.

In '52, the Student Party endorsed a full slate, but several of their candidates were doubly endorsed by the University Party and the now defunct Campus Party.

Mal King has been endorsed for the SL in Dorm Men's V (Old East, Old West and Battle-Vance-Pettigrew). Tim Snyder has been endorsed in Dorm Men's VI (Avery, Parker, Teague).

Edit Page Lacking Balanced Attitudes

"I believe we should consider three things about the Daily Tar Heel editorship: one, the students and what they expect from the DTH; two, the newspaper itself—what it should and should not do; three, my own reasons for wanting the editorship.

"First: you

"First: you cannot claim to know this campus unless you have come to know the students over a longer period of time than the three weeks of the campaign—and you cannot know the students unless you have shared their problems for 2½ years.

"In the last week, talking with students in four fraternities, three sororities and five dorms, I have found they expect several things from the Daily Tar Heel: increased scope in reporting activities in dorms, clubs and organizations, and fraternities and sororities; more and better sports coverage and features; and a more responsible editorial page representing a wider range of student opinion.

"Second: The Daily Tar Heel itself—its function as a campus newspaper edited by and for students. This is its only reason for existence. The need for a greater balance of political commentary on its editorial page—through columns and guest editorials representing all political views. And we need to ask South Building some pertinent questions about student affairs: about the high drop-out rate and how this relates to all-freshman dorms and the larger, less personal dormitories; on what basis admissions are made; about the University's true intentions for student autonomy.

"We talk so much about student autonomy—it's not enough to be students of autonomy—we must show initiative and interest. Independence is not granted as a gift.

"Third: my own reasons for wanting the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel.

"I've had widespread reporting and editing experience, most of it on this campus—so I know the unique problems here and I've demonstrated my interest for several years.

"I feel strongly that in order to do the things I'd like to see done with the Daily Tar Heel, and with student government, and with the campus as a whole, we are going to have to become a little 'inspired.' We are going to have to rise above our horizons for the past years and choose a new direction on our own."

Machine Vs. Man
. . . And Man Is Wrong

An interesting point-by-example was made in a recent New Yorker magazine. The article mentioned that the U.S. Post Office had discovered that a bottle cap (or other objects) inside an envelope would confuse the automatic cancelling machine and could lead to mechanical failure.

As a result, the Postmaster General may ask Congress for legislation banning the sending of bottle caps, etc. in regular mail. Then the New Yorker pointed out, "The most amazing aspect of the Bottle Cap-Automatic Cancelling Machine War is the assumption by the Postmaster General, and probably by most of the American public, that when a machine cannot cope with the problems of the everyday world, it is the everyday world that is wrong."

With American higher education becoming increasingly a mass-production operation, we were tempted to look for some applications of the "amazing assumption" at Carolina.

With an ever-growing freshman dropout rate, those of us who are so well-adjusted that we can stay in from semester-to-semester may glibly observe that it's too bad, but they just can't make the grade, can't fit into the mold, can't take the pressure, etc.

It is very seldom that we can blame a dropout on lack of intelligence, even when a student's grade may be failing. The reason is usually because he was a bottle cap that confused the educational machine.

Currently, state educators and legislators are predicting that thousands of new students will be attending school at Chapel Hill in a very few years. We can't even wait for new dorms to be built; there must be three men in a room next year . . . and more in the classroom . . . and more IBM cards in South Building.

Perhaps this is based on the great American ideal of "lots of education everyone . . . providing they can get through without confusing the machine."

Attention, Candidates

The Tar Heel hopes to be able to provide better, more full coverage of this spring's elections, by assigning two of its staff reporters, full-time, to covering speeches and general campaign activity. In addition to news coverage, the DTH will ask each of the campus candidates to submit a 400-word statement on specified days — these statements should present different aspects of their platforms.

The following guidelines have been set for these statements (if it says statements should be in by 3 p.m. Tuesday, we mean 3 p.m. Tuesday. If not turned in by this time, they cannot be run).

Presidential candidates: 3 statements, to run Tues., March 26; Thurs., March 28; and Tues., April 2. Statements for Tuesday are due at 3 p.m. Monday; those for Thursday at 5 p.m. Tuesday.

Vice-Presidential candidates: 3 statements, to run Sat., March 23; Wed., March 27 and Sat., March 30—due at 3 p.m. the day before publication.

Secretary and Treasurer candidates: one statement, both to run Friday, March 29.

DTH Editor candidates: 3 statements, to run Sun., March 24; Thurs., March 27; and Tues., April 2. Statements for Thursday must be turned in by 5 p.m. Tuesday.

WAA and CAA candidates: one statement, both to run Sun., March 31.

NSA Congress candidates: 2 statements, to run on the editorial page Wed., March 27, and Friday, March 29. These must be approximately 300-350 words, and must be turned in by 3 p.m. two days before publication.

Letters On Campaigns

The Tar Heel will not set absolute limitations on the number of letters - to - the - editor concerning any candidates in the spring elections. The editorial page, as always, will be open to any member of the academic community (except candidates themselves) to express his opinion.

If there are an unusually large number of letters supporting any candidate, however, the DTH reserves the right to select several representative letters and print only these. The edit page will not become the sounding board for the friends of either party or any one candidate, as has happened in past years.

There will be no letters or columns dealing with the elections on the DTH edit page of Tuesday, April 2, the day of elections—in order that no candidate will be given any unfair advantage in that respect. The editors of course, reserve the right to make any editorial comment on any of the candidates or parties as the campaign progresses.

Senior Class

All Senior Class officer candidates will be allowed one statement each. These will be run Thursday, March 2, and must be turned in by 5 p.m. Tuesday, March 26. Statements for President and Vice-President should be 400 words; for other offices, 250 words.

Getting More From $

Breaking Down School Statistics

GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS

In an unsigned article, which we suspect is the work of former State Budget Bureau official Charles Holloman, the N. C. Citizens Association magazine, "We, The People" takes a close and penetrating look at North Carolina school statistics being bandied about these days.

The focal point is the state's 1962-63 ranking of 43rd among all the states in per pupil expenditure. That is the same rank North Carolina held the preceding year. (The N. C. figure is $292 compared with a national average of $415.)

In view of the state's massive application of food tax funds to the public schools last year, some observers have viewed this rank with alarm. Did the addition of these funds do nothing to help North Carolina's national standing?

Well, obviously it did; but "We, The People" is more interested in showing that North Carolina may be getting a good deal more from its school dollar than this national comparison figure indicates.

When the general statistic is broken down, the national average school is spending over twice as much for "administration" as North Carolina schools ($17.25 vs $7.71). But North Carolina, as the "We, The People" articles notes, "has 173 school administrative units compared with an average of 577 such units operating per state across the nation. If the extra $9.54 per pupil spent on the national average for the purpose of administration makes a significant difference in the quality of education, North Carolina's whole policy of consolidating small school administrative units into large ones has been on the wrong track for the past 30 odd years; and the state may consider reversing that policy by striking out to reach the national average of 578 school administrative units."

Under "instructional salaries" North Carolina is spending this year $211.29 per pupil which compares with $272.58 in the nation. Part of this differential results from a somewhat heavier average teacher load in North Carolina — our average is 24.49 pupils per teacher while the national average is 21.79. Certainly some classrooms in North Carolina are overcrowded, but 25 pupils per teacher has long been considered satisfactory for consolidated public schools.

The second part of the $61.29 extra in the national "instructional salaries" is accounted for by generally higher teacher salaries in most of the nation. But it is interesting to note that the number of state-allotted teachers having a certificate rating below Class A dropped only 29 in 1961-62 as compared with the previous year and should drop only three more in 1962-63. North Carolina has for ten years ranked among the highest half dozen states in the nation for teachers with four or more years of college training (about 97 per cent presently), despite the salary differential. Obviously salary is not the only factor making the public schools attractive in North Carolina.

The average national expenditure per pupil for other instructional expenses" is $11.13 above the N. C. average. This includes clerical costs, textbooks, library books and supplies. Some of this saving may stem from the state's central purchasing and control system; and some states have large private and parochial schools whose expenditures for such supplies are counted as public school expenditures.

Perhaps because of its moderate climate and its new consolidated schools, North Carolina operates its school plants more economically than the average state in the union—some $24.70 per pupil cheaper, in fact. Would it necessarily improve quality education to triple the outlay to match the national average?

The state's school transportation costs are lower and so are its fixed charges.

* * *

The point about these statistics is clear. While North Carolina must continue to upgrade its public school system, there are some areas in which our economy is not unsound and ought to be encouraged. To quote only the general comparison with the national average figures sometimes falsifies the real picture; when the figures are broken down, as "We, The People" has broken them down, they tell a somewhat different story.

For a state not particularly blessed with plush national resources — aside from its people — the figures, for the most part, are nothing to be ashamed of.

On Bad Bills In S. Legislature

SP Members Were Expedient

To the Editors.

Joel Bulkley's editorial in Sunday's DTH said something that has long needed attention. Just as he charged, many bills have indeed been presented to the 34th Assembly of Student Legislature in unworkable form. However, due to the fact that campus elections are rapidly drawing near, Mr. Bulkley refrained from naming any specific group within the body and contented himself by indictng Student Legislature as a whole.

The truth is there are several legislators who are more concerned with getting their names on the top of a bill than with preparing the bill adequately and doing research in order to present factual and explicit information to SL on the background of the bill.

To document my case I offer the following evidence:

Of the last twenty bills to be introduced into SL, five were sponsored by SP legislators. (Two others were under joint UP-SP sponsorship.)

Of these five, one was written with considerable thought and research. However, it failed to pass. One of the remaining four bills was simply a routine appropriation and did pass—but with no help from its SP sponsor. The bill was delayed in Finance committee for five weeks because its sponsor never was on hand to speak for his bill at a committee meeting.

A third resolution was drawn up so poorly that the body finally had to kill the resolution and instruct the speaker to compose and send a letter which would fulfill the apparent intentions of the SP legislator who authorized the original mess.

The fourth SP "resolution-bill" is still in committee where it is hoped that someone will figure out whether the bill is a bill or the resolution is a resolution. Confused? Well so was everyone else when this thing was introduced.

And the final faux pas was the resolution for the Germans Club to transfere itself into an all-campus organization. Unknown to the sponsor, work had been going on for some time between the Germans Club and GMAB toward this goal. Furthermore, the only legislator including the Bill's author who was able to offer any pertinent information regarding these efforts was a UP representative. The only apparent research on the SP's part was in the realm of political expediency.

On the other hand while there is insufficient space to discuss at length the thirteen UP bills, Larry McDevitt's "tape recorders" bill is exemplary. This bill was delayed for two months before being brought to the floor for debate. In this period extensive experiments were run to determine the type and number of recorders necessary to keep records of Honor Council proceedings. In the long run this UP bill passed Student Legislature with brief, orderly, and informed debate. And its purpose was accomplished at minimum expense to the student body.

Edits Should Be Calm . . .

To the Editors,

For the DTH to achieve its goal of being a spokesman and vital organ of the student, it must be close to him — an integral part of student life.

A DTH editor must, too, be a part of the student body. He must be close, not an outsider. This does not necessarily mean he must be a dire conformist or non-conformist. It simply means he must be perceptive to the wants and needs of the students. He can know exactly what's going on only if he is a part of student life and activity.

For his column to be most effective, the editor cannot lash out like the sensational sound of blaring trumpets in every article he writes. Calm, subtle diplomacy, backed by factual information is the best convincer. He can gain strength and support through this, and when the time comes and the occasion requires it, he can still maintain his support and effectiveness in a fiery, condemning article.

Letters must be free from libel, in good taste, and limited to 300-500 words. They should be typed, double spaced, if possible. Letters on any topic are welcome.

All letters become the property of the Daily Tar Heel, and may be published unless the writer requests otherwise.

Chancellor Aycock

Function — To Produce Teachers

Chancellor William B. Aycock To The Citizens Committee For Better School.

The University is pleased that you have selected Chapel Hill as the site for a statewide education rally. Rally is an excellent choice of words for your assembly here, for rally derives from re-ally and means a realignment of forces, of purposes and of concentration of effort toward a common goal.

In that spirit I speak in behalf of the faculty, students and others of the University of North Carolina in welcoming you and citing to your attention what we conceive to be our own obligation and opportunity in North Carolina for better schools achievement.

We agree with you and with the educational leaders of other institutions about the common and fundamental goal of upgrading the schools to the end that there shall be an adequate number of qualified teachers in the public schools.

The University of North Carolina is deeply and happily involved in helping to meet the need, and to produce the qualified teachers. In examining our special role, as the state university, in relation to other institutions of the state and to the elementary and secondary schools, we can appraise what we have done, are doing at the present time, and what we propose to do in the future.

One aspect of our participation in teacher training that is often overlooked is the fact that we at Chapel Hill are engaged in preparing teachers from the elementary level all the way through post-doctoral training.

Last year the University awarded 475 degrees to students preparing for service in public schools. It is important to add that of these 475, 206 received advanced degrees.

The undergraduate enrollment in our School of Education has increased 88 per cent in the last 10 years, and is at the present time at an all-time peak. I remind you also that our undergraduates are limited to juniors and seniors, with no enrollment of freshmen and sophomores.

Besides this undergraduate enrollment, there are at present moment 361 public school teachers, and administrators upgrading their qualifications by courses taught by regular members of the University faculty.

One basic task that is ours here at Chapel Hill—belonging to no other college or university in the state—that causes us to be deeply conscious of our special and unique responsibility is this:

The University in Chapel Hill is the only public institution in North Carolina approved by the National Council for accreditation of Teacher Education for work beyond the master's degree.

We are resolved in the University to never forget that a main function of the University also is to produce teachers who will offer instruction at the college level. Of the 1886 graduate students now enrolled here, at least 900 are preparing for college teaching.

We invite your attention to our Summer Session, the oldest summer school in the nation. During the 1962 summer session 42 per cent of the 8,173 students enrolled were either teachers or those prparing to enter teaching at some level.

Through the support of the Ford Foundation and several public school systems of the state, the University has been able in the last few years to encourage a significant number of arts and sciences students in various colleges, including the University here, to consider teaching careers and to qualify themselves as teachers. Forty outstanding prospects are being recruited during the present year in what is called the Fifth Year Program.

The School of Education has emphasized courses for school superintendents and principals, and the National Science Foundation has financed special courses for mathematics and science teachers here in the summer.

With our emphasis on University standards of accomplishment and our diversified, but unified obligations to provide advanced and professional training in many areas, we gladly participate in this rally, ready to accept new responsibilities for our participation in high quality of education, training and service for teachers, from the elementary schools, through the high schools and for classroom instruction in college and university classrooms.

Y Library Set Up For World Affairs

The International Affairs Commission of the YM-YWCA yesterday announced the opening of the International Affairs reading room at Y-Court.

At present the International Affairs Reading Room makes available to students a number of international periodicals and other materials, chiefly pamphlets, which give information on foreign countries and political relations between countries. Many of the latter publications were presented by embassies in Washington.

The reading room is part of a projected social and political affairs library at the Y, which will include periodicals and books which penetrate many fields of student concern.

Glenda Lackey, YW chairman of the International Affairs Commission, said that the Reading Room also included the Student Peace Union's Lending Library. The SPU is offering a collection of books on the nuclear problem.

The SPU books will be available to borrowers for periods of one week. The subject matter ranges from disarmament to the effects of nuclear war, and include specific alternatives to nuclear armament, discussions on inspections systems and the moral and psychological aspects of the balance of terror.

Lackey added, "I feel that we should emphasize that the reading room is open to all students who will come in and look around, but we do not intend to tolerate noise. A quiet atmosphere must be maintained to facilitate serious study."

Grad Featured In Peace Corps Publicity Book

James N. Holmes, a 1960 graduate of UNC, is featured in the new Peace Corps booklet, "Education-Plus" as an outstanding example of a volunteer who is making use of both formal training and less formal experience in extra-curricular and work areas.

Holmes, who graduated with a B.A. in History, and attended law school here for one year, is now working at community development project in Coli, Valle, Colombia.

Holmes has worked one summer abroad as a YMCA trainee and another in Harlem slum areas in a Union Theological Seminary program.

The booklet, "Education-Plus" is designed to show Liberal Arts students the ways in which he can use his training and experience in the Peace Corps.

Over 4,000 volunteers are needed to fill the requests from 44 countries abroad. Students who speak Spanish or French are urgently needed, but there is no language requirement.

Trackmen Whip Wolves, 98-32

UNC's track team opened its outdoor season with an easy 98-32 victory over N. C. State on Fetzer Field yesterday. The Tar Heels walked off with 13 first places in recording the lop-sided victory.

Bob Hart and Jim Brown were double winners for the Tar Heels. Hart took firsts in the 440 and 220-yard runs, while Brown aced the 120-high hurdles and the 330-low hurdles.

State's Stuart Corn took first place in the broad jump and pole vault, and a tie for second in the high jump, for 12 of his team's 32 points.

Other UNC winners were Nick Street, javelin; Jerry Stuver, mile; Bill Hunter, shot put; Joe Huffman, high jump; John McNinch, 100-yard dash; Bob Bennett, 880-yard run; Art Maillet, two-mile; and Tommy Hendley, discus.

Huffman jumped 6-2 in the high jump for the biggest surprise of the meet. The ACC record-holder, Tommy Clark, tied for second with a 6-0 leap.

Carolina's mile relay team racked up the 13th first place, while both teams were disqualified in the 440-relay.

The Tar Heel varsity will travel to Clemson for another meet on Saturday.

By LOUIS LEGUM

The biting wind that blew over the tennis courts yesterday did more than just kick a bit of dust up and bring shivers to the spectators. As a result of the action in the challenge matches, Coach Skakle's team has taken on a new look that is probably more than merely the result of the spring weather.

Charlie Shaffer and O. H. Parrish were the two players responsible for shaking up the team lineup. Shaffer, who had been up until 4 a.m. being inducted into the Order of the Grail, responded wonderfully with a convincing 6-1, 6-4 upset over Bitsy Harrison. By virtue of his triumph, Shaffer is now the number three player on the team.

Despite the wind, Shaffer had great success with his serve; it seemed much quicker than ever before, and at any rate was enough to keep Harrison off balance. Particularly in the first set, Shaffer was able to rush the net effectively, mixing overheads and placements. Harrison had his moments, too, but the annoying weather seemed to get to his game a little more than it did to his opponent; as a result Harrison missed many ordinarily easy shots.

The other big surprise of the afternoon came on the number three court. Sophomore Parrish established himself at the number five post with a narrow 6-4, 4-6, 6-3 win over veteran senior Keith Stoneman. Again the wind was a big factor in the match and kept both players from displaying consistently good tennis.

After Parrish had grabbed the first set, Stoneman came back by gaining a service break in the ninth game of the second set. He then held serve to even things up. The final set was also close until, with a 4-3 lead, Parrish broke Stoneman's serve to put the match out of reach.

The challenge between number one George Sokol and Ted Hoehn as two went as expected with Sokol taking a second win in a row from Hoehn, 6-2, 6-2. Sokol's scrappy game was able to adjust a little more readily to the persistent gusts of wind. His serve was working well, and he backed it up with some exacting volleying and placements. Hoehn, behind from the start, was never able to sustain any momentum, although he did make some spectacular shots.

After facing the big, powerful games of Shaffer and Parrish, Pete Myers finally settled down and got Joe Polin to play his style. The result for Myers' solid ground strokes was a decisive 6-1, 6-2 victory over Polin.

In "pit crew" activity, Kirby Jones had little trouble in defeating Jim Talbot, 6-2, 6-3. Sam Applegate continued his win streak with a 6-3, 6-3 triumph over Stan Cocke.

These were the final challenge matches for the Tar Heels before their opening with Dartmouth Saturday afternoon. The starting lineup now reads: 1—Sokol, 2—Hoehn, 3—Shaffer, 4—Harrison, 5—Parrish, and 6—Stoneman.

Coach Skakle is pleased with his team's progress thus far, and believes that the challenges have done a lot to sharpen his players' tennis. The result of this innovation will receive a legitimate test against Dartmouth.

Carolina Bowlers Rack Up The Pins

By ED DUPREE

If Carolina had varsity bowling competition, then there would be a mad scramble for positions on the team. UNC bowlers have been killing the pins with ease lately, often with the finesse of a professional.

Without its student bowlers, league bowling in Chapel Hill would be of a much lower calibre. Many of the leagues' better bowlers are UNC students.

In the Merchants' League at All-Star Lanes, 25 regular bowlers are averaging 160 or better. Eleven of these are Carolina men.

Top student bowlers in this league are Dan Straub of The Hub and Bill Canata, bowling for Esquire Tailors. Straub and Canata are averaging 173 in the fast-moving league—a healthy average by any bowling standards.

Straub matched the league's high game this week with a sizzling 245, finishing with a 599 three-game series. The week before, Ralph Edwards of Professional Barber Shop hit the same score. Edwards is a 170-average bowler.

Other UNC men high on the list of averages are Barry Carroll of Professional Barber Shop — 168, Jerry Gunter (Dental School) of Walker's Gulf—168, Norman Rose of Kenan Oil—165, Bill Riddle of Walker's Gulf—163, and Allen Clay of Maultsby Perry—162.

Clay threw the hottest intramural series last week, a 620, paced by a 236 game. His Delta Sigma Pi team set a new total pin record the same day.

Recently, a UNC team participated in the Region Four intercollegiate tournament at Atlanta, Ga., and came away with two trophies. The Graham Memorial-sponsored team took second place in the team event and third in the doubles.

Walker was the top Tar Heel in the singles event with a 555 set, and Ridout was the all events leader for UNC with a 1693 for nine games—a 188 average.

Striking Miner Berman Gibson

Ky. Miner Says Wages Too Low

By BOB SAMSOT

Floods and unfair labor practices are ruining the people in East Kentucky, according to Berman Gibson, a man who currently is a picket leader in the wildcat strikes near Hazard, Ky.

Gibson spoke at Carroll Hall Wednesday night and tried to point out the low living conditions in East Kentucky and gain support for the wildcat strikes which are occurring there.

He played a 30-minute recording of a plea made by "Preacher" White, another Hazard miner-preacher and then filled in and answered questions on the poor conditions and the rising rate of unemployment and falling rate of pay.

He said that the larger companies were operating through smaller companies called truck mines, and were thus able to get coal mined by non-union practices. He said that the miners in his section were forced under these conditions to work for sometimes as little as two dollars a day or not eat.

"Food Stamps"

Most of the people there are eating by "food stamps" — a practice whereby each family is given a certain number of stamps to buy food with. He said that the only way these stamps were obtainable was by the miner's agreement to work at any job for the amount of pay that the owners wanted to pay him.

"The union is not helping the miners there because it is too expensive," he said. Eastern Kentucky is a section which has no industry whatsoever besides the coal. Whatever business that might have been started there has been driven away by the miners' inability to pay or by the floods which are helped by Kentucky's method of "strip mining" in which a strip of land is peeled off to mine the coal and leaves no deterrent to water flow.

As of now, he said, some of the people are sleeping on tables, or on cardboard. Some of the children aren't fed in the morning because there just isn't any food in the homes, he added.

Low Wages

Gibson said that if the miners were given a decent wage, which he claims could be given by the owners without a total loss of profit, conditions would be better. But now, he claims, the mines are run on a low-pay basis and conditions will not change until this is changed.

He also reported that the hospitals which the miners have will soon be closed, leaving the men who are dying of silicosis no place to turn.

The reason the miners aren't getting the changes they want, Gibson concluded lies in the men themselves. "They're too weak-kneed," he said, "but a few of us are in here to stay until things clear up or the operators catch up with us. They've got guns, but we do, too."

SP Platform

The Student Party yesterday released its platform for the spring elections which states that the SP "pledges vigorous and sound leadership to promote progressive and effectual student government, based on honor, responsibility and understanding in the coming year."

The platform promises SP support for co-ed visiting arrangements in men's dorms, the improvement of dorm physical facilities, the establishment of a university study program in other countries, the reorganization of the executive branch of Student Government and support of more student representation on faculty committees.

The goals of the SP platform include the establishment of special Student professorships with substantial salary supplements awarded to distinguished teachers. The party proposes to work for expanded exchange programs with foreign universities and the institution of an American Studies program on campus.

More Participation

The SP promises to "encourage participation from all areas of the campus, especially the non-affiliated men and women and Stray Greek women." The party would also work with the IDC to bring more women to this campus from neighboring girls' colleges for social events.

In order to further relations between Student Government and the faculty and administration, the SP would initiate an annual conference with the participation of all three groups to "examine and establish the direction and goals of student government."

The SP also proposes to create, with the aid of the administration and the national fraternities, an IFC-administered loan fund to "decrease the financial strain of deferred rush."

Student Co-op

A proposed goal of the SP will be to work for the institution of a student cooperative bookstore that could be located in the new student union. The party would also investigate the possibility of a "financially self-sustaining YACKETY YACK which would be supported by individual subscription instead of through student fees which now amount to $35,000 a year.

The SP also plans to work for the establishment of a "strong campus radio station" through Carrier Current.

Coach Fired After Letter Criticizing Big Time Sports

By BOB SAMSOT

Freshman tennis coach Tom Crais was fired from his coaching job on March 12 because of "unfitting remarks" he made in a letter to the Daily Tar Heel, Athletic Director Chuck Erickson reported yesterday.

In a letter to the editor, published on March 9, Crais said "I recent days there have been subterranean murmurs . . . about . . . Honor Council concessions for athletes. These blatant violations would not occur . . ."

Erickson, said, "I immediately called an Honor Council representative and Dean Long to ask if this was so. I was assured it was entirely false, Such a statement by Mr. Crais definitely hurt the University and its high standards of operation. It was my feeling that such remarks were not fitting for a member of the athletic department."

Crais is of a diferent opinion. "I was fired because I criticized the athletic department," he said. "My views were in conflict with other coaches." His opinions as stated in the letter were opposed to playing solely to win.

Erickson — A Different View

Erickson said, "His particular philosophy regarding the handling of athletic teams was not a factor — although I am not in accord with his views, nor do I believe anyone on our coaching staff is."

"There is no substance to Mr. Crais' charge that athletes have enjoyed special concessions by the Honor Council," says Whitney Durand, Men's Council chairman. "On three occasions this year intercollegiate athletes have been tried for Honor Code violations. In one instance, the student was suspended from school, and the other two defendants were absolved of the charge."

Durand further stated, "Mr. Crais' allegations are veiled under the cover of "subterranean murmurings." There is no truth to such rumors which seem to be both an unfair slap at the position of intercollegiate athletics at UNC and an inaccurate knowledge of proceedings before the Men's Council."

Aycock Supports Erickson

Chancellor William B. Aycock said yesterday that he had not been personally involved in the matter but that he will stand behind the steps which Erickson has taken as Athletic Director.

Crais, a 30-year old native of New Orleans, came to the University in 1960 after working a year as student chaplain at the University of Georgia. He also is an instructor in the physical education department here. Prior to that he had obtained a B.A. of Philosophy degree at the University of Southwestern Louisiana and a B.D. of Theology from Union Seminary, Richmond, Va.

Coach Scored Win Emphasis In DTH Letter

The following are paragraphs taken from Tom Crais' letter to the Daily Tar Heel on March 9 which cost him his job.

"In recent days here at UNC there have been "subterranean murmurs" about grade changing and Honor Council concessions for athletes. These blatant violations of UNC principles would not occur if the sportsman was not a privileged character who, although having lost the preeminent position held in the late 40's still maintains an exalted, but uestionable rank in our midst. This rank is spurred on by overemphasis upon winning.

* * *

"The coach, under pressure of winning, makes the erroneous euation of: winning equals character formation. His tactic is usually a fired up speech to the boys about "giving his all." The subtle intimation is that if the boy doesn't win, then he hasn't given his all.

"Gentlemen and coaches, college athletics is a game. . . . A coach's job is to teach during practice hours. The players should be given the chance to perform ON THEIR OWN in the games. . . ."

Guitarist Performs In Memorial Tonite

Tonight, at 8 in Memorial Hall, Graham Memorial will present Rey de la Torre, Cuban classic guitarist.

Rey de la Torre has been heard by countrywide audiences in recitals and concerto appearances, and in television events, such as the "Guitar" show on CBS-TV, and the television broadcast of Garcia Lorca's "The House of Bernarda Alba" for which he supplied the entire musical background. He has also been a guest on such TV shows as the Jack Parr Show, the Today Show, and Camera 3.

As an artist, he is in close touch with contemporary musical developments, particularly of the States and Latin America, with special interest for his youthful associates in Havana. Among these is the young Cuban composer, Julian Orbon, recent winner of major Latin-American awards, and composer of a work especially for Rey de la Torre. Other composers, such as Jose Ardevol and Joaquin Nin-Culmell, have written works for Rey de la Torre which appear on many of his programs.

IDC Planning Investigation Of Coed Dorm Room Visits

The Interdormitory Council Wednesday night unanimously adopted a resolution favoring a study of the feasibility of visiting privileges for women in residence halls of all men's dormitories.

The resolution proposed the formation of a committee within the IDC to investigate similar programs which have been successful at other schools, the controls required and the problems involved in initiating such a program at UNC.

IDC President Ralph Mosley said the committee would be appointed soon.

Officers Nominated

The Council also nominated candidates for IDC officers for the coming year. The new officers will be elected next week and will be installed at the IDC Awards Banquet on April 7.

Those nominated were: For President: Gerry Goode, Pres. — Ruffin; Gordon Appell, IDC Rep. — Joyner; and George Rosental, Pres. — Craige.

For Vice President: Vee Bundy, IDC Rep. — Everett.

For Secretary: Clark Brewer, IDC Rep. — Craige.

For Treasurer: Ed Burt, IDC Rep. — Aycock.

Member Censured

In other business, the Council unanimously supported the Executive Committee's censure of a Court member for revealing essential factors of a Court case outside the trial room.

The resolution asking the Council's concurrence in this censure said that all courts on campus require "all court members hearing any case to maintain strict silence about any essential factors in the case."

Recently, it continued, a member of the IDC Court violated this trust and "behaved in a most unbecoming manner for one in his position of responsible decision-making."

"Therefore, the IDC Executive Committee has unanimously adopted a vote of censure condeming this action as irresponsible and falsely reflecting IDC policy.

UP Platform

The University Party platform for the coming year, as released yesterday, promises to work for improved dorm social conditions, the establishment of a student cooperative, the reorganization of student government and the reinstatement of a reading day before final exams.

The UP proposes to establish monthly joint meetings of the IDC and CWC to promote and coordinate dormitory social functions. The UP platform urges support for the supplementation of existing dorm funds with Student Government and administrative funds for the improvement of dorm social rooms.

The establishment of "quiet dorms" over a 2-year period and an experimental co-ed dormitory are among the other UP planks.

SG Reorganization

The UP proposes a reorganization of Student Government to achieve "better communication and greater coordination between committees." he platform also proposes to eliminate superfluous committees and to combine others. A presidential cabinet would be created, composed of the directors of the several committee groupings, and would serve as an advisory board to president. Also a Presidential Communication Staff would visit in individual student rooms to discuss programs and ideas.

The UP promises to expand the National Merit Scholarship Committee, which was established this year in order to attract more outstanding high school students to UNC through campus visits and discussions with students and faculty.

The party would also create a central filing system of all midterm and final exams of all courses that would be located in the reserve reading room and would work for the replacement of the present drop-add system by a method of study-card filing.

New Legislative Branch

An additional legislative branch of Student Government would act as "a vehicle for the expression of student opinions through representatives from political organizations such as YDC and YRC" would be created out of the Di-Phi. Membership in this body could be extended on a geographic basis, according to the platform.

Cooper Selected As New Y Head

In accepting the position, Cooper called for a tightly knit executive committee whose main purpose would be to co-ordinate the activities of the Y cabinets. "In order for the Y to carry on a successful program the committees must be active in their projects," he said.

An English major and a member of Zeta Beta Tau fraternity, Cooper has enjoyed a long association with the Y. He served as vice-president this year in addition to conducting an extremely successful High-Y program at the Chapel Hill High School.

After participating in the freshman camp, Cooper became a counselor and assistant director. He has served on the campus chest committee, the Dix Hill and Orphanage committees and the freshman forum.

Conference Representative

Cooper attended the National Student Assembly conference of the YM-YWCA at the University of Illinois during the Christmas holidays and was Carolina's representative to the Blue Ridge conference last summer.

Presently Cooper is working with a committee to organize a North and South Carolina YMCA conference to be held at UNC later in the spring.

Joining Cooper on the executive committee will be Rick Edwards, vice-president; Kellis Parker, secretary; and Joe Griffin, treasurer.

Edwards, a sophomore from Auburn, Alabama, was International Affairs chairman this year and participated in the freshman forum. He helped organize and establish the International Affairs reading room on the first floor of the Y building.

Well Traved

Griffin, a junior from Williamston, has been a member of the freshman forum and was chairman of the YMCA supper forum this past year. He is a Morehead scholar.

Interviews

As a first order of business Cooper announced that interviews for the YMCA committee chairmanships will be conducted March 22, 25 and 26 in the YMCA office from 3-5 p.m.

Those positions which will be open are U. N. Education, Public Affairs, International Relations, Human Relations, Freshman Forum, Dix Hill, Catholic Orphanage, Supper Forum and Religious Emphasis.

Replacing the Hospital committee of the YMCA next year will be the Writer-in-Residence commitee. Although the chairman will not be selected at this time interviews will be announced in the near future.

Probably the most well traveled member of the executive committee is Parker, a junior from Kinston. He was one of five American delegates to attend the Intercollegiate Council of the United Nations in Lavardia, Greece, last year. Parker is chairman of the Collegiate Council of the UN at Carolina.

The secretary-elect was a leading figure in the UN Model Assembly. He attended the NSA-Y conference at the University of Illinois and is the UNC representative to to the southern area YMCA board.

'Takes Issue' With Changes Made By WRC

By JOEL BULKLEY

Tuesday night's decision of the Women's Residence Council to repeal the controversial "Apartment Rule" for all but freshmen was overruled yesterday by Dean of Women Katherine armichael.

In a statement to the DTH she stated that: "The office of the Dean of Women announces that all rules published in the booklet entitled REGULATIONS FOR WOMEN STUDENTS, 1962-63, are currently in effect, and not the rules as formulated and passed by the Women's Residence Council on March 19, 1963. I regret that I am obligated to take issue with the Council's previous statement, as published by the DTH on March 20."

Bev Haynes, chairman of the Women's Honor Council, recommended last night that legislative action on this issue be withheld until a more comprehensive view of the present situation is available. She noted that ostensibly the present situation concerns the "Apartment Rule" but now that the rights delegated to students have been challenged, the issue at hand has changed.

Although Dianne Blanton, chairman of the WRC, was not available for comment last night, she has said, "The council felt that changing this rule is something we must do as a representative and legislative body of the women students on this campus. We do not feel that this is a rejection of responsibility on the part of the council, and I would like to point out that we continue to maintain full responsibility for all conduct on the part of the women students under the provisions of the Campus Code."

The "Apartment Rule" states that no woman student may visit in a man's apartment unless a minimum of two couples are present.

Apartment Rule Was Dertiment To Honor System

The action of the Women's Residence Council in repealing the "Apartment Rule" for all upperclasswomen was neither hasty nor ill-advised. It was, instead, a carefully considered move designed to strengthen the Honor System by terminating the hypocrisy of enforcing such a widely ignored, outdated rule.

Hardly a single student leader (including those in the Judicial branch) felt that the so-called "two couple" rule had any relation whatsoever to either morals or "lady-like conduct."

An overwhelming majority of the current generation of students felt that it was an absurdity to define the presence of only one couple in an apartment as an automatic violation of the Campus Code. The rule, therefore, was ignored by all but a handful of students.

The Women's Council was placed in the embarrassing and ethically questionable position of enforcing a rule with which the Council members strongly disagreed.

The hypocrisy of this situation lessened the respect of many students for the entire Honor System.

The Womens' Council, being obliged to enforce what most students feel is a ridiculous rule, was made to look ridiculous itself. This, in turn, reflected upon the Honor System.

The Womens' Council and the Women's Residence Council are composed of mature, responsible coeds. They (as well as every member of the Men's Council and almost every student leader) have come to the conclusion that the rule has nothing to do with honorable conduct, that it is held in contempt by most students; that it is widely ignored; and that it places both the campus code and the Honor Code in a bad light.

Some people seem to have forgotten that the Honor System is based upon the principle that the students, through their elected representatives, will determine the standards of conduct to which they will adhere.

If the administration and the Faculty Committee on Discipline have the slightest degree of faith in student government and student responsibility, they will abide by the carefully thought-out decision of the WRC. If not, they will just have to make their own rule . . . and enforce it themselves.

Two-Wheeled Status

Weejuns seem passe.

The latest thing in Chapel Hill seems to be the soft "put put" of motor scooters. Word has it that the kids in Ehringhaus and Craige no longer hoof it to class or take taxis, they now roar in from the woods on two-wheeled status symbols.

There has been an occasional sighting of one lovely lass who travels the bricks on a lavender scooter, making the antics of the no-hands bicycle rider seem showy but small-time.

Perhaps if the fad picks up steam, we will see the demise of the ticket-tagging campus cop. (CW)

For Summer Congress

NSA Candidates Express Opinions

INMAN ALLEN (UP)

As president of the student body this year, I have been increasingly impressed with the value of the National Student Association (NSA) as service and stimulous to student government. This is a role of the Association which I would like to see expanded and developed.

At last year's National Student Congress, a controversy developed which has grown this year concerning the direction of NSA's emphasis; the issue involved is whether to continue the preoccupation at the Congress with political matters, or to devote more attention to programs which will be of greater use on the member campuses.

Although this may seem a rather involved issue to someone who has not been to a Congress before it is basic in that it will determine the future of NSA's relationship with every member campus. By explaining the factors involved in this; the most fundamental controversy to confront NSA in many years; I hope to present to you the views which I will carry to the 16th National Student Congress if elected.

I see NSA's role in political affairs beyond the campus as an educational function, and not an attempt by students to influence national policy. A traditional aim of the Association has been to make students aware of the issues which concerned them as young citizens. To me, this is basic to a meaningful education, and is an area which NSA has been a leader in since its conception in 1947.

However, despite the valuable work that has been done in this field, there has been a tendency at recent Congresses for the delegates to become so involved in their stand on particular issues that they have forgotten that they have a responsibility to provide a similar stimulation for their campuses.

Although I am a senior this year, I feel that my past experience with NSA can serve a valuable function in explaining this and other issues to the rest of the UNC delegation, most of whom have had no previous experience with the Association. This idea of increasing the value of the Congress to member campuses is one that I believe in strongly, and will work for if you choose to send me.

PHIL BADDOUR (SP)

It is my opinion that the University of North Carolina has in the past, is at the present, and should in the future benefit from participation in the U.S.N.S.A. Not only does our campus benefit from sending delegates to the congress each summer but also through the programs which are available through N.S.A. all year around.

N.S.A. is the only organization in the U.S. which has the potential of being a nationwide expression of student opinion. For this reason I feel that it is very important for Southern schools to actively participate. Without them, the N.S.A. cannot in reality be representative of student opinion. I think it very significant that last years congress passed an amendment to its constitution which was offered by Mike Lawler. The amendment explicitly states that membership in N.S.A. does not imply agreement with all of the policies or actions of N.S.A.

So far as direct benefits to the campus are concerned, there can be no doubt that in the past delegates to the Congress have returned to this campus with a deeper understanding of Student Government. It appears that the Congress has served as a workshop in leadership in addition to instilling in its participants a knowledge of student rights, responsibilities, and methods of action. Another important benefit to this campus is through the communication which members of N.S.A. are able to establish with one another.

One of the most important benefits of N.S.A. is its concern with and formation of resolutions on issues which involve the student in his role as a student. I feel that in the consideration of student related national and world problems, N.S.A. substantially contributes to the total education process by creating an awareness of and stimulating action on existing student problems. Students do have a right to take stands on all issues which concern them and I can think of no better way than through N.S.A.

VANCE BARRON (SP)

The National Student Association today stands as a symbol of the concern of the American student about his role in society and in education.

NSA sponsors seminars on student affairs, travel programs, exchange scholarships with international student leaders and many other programs that benefit and serve students. In addition NSA lends its support to other international student associations, to the World University Service, the American Council on Education and other groups that are interested in furthering the causes of human freedom and academic freedom.

The policies of NSA are formed each summer at the annual NSA Congress, this year to be held at the University of Indiana. There the 351 member universities and colleges meet to discuss student government and affairs of concern to students and to determine NSA policy by enacting resolutions. These programs and resolutions which are endorsed by the NSA Congress will be coordinated by an elected Executive Committee working with a paid staff throughout the coming year. There are also NSA Coordinators on each member campus who publicize and direct NSA activities.

NSA affects most students on this campus, either directly or indirectly, yet many remain unaware of its presence. I feel that NSA should be of concern to every student and that its programs should receive the wide-spread support that it needs if it is to be truly effective.

Since its beginning in 1947, NSA has grown rapidly in size and influence. John F. Kennedy said recently that NSA demonstrates "by continued pioneering the growing concern of thoughtful men and women with respect to the awesome questions of this age." An NSA that is both responsive to the problems facing American students and responsible in its leadership can truly demonstrate the basic principle on which NSA was founded: that student initiative is the best way to handle student problems.

VIRGINIA CARNES (UP)

The National Student Association (NSA) was founded in 1947 by students to assist the needs of higher education in a rapidly changing world.

All policies and programs are established by the annual National Student Congress to which Carolina and 400 other colleges and Universities send delegates. It is through these policies that the goals of maintaining academic freedom and student rights of stimulating and improving democratic student government; of developing better educational standards, facilities and teaching methods; of improving student cultural, social, and physical welfare; and of promoting international understanding are laid down and fulfilled.

With these goals in mind, I feel NSA stimulates student resposibility by providing programs such as its development of better freshman orientation programs, better techniques of student government, etc. to make the university a better place in which to live.

NSA attempts to formulate a concept of the ideal university community for American students. For this concept the student strives, and through NSA, which will serve to express areas of student concern and interest and affect student thought and welfare through programing, he may make freedom of speech, freedom of association, freedom of access to information and equality of admission procedures a reality to his campus.

I feel NSA shows the student the importance of his position as a student, for education is essential to a democratic society. He must learn the importance of the quality of his education, and the importance of taking an active part in making that experience more meaningful. With a growing concern for his own education, hopefully he may gain a concern for American education as a whole.

Through NSA congresses and conferences, he may gain the knowledge and conviction to evaluate his curriculum, his extra curricular activities, and his college living experience. NSA provides services to the entire academic community through programs such as the Academic Freedom Project, which examines student-faculty-administration relations, freedom of expression and the student role in policy formation, the Aims of Education conference; Educational Travel, volume of American student travellers, and provides low-cost educational foreign travel programs.

The Southern Human Relations Project offers students in the South the opportunity to discuss and plan intelligent responses to the challenges facing a region of intense social and political change, and The International Student Relations Seminar awards scholarships to 17-18 participants for a 18 week course of intensive study.

In all these ways NSA, the most representative voice of American students in the United States today, offers the opportunity to discuss, debate, exchange ideas and seek solutions to problems facing the national and international student community today in a world that cries for understanding.

Through my interest and concern in these areas, I feel I can represent our university responsibly and fairly at the 1963 National Student Congress.

NEAL JACKSON (SP)

It distresses me somewhat to learn of the attitude of some individuals toward attendance at the N. S. A. congress. Apparently, some of them consider this function as a paid "trip-vacation". This, to me, is a rather immature attitude and is certainly detrimental to our here-to-fore outstanding position as a pioneer in N. S. A.

Attendance at the congress is a two-way street — our delegates should not only represent Carolina, but should be prepared to return from the student government workshops and communicate this knowledge back to the campus. Without this the money we spend on sending a delegation is only utilized at half of its potential. In selecting our delegates, the ability to return and disseminate this information should be of utmost importance.

N. S. A. is the only opportunity for individuals from the major colleges to assemble, air their views, and consolidate some kind of synthesis regarding student opinion in the U. S. This assemblage is indeed a powerful force in U. S. higher education, a group that is viewed by educational authorities with great respect. N. S. A. is a forward-looking organization which is realistic and seldom utopian in its views. Carolina has always been one of the biggest leaders in the congresses, and we will continue to be so, provided competent individuals are delegated to represent us and to return and keep the U. N. C. student interest at a high level.

JOHN ULFELDER (UP)

The National Student Association is the largest student forum of its kind in the United States, representing 33 colleges, universities, junior colleges, and well over one million American students. It provides an organizational meeting ground for students from all over the United States to get together and exchange ideas to their mutual benefit. Therein lies the benefit to the campus and in particular to UNC. By having capable and knowledgable delegates both at the Summer Congress and participating in NSA, Carolina has been able to reap the benefit of this exchange by gaining new and different ideas that help make a better student government and better student community at UNC. Some of the areas that NSA has information on and helps UNC with are: student co-operatives, housing problems, honor systems, orientation, campus communications, and student economic welfare. As for actual programs that are now operating, NSA provides such services as: Educational Travel Incorporated an non-profit organization to aid students while traveling in foreign countries, or the National Commission, which provides publications information and services for seminars and campus projects. All these specific programs have a direct benefit for the student and his campus.

As for the role NSA should play in the educational field and within the student community, the benefits here are as great as those from the specific programs. NSA believes that students have a position of significance and should concern themselves with problems beyond the campus; this would be in the area of national and international problems. The students world should not be a constricted one, but an expanding one. NSA is the only student organization in the United States that provides a truly democratic forum for the full discussion of these broader issues and allows students to express their views collectively. This broader discussion is as much a part of the students education as is the classroom discussion or the text-book reading. There is room in NSA for a variance in views and the Association does not claim to represent the views of everyone; but the important fact is that the discussion goes on and that students have the opportunity to express their views, no matter how different they are.

PETE WALES (UP)

The National Student Association is simply an organization through which student governments and individual students from campuses all over the country communicate with one another. Through the innumerable services of NSA, students and student leaders may find out what their contemporaries are doing and thinking throughout the U. S. It is the student union of the United States.

In the National Student Congress of NSA which takes place every summer, delegates meet from all over the country in a model legislature to discuss and vote upon resolutions affecting college and university students. This assembly gives delegates a chance to meet with students from other campuses and to discuss ideas and politics of the campuses, the nation and the world. It also allows the delegates to debate and vote on the activities of NSA for the coming year. This Congress formulates the policy under which NSA will operate and determines the character of our national student union.

My experience with the Men's Honor Council, the Academic Affairs Committee and the International Students Board on this campus plus numerous other activities qualifies me to represent the UNC campus at this Congress and to accurately represent our student government and its activities. My experience for the last two years in the North Carolina State Student Legislature has made me familiar with the procedures of a model legislative body. I further hope to apply what I learn from other students at the summer Congress to my activities on campus and to bring new ideas into the work of Carolina's student government.

Playmakers Give One Acts Tonight

Two playwrights will see their works performed for the first time here Friday and Saturday when the Carolina Playmakers presents its 200th Bill of New One-Act Plays.

The commemorative performance of three plays will bring the number of new plays performed on the Playmakers Theatre stage to over 1000. The third playwright, Wes Van Tassel of Kent, Minn., had one of his plays ("Look Down from a Mountain") produced here last year.

Mr. Van Tassel's play for the 200th bill is "Folly," a study of the beatnik approach to modern life. "Folly" is the second play of a trilogy called "The Contrast," in which the playwright presents three different attitudes toward modern life.

"Clown for a Day," a childrens' play by Reginald Spaulding of Durham, will be the author's first produced work. It reflects a child's reactions as he gets the wish that will make him happy—a day at the circus.

"Pity Has a Human Face," a comedy by Scott Byrd of Brookhaven, Miss., will open the 200th Bill. Mr. Byrd, a UNC graduate student, wrote the play because "a friend suggested the interesting title, and I wanted to make people laugh." It is Mr. Byrd's first play.

Audience-playwright discussions after each of the plays will be led alternately by Frances Gray Patton and Paul Green, both Playmakers alumni and award-winning writers. Harry Davis, chairman of the Dept. Dramatic Art at UNC, will also serve as a moderator.

Curtain time for the bill of plays will be 7:30 each evening, March 29 and 30. There is no admission charge, but complimentary tickets may be reserved in advance to insure seating. Reservations may be made at the Playmakers business office, 214 Abernethy Hall.

A wonderful thing just happened at Troy's!

We're "hi-fi nuts" or "stereo separation idiots", whichever one you want to call us. Anyway, that's how we got started in the sound business to begin with.

Well---to get to the point, my partner and myself finally saved enough money to get the ultimate - a pair of KLH model nines ($1140.00 a shot). These little gems are about 6 feet tall and 3 feet wide apiece. This is the world's finest speaker system, and is the only full range electrostatic speaker in the U.S.A. We fully realize that very few people have enough money to shell out over a "grand" for a speaker system — but, we would like for you to have the opportunity to hear just how great stereo can be. So.o.o.o.o. we're going to have an open house this FRIDAY and SATURDAY to show off the speakers.

These speakers will be employed with a $2700.00 hi-fi stereo system. So, please come by anytime the 22nd or 23rd of March and brag on this system (we need someone to boost our ego after spending all this loot).

With "SOUND" est regards,

Baseballers Open Season Today

Bill Haywood Hurls Against S. Illinois

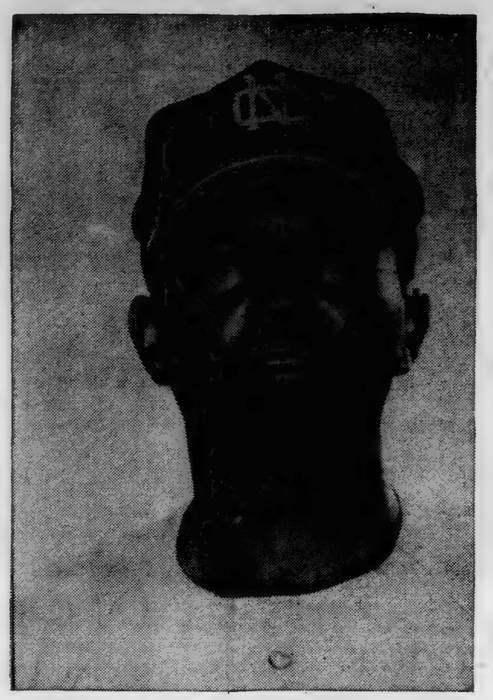
North Carolina's baseball team opens the 1963 season this afternoon against Southern Illinois, hoping for a complete reversal of the 1962 season. Gametime on Emerson Field is 3 p.m.

Last year Coach Walter Rabb's men finished last in the Atlantic Coast Conference. An improved pitching staff and a bevy of long-ball hitters indicate that the Tar Heels will once more be fighting for the conference title.

Righthander Bill Haywood, a transfer from Wilmington Junior College, will be the opening-day pitcher. Also expected to see hurling action this weekend are Spence Willard, Larry Jenkins and Joe White. The Tar Heels will play Southern Illinois again tomorrow afternoon.

Lettermen pitchers for UNC are Andy Billesdon, Bobby Cox and Bob Carter. Newcomers are Junior Edge, Jerry Davis, Bill Danneman, Bobby Reagon, Wendell Brande, Walton Ward and Art Katz.

Most of Rabb's pre-season experimenting has been with his pitchers—the entire flock of them. Wildness on the mound was the big nemesis last spring.



The power men in the Tar Heel lineup are first baseman Frank Gallagher, who planted one against Lenoir Hall some 410 feet away in a practice game this week; Bill Brown, a first baseman who may be switched to third where he's also played; Ken Willard, Buddy Tilden, Gary Black and Heyward Hull, a quartet of hard-hitting outfielders; and shortstop Jim Speight.

If Gallagher starts at first, then the rest of the infield should be sophomore Dick Prindle at second, Speight at short and Brown on third. If Brown opens at first, then either Bill Taylor, Tom Wright or Pete Rose will handle the hot corner.

The two games this weekend will open an eight-game home stand for the Tar Heels. The first ACC contest is with Duke here in two weeks.

COACH WALTER RABB sets his sights on an improved season for 1963. The Tar Heels finished last in the ACC in 1962. The new season opens today against Southern Illinois and the two teams will meet again tomorrow afternoon.

Golfers Meet Clemson Today

Home tests with Clemson Friday and South Carolina Saturday launch North Carolina's dual meet golf season.

Starting time for both matches at Finley Golf Course is 1:30.

In the first round of a stroke play tournament between Carolina, Duke and Wake Forest, the Tar Heels opened the '63 activity by placing third. Two more rounds of that tournament are to be played.

Coach Ed Kenney has ten candidates from which to select his lineup: lettermen Abe Andes, Mike Dore, Harvey Hill and George Reams, sophomores Ed Hoopes, Tommy Arnold, Skip Tucker and Les Fleisher, and newcomers Billy Stephenson and Rick McCall.

UNC Matmen To Nationals

Carolina wrestlers Jerry Cabe and Gene Record are competing in the national championships Thursday, Friday and Saturday at Kent State, Ohio.

Both ranked third in the Atlantic Coast Conference this season. Cabe, a starting guard on the Tar Heel football team, will wrestle in the heavyweight division. Record will be in the 167-pound class.

Coach Sam Barnes will accompany them.

Navy Leads Dormitory Race; Phi Delts, Physics Also 1st

By STUART BALL

Navy jumped into an 18-point lead in the Dormitory point standings and replaced Manly as the division's leader.

Manly, who lost many of their outstanding fall stars at mid-term, failed to enter handball and table tennis competition and fell from first to fourth in the standings.

Navy has done well in all activities this year and has jockeyed with Manly all year for the lead.

Following Navy's 631 is Mangum at 613. From second to third place there is a 60-point drop to Everett's 553. Manly follows at 532.

Alexander and Joyner are in positions to challenge for the number three spot. Their totals are 514 and 507, respectively.

The biggest jump in the standings belongs to Teague which advanced from 14th to ninth place. A first-place finish in basketball and a second in table tennis accounted for the improvement.

The Phi Delts lost some ground to DKE and SAE but remained in the top spot in the Fraternity Blue League.

The race for first place is exclusively a three team affair with the Phi Delt's 685 followed by DKE's 659 and SAE's 624.

A three-team race is in the making for the fourth position also. Beta and ATO are virtually tied now with 522 and 521 and Chi Psi is in contention with 470.

The tightest portion of the division, however, is from the 10th to 22nd positions. Phi Kappa Sigma is now 10th with 369 points but Pi Lamb at 22nd is but 60 points away with 309.

Phi Delt's 458 total can only be caught by ATO's 407 if it is to be caught at all. Following the top two is SAE and DKE at 384 and Chi Psi with 383 in a real battle for third place.

DU's outstanding table tennis participants enabled them to jump from 12th to sixth and into a challenging position with 358 points.

In the Grad division, Physics has all but wrapped up the title. They now hold a 135-point lead over their closest pursuer, Law School.

Their 690 total points are the best of any team in all four sections. Law School has 565 and Peacocks is third with 501.

Max Gardner Award Goes To Brauer

Dr. John Charles Brauer, Dean of the UNC School of Dentistry and "one of the most creative and influential national spokesmen in the field of dentistry," is the recipient of the 1963 O. Max Gardner Award.

The award was made at a banquet in Lenoir Hall last night at which Fred M. Hechinger, Education Editor of the New York Times, was the principal speaker.

Dr. Brauer, who has headed the UNC School of Dentistry from its founding, in 1950, was cited for his achievements by Mrs. George Wilson of Fayetteville, chairman of the Board of Trustee's Committee for the O. Max Gardner Award. The citation read:

"John Charles Brauer: by successive achievements as student, practitioner, teacher, and administrator, and as accepted spokesman for dental education in America, you have attained a place of high distinction in your profession. By creative and indefatigable leadership within the faculties of the University of North Carolina and among your professional colleagues, you have established the foundation of lasting repute for the School of Dentistry. By innovating measures of professional practice you have improved the benefits of dental science and made them accessible to ever larger numbers of people.

"In recognition of your academic and professional leadership; in acknowledgement of the contribution that you are making to the better health of North Carolinians and of future generations everywhere; and with appreciation for the value of your personal dedication to humane endeavors, the trustees have adjudged you to be the member of the faculties of the University of North Carolina who in the current scholastic year has made the greatest contribution to the welfare of the human race, and, therefore, the recipient of the O. Max Gardner Award for 1963."

$1,500 Increase Over Last Year's Expenditures

By JOEL BULKLEY

A proposed Student Government budget of $155,799.64 for the 1963-64 school year was submitted to Student Legislature for its approval Thursday night. SL will begin consideration of the budget at next week's session.

The proposed budget, as drawn up by the SL Budget and Finance Committees, calls for increases of approximately $1,500 in expenditures and $3,000 in anticipated income over last year.

Estimated Income

The figure for anticipated income is derived by calculating the average estimated enrollment for 1963-64 and multiplying that times the apropriate student fee collected by SG. The estimated enrollment includes 6,899 undergraduates and 2,832 graduate students for a total of 9,731. Each undergraduate pays $18 of his student fees to SG for $124,182.00 while each graduate pays $14.56 (for $41,233.92) to SG for its total anticipated income of $165,415.92. Last year's anticipated figure was $162,400.00

Still under consideration are budget requests for the SG Executive Branch: General Administration and Communications Committee.

Estimated Expenses

Estimated expenses for next year as they stand now, include $55,138.64 for Graham Memorial $36,423.00 for the Yackety-Yack $30,610.00 for the DTH; $5,828.00 for the International Students Board; $3,540.00 for the Interdormitory Council; and $2600.00 for the Carolina Forum.

Also $2,483.50 for the Carolina Handbook; $2,300 for the UNC Debate team; $1,900.00 for the Executive Secretary; $1,262 for NSA; $1,230.00 for the UNC Band; $1,510 for the UNC Glee Club; $1,905.00 for the Carolina Quarterly; $1,500 for the Symposium; $1,680 for SG Yack space; $1,200.00 for the SG-Executive Branch; $1,200 for the Senior Class; $540.00 for the Toronto Exchange; and $700 for the Victory Village Board of Aldermen.

By VANCE BARRON, Jr.

There seems to be no significant change in the academic performance of this year's freshman class in comparison to last year's class, Dean Carlyle Sitterson of the College of Arts and Sciences reported yesterday.

Sitterson dispelled rumors that the freshman class had done extremely poor last semester by saying "it is extremely difficult to demonstrate any increase or decrease in the academic performance of freshman.

"The only trend that can be shown beyond any question is that the academic quality of entering freshmen is improving. There is no data available which can demonstrate conclusively that there is any trend to the contrary."

The grade average of freshmen has improved slightly, with the past semester, though such an indication is not statistically significant, Sitterson noted. At the end of the fall semester of 1961, the grade average of 1,601 freshman was 1.932.

At the end of the fall semester of this year, the average of 1,824 freshmen was computed at 1.952. However, in 1961, 82.6 per cent had an average of 1.25 or higher, while last semester 77 per cent of the freshmen made this average. Dean Sitterson made the point that the figures for the fall semester of 1961 did not include withdrawals during the semester, while the figures for this year did. There are some 30 to 50 freshmen withdrawals each year during the fall semester which would account for some bias in the figures, he said.

The one distinguishable trend that is evident from figures available is that the academic ability of entering freshmen is improving Sitterson said. In 1958 the average total College Board score for entering freshmen was 961. In 1961 this average had risen to 1037. The minimum College Board score for admission to the University was raised from 700 to 750 in 1961, so that "we haven't had any class graduate under the existing admission requirements yet," according to Dean Sitterson.

In comparing grade distribution for the same period, it was found that there was a decrease in the percentage of students receiving D's and F's.

In 1958, in 29 freshman courses 8.6 per cent of the grades given were A's, while in 1961 6.5 per cent of the grades given were A's. Also in 1958, 18.97 per cent of the grades given were D's and 10.2 per cent were F's. In 1961, for the same courses 20.27 per cent were D's and 12.967 F's.

Dean Sitterson suggested, in a report to the advisers in Arts and Sciences, that the students are not studying as hard or that grade requirements are stiffening.

There was also little difference in the performance of the freshman class and fraternity pledges, for the fall semester. While not all fraternity pledges are freshmen, the large majority are, and the figures are roughly comparable for the two groups.

The percentage of the freshman class making a C-average or better was 49.6 per cent while 46.9 per cent of fraternity pledges made this average.

$75,000 So Far To Med Foundation

Advance gifts totalling $751,000 have sparked the fund-raising drive of the Medical Foundation of North Carolina for expanded medical facilities and scholarships at the UNC School of Medicine, it was announced here today.

Paul W. Shenck Jr., of Greensboro, Foundation President, made the announcement at the annual luncheon and joint meeting of the UNC Medical Alumni Association and the Medical Foundation, at the Carolina Inn here, this noon.

Charles M. Shaffer, UNC Director of Development, told of significant gifts from Burlington Industries, Inc.; R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.; Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Co.; and the Pilot Life Insurance Co.

Also announced were two major funds, the Kenneth R. Edwards Scholarship Fund and the Celeste Blake Wilder Bequest for Medical Scholarships.

Principal attention at the meeting was focused on the Medical Foundation's upcoming campaign for the medical center. The UNC medical alumni hope to raise $500,000.00 supplement funds to be provided by the General Assembly.

Pending now in Raleigh are two appropriation bills to expand the Outpatient Department and Radiation Treatment facilities at UNC. Medical alumni are aiming at the half million dollar addition to these funds in order that Federal matching funds may be obtained to bring the total for new equipment, scholarships and buildings to $7½ million.

Dr. Hugh A. McAllister, of Lumberton, former Medical Alumni president and chairman of the fund - raising campaign, praised the work already done by the alumni and urged them to greater efforts in the new campaign.

Men's Council Suspends One, Probates One

One student was suspended and another placed on definite probation for violations of the Honor Code in cases tried by the Men's Council Thursday night.

A student was found guilty of lying to an instructor in order to look through instructor's desk. He received a sentence of definite suspension for one full academic semester.

In the second case, a student was accused of stealing Cokes from a broken soda machine in a dormitory and of lying to a student advisor when questioned about it. He was found guilty and placed on definite probation for one full academic semester.

Dormitory Spotlight: Old West

(This is the nineteenth in a series of articles on UNC dorms and is sponsored jointly by the dorm presidents of the Communications Committee.)

"We think that we've got the best dorm on campus this year."

This was the comment of Rex Savery, president of Old West, when interviewed by the Communications Committee.

The dorm, comprised mainly of juniors and seniors, has made an annual affair of the scholarship trophy, given each year to the dorm with the highest average. Study conditions are excellent, and the suite-like arrangement of rooms has lent itself well to strong unity.

Residents can claim an unusual intramural record—they have entered every point-system competition for the past two years and have yet to forfeit a single match! Participation is outstanding, and the teams have been doing well.

Savery has served as president for two years, and is doing an outstanding job. Pete Fowler is vice-president and Buzz Cole is secretary-treasurer. The IDC Representative is John Morgan.

Old West claims many campus leaders among its residents, and both campus political parties are well represented. Social life is not neglected, with a pizza party scheduled for April. The residents will also have a page in the Yack.

New Dorms Won't Get Extra Time For Balloting

The Elections Board ruled Thursday that it would not extend the voting hours for Craige and Ehringhaus dormitories for the spring elections due to its previous ruling to place polls in Y-Court for residents of these two dorms.

Chairman Polly Hastings said, "The Board felt that there would be ample chance for residents of these dorms to vote in the election without this concession."

A petition, signed by more than than three hundred Craige and Ehringhaus residents, had requested that the polling hours be extended until seven o'clock.

Tom Wicker To Talk At Editor's Confab

Tom Wicker, former editorial writer for the Winston-Salem Journal-Sentinel and currently a member of the Washington Bureau of the New York Times will be the dinner speaker for the 14th annual North Carolina editorial writers conference to be held here March 29-30.

Wicker, a native of Hamlet who is also a novelist, will address the editorial writers on Saturday March 30, at a 6 p.m. banquet dinner to be held at the Carolina Inn.

Consolidated University President William C. Friday will be the Saturday luncheon speaker for the conference. President Friday will speak on "The Future of the University."

"North Carolina's Political Future" is the title of a discussion which will open the conference at 8 p.m., Friday, March 29, in the Howell Hall auditorium. Bert Bennett, State Democratic Chairman, and Bill Osteen, Guilford County Republican legislator, will serve on the panel.

A new feature of the annual conference will be introduced during the sessions on criticisms of editorial pages. Heretofore, North Carolina editors have criticized one another's pages. This year two "outside" editors will offer the criticisms at the Saturday morning session.

SZULC TO TALK

TadSzulc, foreign affairs specialist for the New York Times, will speak on "Cuba, 1963" on Tuesday, March 26 at 8 p.m. in 104 Howell Hall as part of the UNC Journalism Lecture Series.

An authority on Latin American Affairs, Szulc covered the Cuban Revolution for the Times as South American correspondent from 1956 to 1961. He won the Maria Moors Cabot Gold Medal for hemispheric reporting in 1959, and published his book "Twilight of the Tyrants" in that year. With Karl E. Meyer he co-authored "The Cuban Invasion" in 1962. A third book, "Winds of Revolution," is scheduled for publication this spring.

Szulc was United Press correspondent in Southeast Asia, based in Hong Kong.

VP Candidates Give Views

Bob Spearman, UP

In the next few years student government at Carolina will face two major problems. The first concerns its power and its responsibility. Secondly, student government needs to stop worrying about itself and start worrying about the student body.

If student government is to be of any consequence, it must reassert the prerogative of students to govern themselves. If self-government can exist at all, it can and must exist within the academic community.

In the next few weeks this issue will come to a head in debate over the apartment rule and the right of the Women's Residence Council to establish rules of conduct for women students. If this right is not affirmed, student government and the entire student body will have suffered a great defeat.

Student Responsibility

At the same time, it is impossible to speak of student autonomy without speaking of student responsibility. For example, there is now no student representation on many important faculty planning committees. These committees plan such matters as the location of new dormitories and changes in the academic curriculum. Formerly, students were included in these decisions, but they were dropped from the committees when they failed to show sufficient interest to attend the meetings. If students are to assert student rights, they must also accept responsibility for this autonomy.

But the problems which student government faces do not lie just with the administration. The greatest task exists within student government itself.

There is an alarming tendency for student government to become preoccupied with its own inner workings and to lose contact with the campus. It is sometimes forgotten that student government receives its sanction from the Carolina student body and that it exists to serve the Carolina student.

New Programs

There are many examples of programs having direct affect on student welfare which student government can and should undertake.

One important problem is the social life and social conditions in dormitories. The University Party is proposing a program of matching funds for dorm social improvements whereby the University administration and student government would provide the bulk for dorm social improvements, and the residents of each dorm would make a small contribution themselves.

On a larger scale we are strongly supporting the plans concerning the establishment of a student cooperative at Chapel Hill. At such a store students could buy text books, clothes and other items for considerably less than present prevailing prices. At the University of Texas, for example, such a co-op saves each student an average of $250 over a four year period.

Student government needs to redirect itself and to devote more of its attention to programs such as these. It needs to worry less about long debate, less about petty issues, and more about the academic, cultural and social welfare of the Carolina student.

Dick Ellis, SP

On April 2 an election will decide the direction of Student Government for the next year. This direction will in turn decide the role Student Government will play in the future. Will this role be one of positive action with specific goals in mind, or will it be one with scattered and often unrealistic interests? This is up to you — the voters! The office of the Vice Presidency must continue to be conceived, as it has this past year, as an executive office. The Vice President must make ever effort to implement, the legislative program which the people mandate by electing him and his party to office.

Here are a few of the things I think the legislature should be concerned with, under the direction of the Vice President.

For example, some system of uniform procedures should be worked out at the living unit level of student government (IDC, IFC, WRC, Pan Hellenic Council) via an informed legislative program and Vice Presidential communication between the judicial systems, the Student Legislature, and the student body.

The proposals made by some members of the opposition party concerning the establishment of Dorm councils in which men would try residents of their own dorms for rules infractions is impractical. This was tried in 1958, and it was found that an objective trial was extremely difficult, due to the fact that too many of the boys knew the defendants personally. However, uniform procedures for the present IDC court could be established, which would improve this judicial body, already established for the purpose of trying violators of dormitory regulations.

Also, the feasability of having the WRC begin establishing itself into a judicial system similar to that of the IDC should be investigated.

The use of special legislative committees, appointed to look into problems which arise during the year, should be continued. One area which should be worked in is the Buildings Department. Dorm men have felt that they have been unjustly charged by the Buildings Department charges for dormitory repairs.

Continued legislative investigation of the feasability of establishing some form of co-operative on this campus to combat the high uptown clothes prices and the unreasonable resale value of books at the Book-Ex should be initiated by the Vice President. The results of this investigation should be communicated to both the Legislature and the student body via the Tar Heel.

Investigation by a legislative committee of the campus radio station and the possibility of carrier current, initiated by the Student Party two years ago, should be renewed.

Investigations carried out by legislative committees of this sort would both take some pressure off of the Executive branch of Student Government, and bring these problems and their solutions closer to the Student body through elected legislative representatives.

The opposition party's platform contains a proposal to establish an extensive Presidential Communications Staff to talk with individual students on the campus about proposed programs and ideas. The

Max Gardner Award Goes To Brauer

Dr. John Charles Brauer, Dean of the UNC School of Dentistry and "one of the most creative and influential national spokesmen in the field of dentistry," is the recipient of the 1963 O. Max Gardner Award.

The award was made at a banquet in Lenoir Hall last night at which Fred M. Hechinger, Education Editor of the New York Times, was the principal speaker.

Dr. Brauer, who has headed the UNC School of Dentistry from its founding, in 1950, was cited for his achievements by Mrs. George Wilson of Fayetteville, chairman of the Board of Trustee's Committee for the O. Max Gardner Award. The citation read:

"John Charles Brauer: by successive achievements as student, practitioner, teacher, and administrator, and as accepted spokesman for dental education in America, you have attained a place of high distinction in your profession. By creative and indefatigable leadership within the faculties of the University of North Carolina and among your professional colleagues, you have established the foundation of lasting repute for the School of Dentistry. By innovating measures of professional practice you have improved the benefits of dental science and made them accessible to ever larger numbers of people.

"In recognition of your academic and professional leadership; in acknowledgement of the contribution that you are making to the better health of North Carolinians and of future generations everywhere; and with appreciation for the value of your personal dedication to humane endeavors, the trustees have adjudged you to be the member of the faculties of the University of North Carolina who in the current scholastic year has made the greatest contribution to the welfare of the human race, and, therefore, the recipient of the O. Max Gardner Award for 1963."

The O. Max Gardner Award was established by provisions in the will of the late Governor Gardner, who is known as the "father of consolidation," and was first awarded in 1949.

$1,500 Increase Over Last Year's Expenditures

By JOEL BULKLEY

A proposed Student Government budget of $155,799.64 for the 1963-64 school year was submitted to Student Legislature for its approval Thursday night. SL will begin consideration of the budget at next week's session.

The proposed budget, as drawn up by the SL Budget and Finance Committees, calls for increases of approximately $1,500 in expenditures and $3,000 in anticipated income over last year.

Estimated Income

The figure for anticipated income is derived by calculating the average estimated enrollment for 1963-64 and multiplying that times the apropriate student fee collected by SG. The estimated enrollment includes 6,899 undergraduates and 2,832 graduate students for a total of 9,731. Each undergraduate pays $18 of his student fees to SG for $124,182.00 while each graduate pays $14.56 (for $41,233.92) to SG for its total anticipated income of $165,415.92. Last year's anticipated figure was $162,400.00

Still under consideration are budget requests for the SG Executive Branch: General Administration and Communications Committee.

Estimated Expenses

By VANCE BARRON, Jr.

There seems to be no significant change in the academic performance of this year's freshman class in comparison to last year's class, Dean Carlyle Sitterson of the College of Arts and Sciences reported yesterday.

Sitterson dispelled rumors that the freshman class had done extremely poor last semester by saying "It is extremely difficult to demonstrate any increase or decrease in the academic performance of freshman.

"The only trend that can be shown beyond any question is that the academic quality of entering freshmen is improving. There is no data available which can demonstrate conclusively that there is any trend to the contrary."

The grade average of freshmen has improved slightly, with the past semester, though such an indication is not statistically significant, Sitterson noted. At the end of the fall semester of 1961, the grade average of 1,601 freshman was 1.932.

At the end of the fall semester of this year, the average of 1,824 freshmen was computed at 1.952. However, in 1961, 82.6 per cent had an average of 1.25 or higher, while last semester 77 per cent of the freshmen made this average. Dean Sitterson made the point that the figures for the fall semester of 1961 did not include withdrawals during the semester, while the figures for this year did. There are some 30 to 50 freshmen withdrawals each year during the fall semester which would account for some bias in the figures, he said.

The one distinguishable trend that is evident from figures available is that the academic ability of entering freshmen is improving Sitterson said. In 1958 the average total College Board score for entering freshmen was 961. In 1961 this average had risen to 1005. The minimum College Board score for admission to the University was raised from 700 to 750 in 1961, so that "we haven't had any class graduate under the existing admission requirements yet," according to Dean Sitterson.

In comparing grade distribution for the same period, it was found that there was a decrease in the percentage of students receiving D's and F's.

In 1958, in 29 freshman courses 8.6 per cent of the grades given were A's, while in 1961 6.5 per cent of the grades given were A's. Also in 1958, 18.97 per cent of the grades given were D's and 10.2 per cent were F's. In 1961, for the same courses 20.27 per cent were D's and 12.967 F's.

Dean Sitterson suggested, in a report to the advisers in Arts and Sciences, that the students are not studying as hard or that grade requirements are stiffening.

There was also little difference in the performance of the freshman class and fraternity pledges, for the fall semester. While not all fraternity pledges are freshmen, the large majority are, and the figures are roughly comparable for the two groups.

The percentage of the freshman class making a C-average or better was 49.6 per cent while 46.9 per cent of fraternity pledges made this average.

VP Candidates Give Views

Bob Spearman, UP

In the next few years student government at Carolina will face two major problems. The first concerns its power and its responsibility. Secondly, student government needs to stop worrying about itself and start worrying about the student body.

If student government is to be of any consequence, it must reassert the prerogative of students to govern themselves. If self-government can exist at all, it can and must exist within the academic community.

In the next few weeks this issue will come to a head in debate over the apartment rule and the right of the Women's Residence Council to establish rules of conduct for women students. If this right is not affirmed, student government and the entire student body will have suffered a great defeat.

Student Responsibility

At the same time, it is impossible to speak of student autonomy without speaking of student responsibility. For example, there is now no student representation on many important faculty planning committees. These committees plan such matters as the location of new dormitories and changes in the academic curriculum. Formerly, students were included in these decisions, but they were dropped from the committees when they failed to show sufficient interest to attend the meetings. If students are to assert student rights, they must also accept responsibility for this autonomy.

But the problems which student government faces do not lie just with the administration. The greatest task exists within student government itself.

There is an alarming tendency for student government to become preoccupied with its own inner workings and to lose contact with the campus. It is sometimes forgotten that student government receives its sanction from the Carolina student body and that it exists to serve the Carolina student.

New Programs

There are many examples of programs having direct affect on student welfare which student government can and should undertake.

One important problem is the social life and social conditions in dormitories. The University Party is proposing a program of matching funds for dorm social improvements whereby the University administration and student government would provide the bulk for dorm social improvements, and the residents of each dorm would make a small contribution themselves.

On a larger scale we are strongly supporting the plans concerning the establishment of a student co-operative at Chapel Hill. At such a store students could buy text books, clothes and other items for considerably less than present prevailing prices. At the University of Texas, for example, such a co-op saves each student an average of $250 over a four year period.

Student government needs to redirect itself and to devote more of its attention to programs such as these. It needs to worry less about long debate, less about petty issues, and more about the academic, cultural and social welfare of the Carolina student.

Dick Ellis, SP

On April 2 an election will decide the direction of Student Government for the next year. This direction will in turn decide the role Student Government will play in the future. Will this role be one of positive action with specific goals in mind, or will it be one with scattered and often unrealistic interests? This is up to you — the voters! The office of the Vice Presidency must continue to be conceived, as it has this past year, as an executive office. The Vice President must make ever effort to implement, the legislative program which the people mandate by electing him and his party to office.

Here are a few of the things I think the legislature should be concerned with, under the direction of the Vice President.

For example, some system of uniform procedures should be worked out at the living unit level of student government (IDC, IFC, WRC, Pan Hellenic Council) via an informed legislative program and Vice Presidential communication between the judicial systems, the Student Legislature, and the student body.

The proposals made by some members of the opposition party concerning the establishment of Dorm councils in which men would try residents of their own dorms for rules infractions is impractical. This was tried in 1958, and it was found that an objective trial was extremely difficult, due to the fact that too many of the boys knew the defendants personally. However, uniform procedures for the present IDC court could be established, which would improve this judicial body, already established for the purpose of trying violators of dormitory regulations.

Also, the feasability of having the WRC begin establishing itself into a judicial system similar to that of the IDC should be investigated.

The use of special legislative committees, appointed to look into problems which arise during the year, should be continued. One area which should be worked in is the Buildings Department. Dorm men have felt that they have been unjustly charged by the Buildings Department charges for dormitory repairs.

Continued legislative investigation of the feasability of establishing some form of co-operative on this campus to combat the high uptown clothes prices and the unreasonable resale value of books at the Book-Ex should be initiated by the Vice President. The results of this investigation should be communicated to both the Legislature and the student body via the Tar Heel.

Investigation by a legislative committee of the campus radio station and the possibility of carrier current, initiated by the Student Party two years ago, should be renewed.

Investigations carried out by legislative committees of this sort would both take some pressure off of the Executive branch of Student Government, and bring these problems and their solutions closer to the Student body through elected legislative representatives.

The opposition party's platform contains a proposal to establish an extensive Presidential Communications Staff to talk with individual students on the campus about proposed programs and ideas. The

Why All The Fuss?

Apartment Rule IS Dead

There is much misplaced concern among students concerning the Women's Residence Council's revocation of the Apartment Rule and the dean of women's subsequent "voiding" of that action.

Some want to build this into a major student-administration confrontation . . . with loud cries of "student autonomy." The matter has become "hot" politically, with both parties attempting to make the most of their defense of student autonomy.

Several facts have been overshadowed in the chaos:

—The Apartment Rule is dead, practically speaking—even deader than it has always been. If the Women's Honor Council will not prosecute cases arising from the rule, and if women students will not turn in themselves or others, then enforcement of the rule will be nil.

—If Dean of Women Carmichael wants to announce her own little personal Apartment Rule, then that is her business and we would not attempt to dissuade her. In fact we think Miss Carmichael should pass any rules she wants to—up to, and including the abolition of sex—but there is no reason anyone should pay attention to her rules.

—Miss Carmichael has no means to enforce her Apartment Rule. She does not have a legion of dormitory advisors at her disposal, as does the dean of men—she has no group to act as Spy-Prosecutor-Judge. Only the women themselves can do this—and if they have any pride and common sense, they won't.

* * *

The Apartment Rule is not worth a Custer's Last Stand for student government. It has been laxly enforced in the past—for the simple reason that it was completely impractical and considerably irrelevant to any concepts of honor or ladylike conduct—and, if the women stand by THEIR rules, made by THEIR representatives, it will not be enforced at all in the future. So . . . why the fuss? Let Miss Carmichael have her rule, and let the women have theirs—and may the two never meet. (JC)

What Do They Really Believe?

Yesterday's DTH carried two of the most damning headlines for this university to appear in its columns in some time. The first, the announcement that Dean Katherine Carmichael had overruled the Woman's Residence Council, was the most blatant slap in the face student government has suffered since the Doug Moe case. The second, the news that Chuck Erickson had fired a freshman tennis coach for voicing his opinions on big-time athletics, smacked of the days before de-emphasis.

In one day student autonomy was overruled by Puritanism and academic freedom was overruled by big-time athletics. For the sake of one archaic, often-ognored rule, Miss Carmichael threw the concept of student self-rule out the window. Chuck Erickson, because his hide was too tender to suffer a little pointed criticism, did the same for a teacher's right to state his views.

Either of these occurrences would not, perhaps, be out of place at another university. But Carolina officials, from President Friday and Chancellor Aycock on down, have consistently and unequivocally asserted their belief in and support of both academic freedom and the concept of student self-discipline.

How much of it is just talk, good only for a University Day speech or an entry in the catalogue? Does the administration believe in these things, or does it just like the sound of them rolling eloquently off articulate tongues?

The course student government must take vis-a-vis the apartment rule is clear enough: Ignore it, and let the administration enforce it. If the administration wants to be its own legislator, then let it be its own police force. As to the firing of Coach Tom Crais, students can do little except let their feelings be known. Acadamic freedom or monolithic athletics, which one do they want?

The choices Chancellor Aycock and President Friday must make in regard to these incidents is also clear, if there is to be any consistency in speech and action. If academic freedom is important enough to overrule athletics, then Coach Crais will be rehired. If there is any real belief in academic freedom, he will even be commended; he is one of the few with courage enough to put his views in print. There is no dilemma involved. Tom Crais and academic freedom are on one side; the Athletic Department and omnipotent athletics are on the other.

Miss Carmichael's refusal to accept the reasonable decision of the Women's Residence Council in striking down the outmoded, often-ignored, and ill-conceived apartment rule likewise offers clear alternatives. Student self-rule and the belief in student's ability to set their own moral standards fall on one side; administrative inconsistency and suspicions of rampant immorality fall on the other. Miss Carmichael, by her action, said in effect that students not only do not have the ability or responsibility to make and carry out reasonable rules, but that they also do not have any kind of moral code of their own.

The choices are clear enough. Now what do we get. Honest action or another speech. —Wayne King

Admiral Rickover

Suggests Changes In U.S. Schools

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Vice Adm. H. G. Rickover, one of the most outspoken men of the times and also one of the most articulate, is unhappy about the state of American education. Here he bluntly states what he thinks is wrong with education and educators, and what he thinks ought to be done.)

By VICE ADM. H. G. RICKOVER
The Associated Press

American education just isn't good enough.

That statement is true whether we look at it from the point of view of the kind of educated youth we need in our complex society, or from the point of view of our competitive position in education vis-a-vis other advanced nations.

Every American wants the best for our children. In education, the best we can give them is the chance to stretch their minds and reach the highest goal their intellect can encompass. They do not get this chance in "progressive" schools and permissive homes.

Special Excellence

"Democracy," wrote the late Dorothy Thompson, "is not to be conceived of as an invitation to share a common mediocrity, but a system that allows each to express and live up to the special excellence that is in him."

"Professionalism" educators often accuse me of wanting to foist a foreign school system on our children. Some are going about the country claiming I intend to "militarize" education. Evidently, none has ever read what I have been saying.

Any sensible person, recognizing the need for improvement, would look into the ways other democratic nations go about educating their children.

The time is past when we were in the uniquely favorable circumstance of being able to get along with schools that were markedly inferior to those of countries with which we were competing economically or politically or both.

We can no longer afford to waste time and money on an inadequate school system.

We do not have the immense wealth in land and resources that in the past offset our educational deficiencies. Of course, we are still a rich country: our resources still exceed those of Europe and perhaps even of Russia. But we should recall this observation by Woodrow Wilson half a century ago:

New Life

"The stage of America grows crowded like the stage of Europe. The life of the new world grows as complex as the life of the old."

What, then, is to be done to improve American education?

Well, local communities and state governments have the power to increase the amount of classroom instruction per school year. We have the shortest school day and school year among leading nations.

They could eliminate from the curricula everything that can be learned elsewhere. We are the only advanced country where precious school hours are wasted teaching children how to make fudge, twirl batons, drive cars, budget income, handle the telephone, catch fish, and similar trivia that any reasonably normal person picks up on his own or learns at home.

Teacher Qualifications

Most important of all, they could improve teacher qualifications, bringing them up to the level existing abroad, and they could then put the educational enterprise under the supervision of our best teachers giving them the necessary clerical and administrative assistance.

We are the only country where teachers are bossed by educational administrators who often as not can lay no claim to scholarship, superior intelligence or higher education, and who may not even have had experience in classroom teaching.

All this is important, but I am convinced we cannot put through a really effective reform program unless we set up a national scholastic standard.

This would be a permissive standard, of course, but nevertheless potentially a great influence for good. We are the only advanced nation without a national scholastic standard.

Now the word "standard" has many connotations. I use it in the sense that comes first to mind: a specific requirement or level of excellence deemed worthy of esteem or reward.

I do not use it in the sense of a law, enforceable in the courts: failing below standard would not put one in jail.

Nor do I use it in the sense of a conventional rule imposed by society: failure to meet the standard would not get one socially ostracized.

Determine Value

No one HAS to live up to the standard I propose. It is simply an optional criterion for determining the value of an act or accomplishment.

Everyone benefits when there is a standard. At one stroke it does away with misleading educational labels so that any layman has the means to judge whether a school or college is doing its job properly. By offering a reward of a certified diploma to our children, many who now drift through school would be encouraged to aspire to higher academic goals.

Last May, in a hearing on English education before the House Committee on Appropriations, Rep. Clarence Cannon (D-Mo) asked me by what means I thought Congress might help speed educational progress.

National Standards

I suggested that a national standards committee be created. This would be a small committee, composed of men of national stature and eminence—trustworthy, intelligent, scholarly, and devoted to the ideal of an American education second to none.

The committee would have two tasks:

First, it would act as an educational watchtower, announcing danger when it saw it approaching. It would keep under continuous scrutiny, and periodically report on, the state of American education. Does it meet the needs of our times? Is it competitive with education in countries of similar levels of culture and technology?

We need a disinterested agency to tell us the unvarnished truth about the true state of American education.

Specific Needs

Second, the committee would formulate a national scholastic standard on the basis of its findings: A standard which would make us internationally competitive and would also respond to our specific domestic needs. The committee would do this by means of examinations set at different ability levels. No one would have to take them, but those who passed them would receive national accreditation.

The committee would in no way interfere with established institutions now granting degrees or diplomas. It would simply set up a higher standard, offer it to anyone who wished to meet it, and certify those who had successfully done so.

Such a committee would help prevent complacency and illusions of superiority and thus save us from the kind of painful shocks that Sputnik and other evidence of Russian scientific proficiency have given us in the past few years.

Voluntary Examinations

Cannon expressed hope that my remarks would stimulate a national debate on the question of permissive national standards established by way of voluntary national examinations. Those interested in this matter may obtain a copy of the hearings, "Education for All Children: What We Can Learn from England."

There is precedent for the setting of permissive national standards. We have something very like it in the 1961 amendment to the 1956 Water Pollution Act.

This amendment authorizes the federal government — if so requested by a state — to research and develop new methods of pollution control and to award grants-in-aid to localities and states wishing to use these federally established methods.

Proposed Committee

In principle, you have here a national standard very much like the scholastic standards of the proposed committee, in that it is not imposed but merely offered as a service, on a take-it-or-leave-it basis.

In both cases we face a problem that cannot be solved by local and state authorities alone, but requires some assistance from the federal government. I believe improvement of the quality of American education is at least as pressing as the need for an assured supply of clean water.

Let me make it crystal clear that nothing in my proposal would violate the constitutional separation of power between federal and state governments, nor go counter to our tradition of control of schools by the local community.

Rendering Service

I envisage the rendering of a service, not regulation in any way, shape or manner.

The proposed committee would not usurp the functions of any existing institution. Its job would be to draw up national examinations going deeply into a candidate's true knowledge and intellectual caliber—not IBM-graded multiple choice tests. The tests might well be modeled on the English national examinations, which come at three levels and which offer many subject tests. Students choose the number of subjects and the level at which they wish to be examined.

The committee might provide one set of examinations at the level appropriate for a high school graduate who aspires to enter a first-rate college, and another set at the level of students who may wish to prepare for a semi-professional or technician's job not requiring a bachelor degree but still requiring a good high school education.

Another Set

There could be still another set for candidates of various types of colleges, especially those bound for the teaching profession.

I stress again that no one would need to take these examinations, but those who did pass them successfully would obtain national certification, perhaps the notation "N.S." — National Scholar — stamped on their regular diplomas or degrees.

There are many occasions when admissions officers of higher educational institutions, or prospective employers, have a valid reason for wanting to know what an applicant's scholastic qualifications actually are. Think how much time and money would be saved if the diploma were clearly to indicate this!

Share Pride

I do not share the pride our educationists take in the fact that we are the only leading nation with a school system that does not challenge its children to meet a national scholastic standard in order to receive academic awards.

I do not agree with them that children must not be "judged," that each child has a right to "equal education and equal status."

I do not believe that, as one superintendent of schools put it, "straight thinking and democratically minded school administrators will hand out the same diploma, regardless of the variation of high school courses and the range of scholastic achievement that are presented by the graduates as evidence of accomplishment."

Nor do I share educationist concern that children who do not measure up to a standard will suffer pain and lose face.

Early Age

All of life is a series of tests. Young people will be better able to take these tests in their stride if at an early age they begin to learn that everything worthwhile requires great effort but that the satisfaction derived from attaining a standard makes effort worthwhile.

Given the wide differences of aptitude with which we are born and which we do not know how to alter, is it not good for young children to discover that some goals are beyond their capacities, that they cannot win all the tests

Is it not better to know one's limitations, as well as one's capacities: Not to live in delusions which life sooner or later will rudely shatter?

Henderson Native Gives $20,000 For Med Grants

A prominent tobacco industry executive, originally from Henderson, has made an initial gift of $20,000 to the Medical Foundation of North Carolina for scholarships in the UNC School of Medicine.

Kenneth Reynolds Edwards, who was born in Henderson in 1891, made the substantial gift "to help worthy young men and women who would be unable to pursue a medical education at UNC without financial assistance." The gift was accepted yesterday at the joint meeting of the UNC Medical Alumni and the Medical Foundation.

Mr. Edwards has been prominent and active in the tobacco industry since 1911. He began his career with the J. P. Taylor Company in Henderson and later became vice president of Universal Leaf Tobacco Co., Inc., of Richmond, Va., and of Southwestern Tobacco Co., Inc., Lexington, Ky.

In 1939, Mr. Edwards organized the K. R. Edwards Co., of Richmond, Va., with a branch office in Smithfield. His company is now engaged in the buying and processing of all types of American tobaccos for both domestic and export purposes.

To be called the Kenneth R. Edwards Scholarship Fund, the gift will provide a number of scholarships to be given annually at the discretion of the administrators of the School of Medicine.

How To Improve Social Life Proves Complicated Topic

By KENT ROGERS

How can campus social life be improved?

People, if you haven't been asked this question before, you haven't been on the Carolina campus long.

This question has been asked by dorm residents over and over. It has plagued the student legislature. Candidates have based entire platforms on it.

Recently, this reporter cornered students and asked them. Some of the replies were new; some were pips; and some were censored.

Two Cobb girls came up with the greatest profusion of suggestions.

"To begin with, improve social facilities for the non-fraternity men," the two chorused. "They don't have an inexpensive place to take a date."

This may sound impossible, but both girls were in agreement on one solution. "If the boy-girl ratio was reduced, it'd be a great help. As it stands now, there are just too many hardships on both sides."

The girls, who asked that their names be withheld (who are residents of Cobb dormitory) also decided that it would be a "great idea to provide the girls dorms with more telephones."

"We'd be willing to pay for even three or four phones on a hall."

A distance runner on the track team, Obie Whichard, decided it would be "easier for the student union to provide social functions if they had a larger budget. You could also open the men's dorm rooms to female visitors — with supervision of course."

Bill Young, freshman quarterback, asked, "Why doesn't someone set up a dating bureau—with WC and the girls dorms."

An immediate solution was given by one student. "They can start by getting me a date," cried a senior businesss major.

"Extend the girls' curfew hours," mentioned another coed, who also wished to remain anonymous. "It's pretty silly to put a regulation on the girls, when boys of the same age and maturity don't have rules like that."

Some of the answers that appeared time after time were: reduce the boy-girl ratio, open the men's dorms to females, and increase the amount of social activity.

98 Will Practice Teach During March

Ninety-eight student teachers, seniors at UNC will enter a seven-weeks program of practice teaching in several school systems throughout the state on March 25.

The seniors will gain practical experience under the direction of supervisors in 34 junior and senior high schools, according to Dr. Neill Rosser, professor in charge of student-teacher placement at UNC.

Placements will be in the areas of English, science, social studies, French, Spanish, physical education and the junior high school language arts-social studies combination.

Student-teachers in English, under the direction of Prof. Sterling Hennis, number the largest in the history of the placement program. The 54 members represent an increase of 13 over last year's group.

Junior high school student-teachers, 13 in number, will be participating in one of the few programs in the Southeast which train specifically for the language arts-social studies combination at the junior high level.

After the seven weeks of practice teaching, the student-teachers will return to Chapel Hill for a final two-week problem and evaluation session.

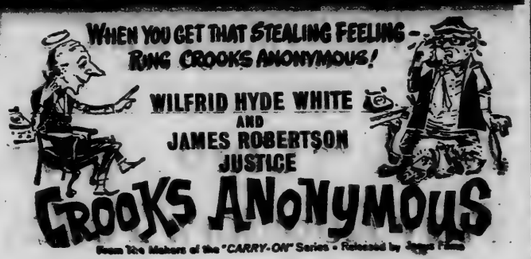
idea of communication with the students is an idea which must definitely be implemented, but the method by which this communication is supposed to be carried out seems rather complicated and unnecessary. This is the task of political parties rather than any large or unwieldy, specially appointed communications staff.



What better organization is there to discuss and work on the implementation of the different platform proposals of a political party than the political party itself? Too often in the past these bodies have been ignored, and yet by their very nature they should be interested and concerned with their programs and ideas and the communication of these to the student body. If elected, I propose to utilize the Student Party to it's fullest potential to both communicate with and bring more problems and issues confronting the campus and Student Government before the student body.

In short, I wish to continue the office of the vice-presidency in the concept of a leader, an executive, and an officer who will utilize both the potential of his position and the Student Legislature to the utmost in order to promote a more vital and concerned Student Government.

36 DAYS THAT CHANGED THE PERFORMANCE PICTURE IN AMERICA

In 36 days, starting with the Monte Carlo Rallye in January of this year, our products have posted a series of competition wins that have made performance history. Here's what has happened:

Three V-8 Falcon Sprints were entered in the Monte Carlo Rallye. This is not a race. It is a trial of a car's total capabilities. We did it (nervously) for the experience and with practically no sense of expectation, because we had not entered an event like this before. One Sprint ended the experiment in a snowbank. But the others finished 1-2 in their class with such authority that they moved the good, grey London Times to say: "The Falcons are part of a power and performance plan that will shake up motoring in every country in the world." That was Number One.

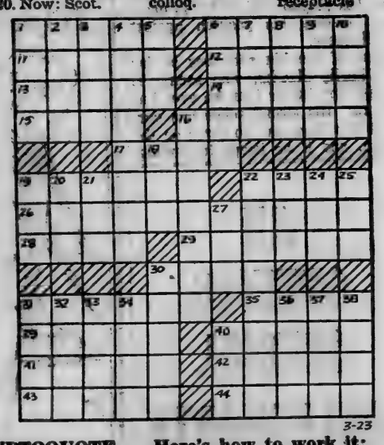
Number Two was a double win in the Pure Oil Performance Trials. Fords captured Class 1 and Class 2 (for high performance and large V-8's). Both of these trials were for over-all points rolled up in economy, acceleration and braking tests.

Then, at Riverside in California, in America's only long-distance stock car event that is run on a road course (as opposed to closed circuit, banked tracks such as the track at Daytona), Dan Gurney pushed a Ford to first place.

The latest news comes north from Daytona. There in the open test that tears cars apart—the Daytona 500—Ford durability conquered the field. Fords swept the first 5 places . . . something no one else had equaled in the history of the event. In a competition —which anyone can enter—designed to prove how well a car hangs together, 9 Fords finished out of 11 entered . . . a truly remarkable record considering that over 50% of all cars entered failed to finish.

Why do we keep such an interested eye on competitions such as these? Is speed important to us? Frankly, no. The speed capabilities of the leading American cars are now grouped so closely together that the differences have no real meaning. To us, who are building cars, success in this kind of competition means just one thing: the car is strong. This kind of performance capability means that the car is so well built that it can stand up to normal driving—the kind of day-in, day-out demands you put your own car through—for thousands of miles longer than less capable cars.

In tests like the Daytona 500 and Riverside, we find out in an afternoon what might take us 100,000 test-track miles to discover. We learn how to build superior strength into suspension systems, steering systems, drive train, body, tires. Anyone can build a fast car. What we're interested in is the concept of "total" performance.



We believe in this kind of total performance because the search for performance made the automobile the wonderfully efficient and pleasurable instrument it is today—and will make it better tomorrow.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X E is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.

Southern Illinois Defeats Tar Heel Nine, 6-4

Teams Play Second Contest Here Today

By LOU ROSENTHAL

Four errors proved costly to the Tar Heels, as they lost their opening game of the baseball season to Southern Illinois, 6-4, yesterday at Emerson Stadium.

Carolina was held to two hits, except for the first, when they parlayed five base knocks for three runs. Southern hurlers Ed Walter and Gene Vincent combined to strike out 10 Tar Heels, and allowed UNC only four free passes.

Dave Leonard, the Salukis' second sacker, provided the winning run in the seventh with a sacrifice fly. Southern added an insurance tally in the ninth.

UNC Tallies First

The Tar Heels scored first in the bottom of the first, when leadoff hitter Dick Prindle drew a walk, and stole second. The next two batters struck out, however, but Jim Speight got a life when the Southern catcher failed to hold on to a third strike.

The Salukis came back in the third and fourth with single tallies in each frame. Leonard rammed a long hit to left center, which rolled under the fence for a ground rule double. John Siebel then drove him in with a single, but was thrown out trying to stretch the hit into a double.

The next inning saw the Tar Heels score three runs, when pinch-hitter Dick Fleming was hit by Vincent on the arm. Fleming's runner, Milford "Whitey" Cox went to third on Prindle's two-bagger.

Frank Gallagher, hitting for Bill Taylor, knocked a single into right, scoring Cox. Prindle was out at the plate when he tried to score, and Gallagher was thrown out when he tried to advance to second on the throw.

Hull Slams Triple

Heyward Hull then rapped a three-bagger to right, and came home on a passed ball. After Jim Speight singled, and stole second for the second time yesterday, Brown delivered a ground rule double that bounced over the left field fence, scoring the Tar Heel's shortstop. Brown then stole third, but the next hitter fanned to end the inning.

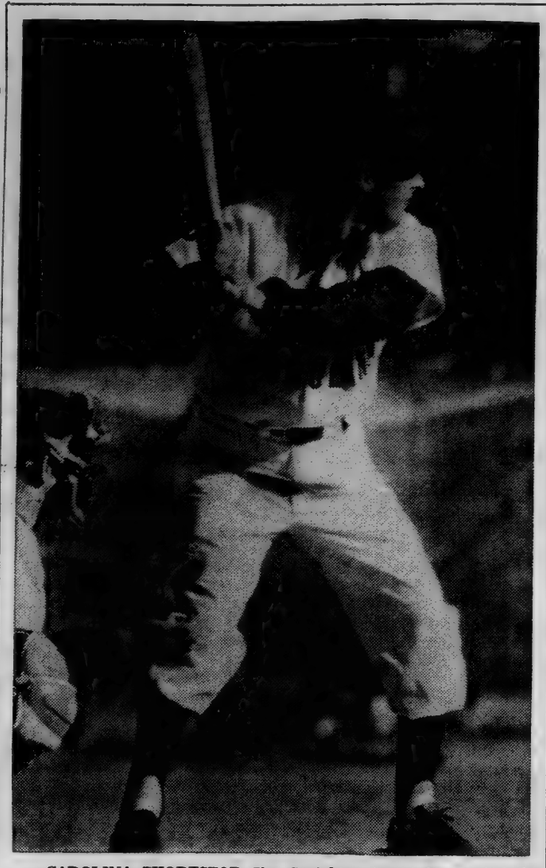
Southern Illinois tied it up in the top of the sixth, when Siebel singled with one out. Dick Burda then singled, moving the runner to second. Pratte then blasted a long fly that hit the fence in left center. By the time center fielder Gary Black retrieved the ball, Siebel had scored, and Burda then came home on Black's throwing error.

In the seventh, hurler Vincent started with an infield single and moved to second on Brown's throwing error. Leadoff hitter Ron Landreth singled to move Vincent to third, and Leonard then hit his sacrifice fly.

Vincent stated the last inning with another single, and moved to second on a wild pitch. Leonard then hit a hard grounder to Speight, and the shortstop threw into the dirt at first, to let Vincent score the final run.

White Gets Loss

Joe White was the losing pitcher for the Tar Heels, and Gene Vincent was credited with the victory. Larry Jenkins started for the Tar Heels, but was removed after the fifth when he tired.



Jenkins allowed only four of the Salukis 11 hits, and walked but one, while striking out one in his five innings.

White struck out one but allowed no free passes.

Walter struck out six, and walked three. He allowed only one hit before the roof caved in in the fifth. Vincent whiffed four Tar Heels, and walked only one. Pinch-hitter Ken Willard was the only Tar Heel to get a hit off Vincent, and that was in the ninth with two out.

UNC will attempt to even their season's record at 1-1 today when they meet Southern Illinois at 2 p.m. today at Emerson Stadium. The Salukis have a over-all chart of 1-1, losing to N. C. State Thursday, 9-0.

Golfers Club Tigers; Play Roosters Today

The Carolina golf team had to battle both the cold weather and Clemson in their first match of the season yesterday afternoon on the Finley Golf Course. However, Coach Ed Kinney's golfers were successful on both counts as they defeated the visiting Tigers by a one-sided 15½-5½ score.

In the feature match of the day, Tommy Arnold had no trouble in taking Clemson's Mike Dawes, 2½-½. However, it was Abe Andes who seemed to be playing the best for the Tar Heels. In conquering Larry Meyers by a similar 2½-½ score, Andes raced around the course in 73 strokes to grab medalist honors for the aftenoon.

Clemson's only two victories of the day were a 2-1 win for Ray Chapman over UNC's Skip Tucker, and a victory by the Tigers' Jim Self over Billy Stephenson, also by a 2-1 count.

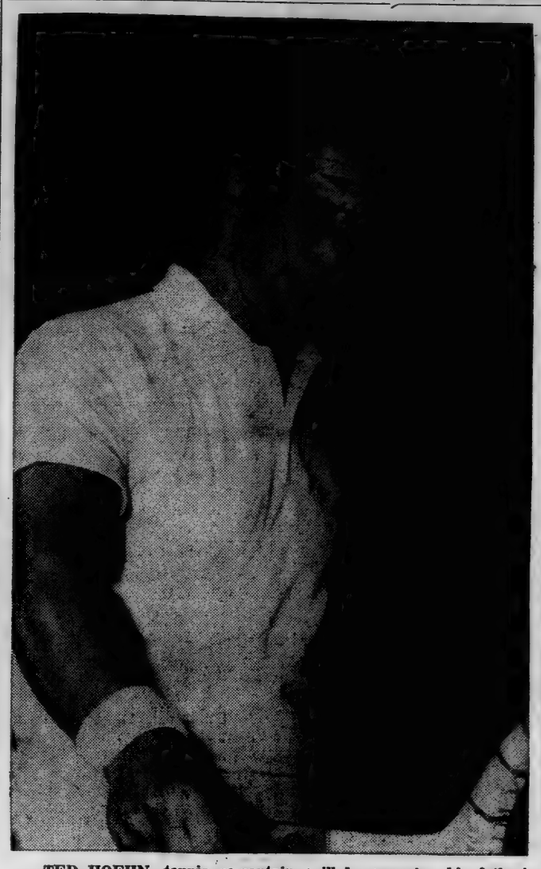
The other Tar Heel victory came as the result of George Reams' 2½-½ score against Robert Baker.

This afternoon at 12:30 p.m. on the Finley course the Tar Heels will go after their second consecutive win of the early season against South Carolina.

Providence Plays Canisius In NIT

NEW YORK (UPI) — Providence's scrappy Friars, even with 5-foot-8 playmaker Vinnie Ernst hobbled by a leg injury, were favored Friday to defeat Canisius Saturday afternoon and win their second National Invitation basketball tournament within three years.

Oddsmen made Providence a five-point pick for the game which will be televised nationally over the NBC network by delayed video tape starting at 6 p.m. Marquette will play Villanova for the third-place consolation prize in the doubleheader opener.



This will be the first meeting of two Eastern teams for the NIT title since 1954 when Holy Cross beat Duquesne. A sellout crowd of more than 18,000 was expected at Madison Square Garden.

UNC Netters Host Dartmouth At 2

By LOUIS LEGUM

Most Ivy League teams, because of the cold weather at their schools, usually start their spring sports schedule with a trip through the South. The Dartmouth tennis team and its very gracious and personable coach, "Red" Hoehn, have been stopping at Chapel Hill for many, many years now to renew an acquaintance with the Carolina tennis team that is more like a warm inter - family rivalry than anything else. In fact, this "family" aspect is solidified by virtue of Coach Hoehn's son being a Tar Heel co-captain and one of its best players.

TED HOEHN, tennis co-captain, will be opposing his father's team when UNC plays host to Dartmouth this afternoon. His father, "Red" Hoehn and his team will stay around for the weekend and meet the Tar Heels again Monday.

However, it is doubtful that Coach Hoehn, weather or not, is very anxious to be visiting Carolina at all this year. He is bringing with him a team that lost its top three players from a strong 1962 squad. His holdovers who will play at the top three positions are Dave Smoyer, Doug Floren, and John Morrison, the rest of the team filled out by a group of newcomers.

Yet Coach Hoehn's main worry isn't so much about HIS team, as it is about the team he has to face, generally agreed to be one of the best in the country. This, of course, is Carolina, which last year opened the season by unceremoniously blasting Dartmouth, 9-0.

It's always difficult to talk about a team that is really good, without any visible weakspots. Probably from the one to six positions, Coach Don Skakle's team is as solid as anyone they could hope to play. Everyone in Chapel Hill who knows tennis is aware of this, and it's getting to the point where an undefeated record isn't merely hoped for, it's expected. Yet in any sport there is the inevitable, unaccountable upset, and every team on UNC's schedule this season, Dartmouth included, will be aiming to make mortals out of Skakle's giants.

This could happen on the courts today, but it is doubtful. For one thing Carolina will be fielding a line-up virtually intact from a great '62 campaign, marred only by the Miami match. For another thing, according to Skakle, these same players are playing a lot better right now than they did at this same time last year. The challenges have put them in excellent condition and prepared them for the strain of team competition. For one more thing, the Tar Heels have come up with a very talented sophomore to make their "Big Five" an even better "Big Six."

Starting at number one is George Sokol, the defending ACC singles champion. The blond-haired junior lost only once last season and gained a lot of additional experience on the summer circuit tour. Hoehn is right behind him at two, and has played well so far in practice, holding his position against challengers.

One of the big surprises so far is Charlie Shaffer, who seems to be playing better than he ever has before. His strong serve has carried him from five to three on the team, and if he keeps improving, he may even go higher. Bitsy Harrison at four is slowly rounding into mid-season form with his big game.

Another pleasing surprise has been the performance of sophomore O. H. Parrish. A challenge win over Keith Stoneman last Wednesday has enabled him to start the season at number five. Rounding out the first six is Stoneman, whose presence at that position is proof of the genuine depth that Carolina possesses.

Some other players who may see action today include Pete Myers, Joe Polin, Kirby Jones, Stan Cocke, and Sam Applegate.

The match is scheduled to start at 2 p.m. It is the first of a series, with the concluding match to be played Monday afternoon.

Coach Skakle expects his team to play reasonably well, despite the fact that it is the first start. Coach Hoehn, with all deference to his son, is probably not so enthusiastic about the Carolina team, at least when they have to meet Dartmouth.

Featherweight Davey Moore In Comma After Knockout

LOS ANGELES (UPI)—Former featherweight champion Davey Moore, in a coma because of critical knockout injuries, fought for his life Friday while a new campaign to abolish boxing in California blazed up.

The first official medical bulletin issued Friday at White Memorial Hospital said Moore of Columbus, Ohio, had suffered injury to "the brain stem and severe bruises to the lower area of the brain."

He suffered those injuries Thursday night when he lost his world featherweight crown on a 10th round knockout to Sugar Ramos, a Cuban exile living in Mexico.

Ramos was one of three new champions crowned before 26,142 spectators in three title fights at the Dodgers' baseball stadium, from where 29-year-old Moore was taken in an ambulance to the hospital.

Governor Edmund G. Brown, a long-time opponent of boxing, announced at Sacramento, Calif., that he would ask for immediate introduction of a bill which would request the people of California to outlaw boxing in the 1964 general election. At the same time he called for an emergency committee to survey the safeguards that now exist and recommend new ones.

Even before the government's statement, two California legislators had announced they would introduce a constitutional amendment "as soon as possible" to outlaw the sport—both professional and amateur.

Rebellion Art Now On Display At Art Center

ALICE WELSH

A collection of creative art in a spirit of thunder and rebellion is currently on exhibit in the North Gallery at Ackland Art Center. Forty-two prints — etchings, woodcuts, drypoints and lithographs — by German printmakers who were identified with the Expressionist movement of the early 20th century and its two affiliates, Die Brueke and Der Blaue Reiter, were selected from the Ackland print collection by Professors Kenneth Ness and John Allcott of the Art Department. Printmakers Erich Heckel, Wassily Kandinsky, Karl Hofer, Max Beckmann, Emil Nolde, Ernst Kirchner, Kaethe Kollwitz Franz Marc, Otto Dix and Karl Schmidt-Rottluff are represented in the show.

The popularity of engraving as a major art form extends from the Middle Ages into the 20th century. It was natural, therefore, that the Expressionists, a group of artists who were dissatisfied with "skin-deep impressionism" of the 19th century, used graphic arts as a means of conveying protests.

This exhibit of engravings is exceptional not only for the excellence of the graphic works as art media but also for the emotional impact expressed in the style and subject matter. All of the prints are emotionally evocative and almost all describe social and political turbulence that is at once horrible and fascinating.

The gallery is open Tuesday through Friday, 2 to 5 p.m. and 8 to 10 p.m.; Sunday 2 to 5 p.m. Closed Monday. The show will continue through April 3.

PARENTS DAY AT UNC

"Parents Day" will be held at UNC on Sunday afternoon, May 5, 1963, it was announced today by the local chapter of Alpha Phi Omega, national service fraternity, which sponsors the annual event as a service to the student body.

The program will include an address by consolidated University President William C. Friday an Air Force ROTC parade and review, with a reception at the unit headquarters; a band concert; a joint performance by the UNC Men's Glee Club and the Woman's College Chorus; a faculty reception on the Graham Memorial Student Union lawn; open house at all dormitories; and campus tours if desired.

RIZZO NAMED TO FACULTY

Gino Lorenzo Rizzo was appointed today an associate professor of romance languages at the University of North Carolina and will assume duties in September, according to Dr. S. A. Stoudemire, Chairman of the Department of Romance Languages at UNC.

Rizzo is presently serving on the faculty of Tulane University, after having taught at the University of California for four years. He was born in Venice, Italy, and was educated at Italian universities. He is married and has three children.

Publications by Rizzo include eight articles in professional journals, two translations, and four book reviews.

Legislature OKs $723 For Panama Exchange

LAUGHTER — After a week's delay, the weatherman finally cooperated with the Campus Carnival, and yesterday's bright sunshine brought over 3,000 people to the intramural field looking for fun, like these students enjoying one of the fraternity booths. —Photo by Jim Wallace

Part Will Be Given By Chest

By JOEL BULKLEY

Student Legislature Thursday night unanimously approved a bill appropriating $723.50 to the International Students' Board to partially cover the expenses of a Panamanian student here next fall.

SL also increased the number of graduate students serving on the Honor Council cases involving graduate students, to three, and passed a resolution urging more student participation in the future development of the University.

The Panamanian exchange bill, introduced by Rufus Edmisten (SP) and George Rosental (SP) for Jim Scott, International Students' Board chairman, cites a deplorable lack of exchange of ideas between the U. S. and Panama as a cause of misunderstanding between the two countries. It also stresses the importance of having a student exchange program with the University of Panama.

The Panamanian Exchange Program is one of the four recipients of the proceeds raised by the Campus Chest this year.

The Honor Council bill, introduced by Dick Ellis (SP) for Mike Lawler, adds one graduate student to either Honor Council when they are acting on a case involving a graduate student. These council members have voting rights on all cases except those arising because of an alleged procedural error.

A resolution, presented by John Uhlder (UP), urges the administration to adopt a policy of increased student participation in the future development of the University. The resolution states that the student body needs a voice in guiding the future expansion of the University and that students can make a valuable contribution in this area through responsible student representation on administrative programs.

Action a bill to provide for a referendum in the April 2 campus elections, on two constitutional amendments, which create an Interfraternity Council Court, was postponed until next week.

SL referred a resolution supporting Senator Thomas Dodd's (D-Conn.) proposal for an additional income tax exemption of $1,200 for students at institutions of higher learning.

Chest Carnival Successful; Loads Of Fun--And Funds

Diane Hile

All in all it was quite successful. Water-filled balloons broke everywhere, coeds were dunked, pledges plagued and the '63 Campus Chest Carnival began and ended with a smile, a laugh and a good time.

Rides and booths dotted the field as a crowd of 3,000 rode the Ferris wheel, bowled, gambled and threw balloons. There were adults, children and a wild combination of both that invested in tickets and a good time during the Saturday afternoon hours. Apparently the cancellation last week because of rain did not hurt the Carnival in the least.

However, peace-loving observers and sometimes nonparticipators were not free to stand around. Kappa Kappa Gamma's pistol packin' girls collected innocent bystanders and slapped them in jail—it cost a ticket to get out.

Gambling was quite prominent. The Young Republicans let you gamble on the New Frontier roulette wheel, Saint Anthony's Hall and the Tri Delt's operated the Whiskey Hill Casino.

One boy came out of the Casino with a bottle of Royall Lime, a table lamp, a six pack and a pair of Gold Cup socks after parlaying a 10-cent ticket into $10 worth of chips. "It was easy," he said with a smile.

The booths that drew the biggest crowds were intriguing and aggressive. The "Strike Back" booth operated by Phi Delta Theta let the throng release aggressions and water filled balloons on campus "characters" in the form of Art Heyman, an SPU member, the campus police, the Tokens and others in the rank of the notorious. The Beta Theta Pi gentlemen stepped aside and let the Chi Omegas get dunked in icy water at the mercy and accuracy of the customers.

The most unique device was designed by the house of Chi Psi. By bowling a ball which knocks over the pin that knocks over a stick (and so on) through a maze of cans filled with water, broken balloons, numerous weights until the whole spontaneous action results in some poor pledge getting doused with water.

The ATO's had another complicated device—in the form of four pledge teams that ran an obstacle course—and the customers had to bet on the winner. No reflection on the pledges, but it was called "Idiot's Delight."

On a less aggressive note there were chicken races, greased pig contests and basketball throws.

A cute brunette coed matched basketball shots with Bryan McSweeney and Billy Cunningham at the Senior Class booth. She gave them fits with the foul shots —which goes to show you can be pretty and play basketball.

The Phi Kappa Sigmas' had their problems too. "We orginally planned on having a real live greased pig. But the pig went to market last week, so we had to make a substitute, a barrel on a greased pole." The substitute was just as difficult as the real thing needless to say.

The Beanbirds had a chicken race, of course. Baby chicks were the prize and now the campus will be plagued with live chickens.

The little'uns had as much fun as the bigger little'uns. The grammar school children had as much fun competing successfully with their elders as the elders had fun. They looked, stared and listened to the older generation screaming, yelling, singing and throwing shaving cream.

And when a six-year-old was asked what he would do if he won a six pack of beer, he looked his audience straight in the eye and said, "No comment."

Know-Nothings Vie With TEP In Bowl

Two undefeated teams will clash today in the fourth round of the Junior Class College Bowl. The match between the "Know-Nothing" and TEP fraternity teams, slated for the Howell Hall auditorium at four, will be open to the public.

The "Know-Nothing" team, composed of Bob Spearman, Mickey Simmons, Walter Dellinger and Henry Mayer have scored two consecutive victories, defeating the Pi Lambda Phi fraternity, 360-330, and triumphing over Ruffin Dorm, 440-200. The TEP team, which includes Louis Legum, Ken Toppell, Alan Ganderson and Ira Berlin has defeated the Delta Upsilon foursome 325-315 two weeks ago.

Dr. John S. Clayton, Associate Professor of Radio, Television, and Motion Pictures will act as moderator of the match. The series, based on the "GE College Bowl", seen on CBS-TV, features academic competition based on quick recall of facts on almost every subject.

The teams will compete for points by attempting to answer ten-point "tossup" questions, which in turn allows them to answer bonus questions worth a stated number of points. All questions used in the matches are supplied by CBS-TV.

The series is being sponsored by the Junior Class Scholarship Committee, and is expected to run from now until late spring. Awards will be given to members of the outstanding team at the conclusion of the series.

Editor Hopefuls Issue Statements

Lloyd

Harry Lloyd, candidate for Daily Tar Heel editor in the April 2 elections, charged yesterday that his oppoinents are "trying to cover up the real facts that the voters should know."

"The 'co-editor candidates' are trying to deride my experience on the paper, and thereby avoid the issue of their own responsibility," he said. "Mr. Blanchard, whose appearances at the DTH office have been timed just so that he could borrow a typwriter to write a story for another paper, evidently does not know or does not want to admit what the real structure of the Tar Heel organization is.

"He says that this year's DTH has been a failure. Does he also admit that it was a 'failure' under a co-editor system?

Now he wants to impose another co-editor system on DTH readers.

"But he is stretching his point to the ridiculous when he tries to blame what he calls the 'failure' of the paper on me, a 3-day-a-week managing editor. He accuses me of doing a part-time job. I think the the voters should know who would be doing a part-time job.

"As managing editor, my policy-making chores are nil. My duties were simply to lay out the news pages. If Mr. Blanchard wants to criticize my makeup and headlines, then let him. That is what I was responsible for. But I didn't hire and fire people. I didn't decide editorial policy. Perhaps I did put in a lot of overtime doing the jobs of people who wouldn't or couldn't do them, but is he blaming me for that?

"I have experience in all phases of this newspaper's operation. Mr. Blanchard is apparently ignorant that some parts of the paper even exist. Does he know that if there was a lack of campus news, then the blame for that lies with the news editor, and not the managing editor? If he wants to raise that issue, why doesn't he raise it with Mr. Farran, who seems to have filled in in the absences of a capable news editor in the last two months?

"Why doesn't Mr. Blanchard admit that he will not be able to put the necessary time on the paper next year, and that he is running as co-editor for that reason? He says he wants to reorganize the Tar Heel

Blanchard & Ethridge

DTH co-editor candidates Dave Ethridge and Gary Blanchard said yesterday they are "pleased to endorse" the action of four UNC student leaders in forming an independent "Students for Ethridge-Blanchard" committee to mobilize support for the candidates' "Four Point Program."

The four students—Walter Dellinger, Diane Blanton, Rufus Edmisten and Donna Bailey — said that "after examining the qualifications of the candidates running, studying their platforms, and seeing how well they have done in the past, we feel that of all those in the field, only Dave Ethridge and Gary Blanchard . . . can and will provide the leadership necessary to put out the kind of DTH we want to see."

Ethridge and Blanchard called the support of the four students "most welcome" and expressed the hope that other students interested in a better DTH will contact them or anyone on the committee.

"This action underlines what we have been finding in our visits and speeches around the campus," the co-editor candidates said in a statement.

"That is, not simply a strong desire for a good campus newspaper, but a willingness to get out and work for it.

"This in a way sums up our position. We not only want a better Tar Heel, we're determined to apply our experience, ideas and energy to achieve that goal.

"We think students should know about decisions before they are made, so that we have an opportunity to influence those decisions, not merely live with them. That's the reason for our idea to break the campus down into three areas and assign at least one well-qualified reporter to each area. This way he develops contacts who can keep him continually informed on what's going on.

"The Tar Heel also has a responsibility to report on the world and the state—but not at the expense of campus news. This is why we want to organize the use of wire copy by boiling wire stories down and running them in a World News Briefs column.

NOFFSINGER HERE

Dr. Jack R. Noffsinger, pastor of Knollwood Baptist Church, Winston-Salem, N. C., will be guest of University Baptist Church March 24-27 for a series of services on the general theme, "Relevant Christian Commitment." He will speak at both the 11 a.m. and 7:45 p.m. worship services on Sunday and each evening Monday-Wednesday at 7:30 p.m.

Farran

"The Daily Tar Heel owes the students of this campus a number of things," Chris Farran, candidate for the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel, said yesterday.

"Most of all, the DTH owes them its undivided attention, and a focus of a student staff on student activities.

"Next, it owes them some mention of how the University is run. The Administration can, when it wants, tell the students several things that concern us directly: where the tremendous income from the Monogram club snack bar and dining room goes, and how the income from the Scuttlebutt and the dorm snack bars is used; why prices on books at the Book Exchange are so high when students can get the books for less downtown, from other students, or in Durham; if the trend of campus expansion is to larger dorms, what measures are being taken to make sure residents of these dorms don't just get 'lost in the crowd?'—how can they participate in the University and be made to feel a part of all student activities; what about a progress report on the effectiveness of these larger dorms as compared to smaller dormitors?"

Farran, a junior from Winston-Salem, said, "In addition, I've had many students in dorms tell me that they don't care what goes on in student government. I think this is because they don't KNOW what goes on in student government, and if the Daily Tar Heel took the trouble to tell them, they would take an increased interest in what is happening to their money and their student government.

"Carolina has four different student courts—the Mens' and Women's Councils, the IFC and IDC courts. Is there any danger of their jurisdiction overlapping? Can a student be tried by two or three different courts? What about a detailed report of the financial set-up of student government? Student government is budgeted for $155,000 next year—where will it come from and where will it go?"

Farran said, "In 2½ years at Carolina I've lived in Everett and Manley dorms, off-campus in an apartment, and for three semesters in a fraternity. These are some of the problems that have occurred to me—and these are some of the questions I hope to answer as editor of the Daily Tar Heel."

Win, Win, Win . . .
And Costs Be Damned

Big time athletics often seem to breed their own particular rules and morality, and it is almost a rule that successful direction of this business comes only through the autocratic direction of a mind of single purpose. Such was "Big Jim" Tatum, such is Frank Howard, and such is the possibly now tarnished Bear Bryant.

But sooner or later the autocrat oversteps his power. Sooner or later he commits some act which even the most blustering alumnus cannot overlook. There comes a time, in short, when the autocrat becomes too big, his mistakes become too many, and his person becomes expendable.

Chuck Erickson is such a man, and it is time he was expended.

The firing of freshman tennis coach Tom Crais was not the first of Erickson's mistakes. There have been many others. But this particular action cuts through the shield of halftone rationalizations usually made in defense of big time teams and leaves the underlying philosophies of the Tatums and the Ericksons as bare as a buzzard-picked skeleton. This philosophy is Erickson's greatest mistake, and it is time the rattling skeleton in the closet of his mind be put to rest under the same clover that should soon be blooming in the pasture of his retirement.

Erickson's philosophy, as Crais well stated, is that of win and the costs be damned. Win, and let the Tom Crais's be silent or unemployed. Win, and deny that a coach is also a teacher with the right, or more the duty to criticize where criticism is due. Win, so that new stadiums will be built while lacrosse players search vainly for money for facilities and equipment. Win, and let the Lennie Rosenbluths be forced to return to school on their own to get the education they missed under the pressure of passing at all costs to perform for Erickson the godhead.

Win, in short, not for Carolina, but for the glory of an athletic director seeking to elevate his department above the rules governing the ordinary academic community.

If it could be argued that Erickson's efforts have been intended for the benefit of the Carolina student body, there might be a case for his continued existence, as a well-meaning person of misdirected motives. Unfortunately for Erickson, however, and more unfortunately for the student body, this is not the case.

1. During the State football game, there was inadequate seating for students, with 1500 being forced to sit in the end zone, and many not being seated until the end of the first half.

2. The Duke football game was scheduled for Thanksgiving vacation, a time when over half of the student body was not able to return in time for the game. It should also be noted here that this year there was not even the excuse of a lucrative television contract to justify this scheduling.

3. The Duke basketball game was scheduled for semester break, giving many students no chance to compete for the inadequate number of tickets. It also took the action of a Daily Tar Heel reporter and editor to allow students to attend the game before they had registered for second semester and picked up their new athletic passes.

By these actions THIS YEAR ALONE Erickson has shown where his heart lies. It is not with the students, the coaches, the players, the alumni or the school. It lies squarely within the breast of C. P. Erickson, sitting astride the athletic department, the blazing white steed of his imagination.

Perhaps Erickson's disregard for students could be ignored — it often has in the past. But when this man's ego grows so large, or the threats against his position become so strong, that he will widen this disregard to include the academic freedom of those who work for him, it must be crushed before it engulfs other areas of the school.

It might be argued that Tom Crais' letter was indiscreet. But indiscretion of this type is not grounds for dismissal nor was it the major reason for his dismissal, and no perceptive reader should believe as Erickson has stated that Crais' "particular philosophy regarding the handling of athletic teams was not a factor" in his dismissal.

Therefore, to those who believe as we do that academic freedom and students' rights still have some importance, we submit the request that a new athletic director be found for UNC.

And to those still endorsing big time athletics, we submit the same. A check of Carolina's records against big time opposition shows that Erickson's big time efforts have produced nothing but big time failures.

Only the box office has profited from this man's career, and it too is in decline. The pasture is green and the gate is open. It is time to use the final whip.

Pinkos – Campus Style

The campus political reaction to the "Apartment Rule" controversy is an interesting psychological phenomenon. It somewhat resembles the national political reaction to Communism.

On the campus the politicos vie with each other to prove who is "strongest" in favor of "student autonomy" and against "administrative abridgement of student rights"; who is strongest against administration, and in unbending, unwavering support of whatever the students do. It would be political suicide for any politician to say, "It is conceivable that the Dean of Women might have a reasonable point . . .", or "Maybe the difference can be worked out without a major confrontation between students and administration" . . .

On the national level the sentiment is "Hard line on Communism"—politically smart candidates will never be accused of "Betting soft on communism." On campus no politician worth his salt will ever be guilty of "Being soft on the administration". . . . (JC)

Orientation -- A Few Suggestions

Advisor Role Re-Defined

To the Editors:

In the last several years, freshman orientation has begun to become in practice what it has always been in principle, an informative and educative beginning for university careers. Such improvements have been due mainly to judicious re-evaluation of the topics presented and to the development of increased emphasis on the scholastic role of the student in the University community.

In order to continue and accelerate this improvement, the Academic Affairs committee of Student Government has published a comprehensive report of suggestions offered by interested faculty and students, further enlightened by the programs of other schools.

The following are suggestions which the student body might find interesting:

During the period before students accepted for admission actually reach the University, two programs should be carried out — a pre-admission list of books to be read should be sent to each student, with the understanding that seminars will be conducted on topics related to these works during orientation; and the program for Merit scholarship Semi-Finalists should be continued by all means.

Orientation itself should be student-run and controlled but organized by an administration-faculty-student committee. Several suggestions as to detail are that:

a) The pre-registration mathematics and English placement tests often place students inaccurately, for the English test requires no prose composition and the mathematics is too elementary to truly test the better high school mathematics students, especially with regard to the calculus. The research currently in progress regarding the replacement or supplementation of these tests should be hastened.

b) In order to improve communication between General College advisors and their advisees, their role should be clearly defined (or re-defined) for all concerned, and the student should feel more personal responsibility for his academic career from the beginning. An informal "on-the-lawn" first meeting during orientation week, in addition to regularly scheduled meetings between students and advisors, is strongly recommended.

c) Entering freshmen should attend several days of classes prior to the official first day of classes for upperclassmen. Also, the introductory course in each department should devote the first day of class to explaining the possibilities for advanced study in that area, in an effort to assist the student in making a more enlightened choice of major.

d) Descriptions of courses offered, as described in the "Undergraduate Bulletin" should be made more complete, and all new students should become acquainted with it as the reference text of the University.

e) Efforts to create a more favorable attitude toward the Honor System should be increased and redirected, or the System should be considered for abandonment. A faculty-student discussion might help.

f) Fraternity and dormitory discussions (pro and con) should be conducted on an optional basis prior to rush, or as the need arises; an individual counselor should not be expected to present an objective analysis of student social life, as this is hardly possible.

g) Various academics-related programs offered by the University should be acclaimed: the Speed-reading course, the advantages of A-section classes, the Educational Testing Service in Peabody Hall, and others. The library tour should be mandatory, but the quiz should be discontinued.

In that a student is not really oriented to the University until second semester, he should continue contact with his counselor and advisors as much as possible during this period. In addition, it has been suggested that a system of upper-college seniors or graduate students as advisors might be established to provide information to interested lowerclassmen in regard to choosing their courses in that particular field.

As can be easily seen, the above is intended to place increased emphasis on the academic aspects of UNC. Criticisms of and additions to these items should be directed to the orientation committee, headed by Archie Davis. As much as anything else, the orientation program needs more people devoting more time and thought and action to it than ever before.

Bombs Have Last Laugh

To the Editors,

Those who feel that any attempt to lessen tensions between the West and the East is a foolhardy one — doomed to failure and perhaps against the best interests of the United States — should note that a number of high ranking U. S. officials disagree. In an Associated Press release datelined Washington, March 11, Secretary of State Dean Rusk made the following comments on the test-ban negotiations now in progress at Geneva.

"I am aware of the risks involved in an undetected Soviet violation of the treaty or its suprise abrogation. I am also aware," Rusk continued, "of the graver risk to our security and the security of the free world implicit in a future without any multilateral restraint on the development of nuclear weapons."

The same day, according to another AP release, Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara told the House Armed Service Committee that he doubts whether the Soviet Union would spare American cities and strike only at military targets in a nuclear attack on the United States. McNamara estimated that if a nuclear war does occur, combined East-West losses in the initial phase alone would total 300 million lives.

It would seem, then, that those who advocate a discontinuing of test-ban and disarmament efforts are, in fact, giving up all possibilities other than war. Opponents of test-ban negotiations are continually saying that the United States will, in some manner, lose ground to the Russians. If Mr. Rusk and Mr. Mcamara are to be believed, a discontinuing of test-ban negotiations and a general cessation of attempts to decrease tension between East and West means accepting the possibility of annihilating at least 300 million individuals. While some may laugh and say that this is an excellent way to solve the population explosion, it might be worthwhile to note that at least a few of these 300 million persons will be relatives and friends.

We must begin to realize that if there are alternatives other than the much quoted "red or dead" ones, they must be found. Unless a search for these alternatives is continued and enlarged, they will not be found. McNamara and Rusk, as well as many other experts on the subject, believe that if we do not find alternatives to the present international situation, the result may well be catastrophic.

In a nuclear war, only the bombs will have the last laugh.

Parker Statement On NSA

Eds. Note: Due to unforeseen circumstances, this statement by Kellis Parker, SP candidate for NSA Congress could not be turned in on time to run Friday. In the future, any statements turned in late will not be run.)

Student life is centered around challenges and responses. The national Student Association was formed in 1946 as a response to national and international issues confronting American students. It is an organization of students attempting to stimulate and improve democratic student government, to improve student cultural and social welfare, and to promote international understanding and fellowship. This can be achieved at UNC if students become more responsible in their selection of representatives to the National Student Congress, the legislative body of NSA.

As a possible delegate to this congress, there are four areas of which I am especially concerned and which constitute my four-point program. First, I would like to see a re-newed emphasis on education. The challenges to higher education are sometimes lost in our attempts to respond to political issues. Problems presented by the rising cost of education, mediocre educational standards, facilities and teaching methods, and the inaccessibility of education to some people for reasons of race, religion, political belief and economic circumstance should be examined.

Second, there should be a re-evaluation of the role of student government. Possible challenges to the popular concept of student autonomy have arisen at Pfeiffer College where the existence of student government has been threatened and at UNC where the administration has established a censureship committee. The relationship between the administration and student government need to be re-examined and defined.

Third, NSA should investigate ways and means of assimilating international students into normal campus life. Too often we have emphasized how to create opportunities for students to study in America without giving due consideration to the problems of adjustment.

Fourth, I shall make every effort to share conference experiences with the student body. One does not have to be in permanent residence at UNC to recognize that a preponderance of students know very little about NSA. This problem could be remedied if the delegates to the conference would return to the campus and make serious attempts to define the purpose and role of NSA.

NSA at UNC has compiled a record of which it can be proud; however, the activities of NSA at UNC should be focused more towards our own campus and students. Many students would be willing to participate in a year-round foreign student orientation program if there was such a program at UNC. Unfortunately, there is not. As a delegate to the conference, I would have the opportunity to mingle with other students and get their suggestions as to ways of improving our foreign student program. The other issues that I have outlined could also be pursued.

'Garden': Shadow And Substance

REVIEW: Playmakers — "The Chalk Garden" by Enid Bagnold.

The recent production of The Chalk Garden affords an excellent opportunity for the examination and evaluation of the state of drama at Carolina. The cast was studded with veteran performers: Marion Fitz-Simons, Louise Lamont, Josephine Pettis, seasoned student actors: Graham Pollick and Larry Randolph; and Junior Playmaker summer star, Mary Lindsay Spearman, appearing for the third time this season.

The play is as elegant and old-fashioned as Mrs. St. Maughn, the domineering grandmother who is determined to rear her grandchild with the artificial attitudes of another era. Marion Fitz-Simons struck these attitutdes with a style and a precision matched only by her impeccable diction. Louise Lamont as the worldly governess who tries to prod the child toward "Life" and the "real world" and Josephine Pettis as the mother who awaits to receive her both delivered their lines with the respect of English teachers, treating each simile and metaphor with lingering, loving care. Graham Pollick as the old judge shows the same deference to rhetoric, yet tints it with that wistful melancholy of the world weary patrician that seems to be his favorite characterization. Mary Lindsay Spearman, in her best performance to date, lacks the polish of her more experienced colleagues, but admirably kept pace with them by dint of sheer effort and enthusiasm. Larry Randolph as Maitland the houseservant was a refreshing contrast to the grand style of the other players with his underplayed almost flippant manner giving the delightful impression of a leprechaun at a wake.

In spite of the experienced performers I think this play was badly performed for one reason which I think characterizes not only this play but every play the Playmakers produce and this is that the whole is sacrificed for the glorification of its parts. This is the artistic sin of self-indulgence which is not the sole possession of the "method actor." Instead of wallowing in inarticulate self-pity as the worst of the method actors do, the playmakers glory in egotistical self-agrandizement. They are all virtuoso performers giving solo performances, and the concept of a play as an orchestral effort seems completely disregarded Louise Lamont as Miss Madrigal delivered a line that says it much better than I can: "They give us the shape and the shadow of truth but the accidentals and the essence has been removed." Miss Madrigal should have blushed, for that is just what she gave to us, the shape, the shadow, the outline the form the semblance without the substance, the words without the music.

Watching the Chalk Garden I couldn't figure out why it seemed so long for the cues were picked up immediately, there was never a gap between lines, the movements were direct and straightforward, in fact there seemed to be a real crispness about the transitions from scene to scene, highlight to highlight, point to point. Then I had the embarrassing realization that I didn't know what was going on. What was the play about? I realized that I had not been drawn to what they were doing, but how they were doing it. I couldn't hear the story for the words, words, words! Each speech was a declamation, an example of the well-delivered line, the rhetorically conceived expression, and I began to feel as if instead of a theatre I had wandered into a 19th century literary society that was discussing the correct usage and delivery of metaphor and simile. Shakespeare wrote beautiful words and Laurence Olivier speaks them beautifully but its not the words that make Shakespeare a great dramatist nor the voice that makes Olivier a great actor. It is something more and this is the prerequisite of all art, that it live. All the talk of Life on the playmaker stage had for me only the hollow echoes of a life long-since passed away.

The play had a double significance for me because I saw in it such a parallel with the Playmakers. The grandmother tries to give the grandchild the same sense of values which she has, but what is very becoming to the grandmother is not at all suited to the child. One man's palace can be another man's prison, and the palace of Mrs. Fitz-Simons style was a prison for Mary Lindsay Spearman. Appearing with actresses as strong as Mrs. Fitz-Simons and Mrs. Lamont a young girl must indeed have an abundance of youth and energy in order to make herself noticed. Unfortunately Miss Spearman tried to beat them at their own game but fortunately she lost. Her mistake was trying to play it in the first place, for whatever she didn't have, she did have an excitement about her that commanded attention.

It is this excitement that must discover its own style and not be forced into borrowing or emulating someone else's. The greatest danger for young actors is that they fall into the mannerisms of their elders in trying to understand their manner. This of course is the great danger of the external approach to acting and it is danger that not only Miss Spearman must avoid but what all the Playmakers must avoid. Unfortunately for them and for us, they seldom do. That is why we go to the Playmakers Theatre and see two hours of posing and posturing and declaiming and orating, with an occasional spark of life, when someone makes a mistake.

The fault of this must lie with the Drama Department for where else can it lie? Can it be that there just aren't that many interested or talented people in the department? Then why not? Doesn't the name of the Carolina Playmakers attract young people from all over the country? Then why were there only two students of the university in the cast? We are constantly confronted with the shadow of Prof. Koch and the glorious past and it's about the time someone showed us the substance.

like a professional newspaper, but this wish is incongruous with his plans for a co-editorship. What successful paper has co-editors? We were told last year that a co-editorship will solve DTH ills. Well, has it? I don't think UNC students are going to fall for the same bait again."

Lloyd said that the only practical Tar Heel organization would consist of a single editor, experienced and familiar with all phases of the newspaper, and a competent staff given the power to exercise authority of their own.

"That is the plan I visualize," he said, "I know I can make it work. The co-editor plan is just so much doubletalk."

Glee Club Concert Set Tuesday In Hill

The UNC Men's Glee Club, under the direction of Dr. Joel Carter, will present this week's Tuesday Evening Concert Series program in Hill Hall at eight o'clock.

This program of opera excerpts the first in recent years by the Glee Club, will include choral selections from several grand operas and a condensed version of Gilbert and Sullivan's "H. M. S. Pinafore."

The program will also include Beethoven's "O What Delight" from Fidelio; "The Joy of the Hunter" from Weber's Der Freischutz; Wagner's "Steersman Leave the Watch" from The Flying Dutchman and "The Pilgrim's Chorus" from Tannhauser.

The second scene from the second act of La Forza del Destino by Giuseppe Verdi will feature Mrs. Donna Kelly, soprano from Louisville, Ky., as Lenora, Harold Lowry, baritone as Fra Melitone, and Dr. Joel Carter, bass-baritone as Padre Guardino.

Excerps from Le Damnation de Faust by Hector Berlioz will present U. T. Holmes, bass as Mephistopheles. Selections from this opera will include "Chanson de Brander" (The Song of the Rat), Chanson de Mephistopheles" (Song of the Flea), and "Mephistopheles' Serenade."

The final portion of the program, Gilbert and Sullivan's "H. M. S. Pinafore," has been adapted and directed by John Crockett. Soloists will be Martha Gibbs, mezzo-soprano, and Dr. Carter, bass-baritone. Members of the Glee Club will take the parts of Rafe Rackstraw, Deadeye, the Boatswain, and the Captain.

Dream Expert To Deliver Lecture

A young medical scientist who has helped pioneer studies of the psychology and physiology of dreaming will deliver the eighth annual Lee B. Jenkins Memorial Lecture at the University School of Medicine.

Dr. William C. Dement, associate professor of psychiatry at Stanford University, will talk on "The Nature of Dreaming," in a lecture to be given at 4 p.m. March 27, in the Clinic Auditorium of Memorial Hospital here.

The Lee B. Jenkins Lectureship was established by Mrs. Lee B. Jenkins of Kinston, in honor of her late husband, a distinguished, civic-minded industrialist of that city. Each year a noted medical specialist is invited to the UNC School of Medicine to give the lecture.

This year's lecturer, Dr. Dement, received his B.S. degree from the University of Washington and his M.D. in 1955 from the University of Chicago School of Medicine. In 1957, he received the Ph.D. in Psysiology from the University of Chicago.

It was at Chicago that Dr. Dement and his former chief, Dr. Nathan Kleitman, discovered that eye movements occur in a cyclic search in the area of sleep and that they can be detected electrically.

This discovery and the techniques of recording these eye movements have spurred researchin the area of sleep and dreaming. The work which led to the discovery was begun while Dr. Dement was still a second-year medical student.

UNC Netters Breeze Past Dartmouth By 9-0; Tar Heels Even Count With Southern Illinois

Haywood Yields Two Hits In Relief

By ED DUPREE

Bill Haywood's two-hit relief pitching cooled off Southern Illinois yesterday as North Carolina's Tar Heels came from behind and won their first baseball victory of the season, 6-4.

The visitors jumped off to a 2-0 lead in the first inning, then pushed their lead to 4-0 in the third inning before Haywood replaced Spencer Willard on the mound. Haywood then retired 13 men in a row before SIU's Paul Kerr singled sharply to center.

Dave Leonard, the only other man to reach base against Haywood, was erased on a double play after his eighth-inning single.

Coach Walt Rabb's baseballers tied the score in the bottom of the third with four runs and gave Haywood all the runs he needed with two more tallies in the fourth.

Haywood started the big third with a single. Dick Prindle, who led the UNC hitting with three for three, singled, and Billy Taylor walked to load the bases. Heyward Hull got the third base hit of the inning, driving in Haywood's courtesy runner, Milford Cox, and Prindle. Jim Speight rapped out another single to drive Taylor home and Gary Black's single scoring Hull tied the game.

After Haywood had singled, Cox again came in to run for him. Prindle's third straight single hit Cox running to second, leaving only one man on base. But on a pickoff attempt by the SIU catcher, the ball sailed into right field enabling Prindle to advance to third. Taylor put Carolina ahead for keeps with the third straight hit of the inning, scoring Prindle. Taylor stole second, went to third on a passed ball and scored on another SIU miscue—the pitcher's wild pickoff throw.

The Tar Heels outhit the northerners, 11-8, with every UNC starter except catcher Bernie Isgett collecting at least one hit. All of the UNC hits were singles. Buddy Tilden, Bill Brown, Gary Black, Speight, Taylor and Hull each had one hit. Haywood was two for four.

Second baseman Gib Snyder and right fielder John Siebel led the visitors' hitting with two hits in four at at bats each.

In Haywood's streak of 13 straight retired batters, not one ball was hit out of the infield. In the third inning, he came in with one man out and got the next two on a fielder's choice and strikeout.

In the fourth, fifth and sixth he retired the sides in order—eight on infield grounders and one by the strikeout route.

The ninth inning went by quickly on a sharp liner to Brown at first, a strikeout and a long fly to Tilden in right.

The victory evened the two-game series with Southern Illinois. Friday the visitors had won by the same score, 6-4.

Ithaca College of New York will meet the Tar Heels in Emerson Stadium in the next non-conference battle Tuesday.

Golf Winner Is In Doubt

North and South Carolina had a Golf match yesterday, but the winner is still in doubt.

The Gamecocks outpointed the Tar Heels, 10-8, but only had six golfers competing. In Atlantic Coast Conference matches seven men usually compete for each team, so the matter will be left up to the ACC Commissioner.

Carolina would automatically win the seventh match by forfeit, 3-0, if the conference rules in its favor, thus winning the contest, 11-10.

Les Fleisher was the afternoon's medalist with a 72. Fleisher defeated USC's Jack Seawell, 2-1.

Other Tar Heel individual winners were Abe Andes and Mike Dore. Andes defeated Chuck Simmons, 2½-½, and Dore defeated Belton McCarty, 2½-½.

The Gamecocks pulled a major upset Friday when they tied Duke, the defending ACC champions, 9-9.

Woman Loses In Bout With Pole

A Chapel Hill woman received minor facial injuries in a traffic accident yesterday morning on E. Rosemary St. in front of the Delta Upsilon fraternity.

Mrs. William G. Robinson of E. Woodlake Road hit a telephone pole at 407 E. Rosemary while traveling east on that street about 8:30 a.m.

Investigating officer Penney of the Chapel Hill Police Department said Mrs. Robinson's 1955 model car hit the pole on her side of the street and broke it in two places.

Officer Penney said Mrs. Robinson told him right after the accident that she may have swerved the car to avoid hitting a dog. The officer said no charges had been filed pending the completion of his investigation.

CLEMSON, S. C. — North Carolina's track team took its second Atlantic Coast Conference victory of the outdoor season, but not without a tough fight from Clemson's Tigers.

The Tar Heels won, 78-67, but it took Bill Croom's third place in the triple jump (hop, skip and jump) to keep the contest from depending on the outcome of the mile relay, the last event of the afternoon.

Before the triple jump was completed, UNC led 72-59. A sweep of the event would have enabled Clemson to close the gap to 72-68. The Tigers took first and second, but Croom placed third to clinch the contest.

In the mile relay the Clemson team was disqualified when onc of its runners fell down and forced a UNC runner out of his lane. The victory was worth five points for Carolina.

The teams took turns sweeping events. Carolina took the top three places in the mile, 880-yard run and the two-mile. Clemson swept the 100-yard dash, the broad jump and the discus.

Top point man for the afternoon was Clemson's Jim Wynne with 11 1/4 points. Wynne won the 100 and 220 dashes and ran with the Tigers' victorious 440-yard relay team.

Jim Brown, with 10 points, and Bob Hart, with 9 1/4, led Carolina. Brown won the 120-high hurdles and the 330-intermediate hurdles. Hart took first in the 440, second in the 220 and ran with the Tar Heel mile relay quartet.

Carolina collected nine first places to Clemson's six. The tigers outpointed North Carolina, 40-28, in the field events, but UNC was superior in the track events, 50-27.

Other first place winners for Carolina were Heath Whittle in the pole vault, Nick Street in the javelin, and Joe Huffman and Tommy Clark in a high-jump tie.

The Tar Heels were so dominant in the mile and two-mile runs that three UNC men tied in each event. Charlie Little, Art Maillet and Bob Bennett crossed the finish line at the same time in the mile, while Maillet, Carmine Lumnetta and Larry Henry did the same in the two mile.

Jerry Stuver won the 880-yard run for Carolina.

Two Clemson school records were broken by the Tiger field men.

Dick Dobbs threw the discus 157' 4" and Cater Leland covered 45' 5" in the triple jump.

Clemson's hurdles star, Wes King, was beaten by Brown in both the hurdle events and had to settle for a pair of seconds.

UNC's next track action will be next weekend when they travel to Gainesville, Fla., for the Florida Relays.

STRONG TO SPEAK

Senator Charles Strong of Guilford County will address the UNC-YRC at its meeting on Tuesday night, March 26, at 7:00 in Gerrard Hall. The public is invited to this meeting.

By LOUIS LEGUM

People, hundreds of them, turned out yesterday afternoon to find out whether all they had heard about the Carolina tennis team was true.

It was true and maybe a little more than that.

With IBM-like precision, the Tar Hels hammered out a 9-0 win over a touring Dartmouth team, often evoking awe from the spectators at their display of raw, undistilled power.

They did this despite the chaotic noise of the Campus Chest Carnival across the way; they did this despite that it was their first match of the 1963 season; they did this despite the Dartmouth team playing fierce and sometimes excellent tennis.

For many times Coach "Red" Hoehn's players pridefully demonstrated that they had not come all the way from Hanover, New Hampshire, to serve as mere cannon fodder. On the number one court Dave Smoyer battled grimly against the relentless forehand of George Sokol, startling the crowd by taking the first two games of the first set. If it was only a gesture, as the rest of the match turned out, it was a meaningful gesture.B ut at the end Sokol's persistency prevailed for a 6-2, 6-1 triumph.

Sokol had great success with his serve and his forehand, particularly on the service return. On quite a few points he was able to put the serving Smoyer on the defensive by driving a return deep to the backhand court, and then capturing the point by lashing another shot down the sideline tape. A large number of Smoyer's better shots, who also is an All-American soccer player, were negated by a simple error. Several times after setting up Sokol for the kill, he dropped an easy overhead into the net.

Yet it was conclusively Sokol's match. His play was visibly more aggressive than at any time last year, and some of his placements brought enthusiastic applause from the spectators.

Ted Hoehn had possibly an even harder time with his opponent, Doug Floren. Although the score was decisive enough, 6-2, 6-4, Floren fought the son of the Dartmouth coach at every point before succumbing. Hoehn had his serve working relatively well to go with his usual assortment of lobs, drop shots, and consistent groundstrokes. But often he tended to miss some shots that he probably shouldn't have missed, the product of an opening match.

The same held essentially true for Charlie Shaffer at three. Shaffer defeated John Morrison by the identical score of 6-2, 6-4. In spurts his crashing serve looked like it belonged to a Davis Cupper, but many of his follow-up shots dropped limply into the net. This was a symptom of most of Carolina's shortcomings yesterday; in many instances they were too anxious to put a point away.

Bitsy Harrison in his number four match with Doug Judah had a relatively easier time of it. Harrison played with a great deal of determination and the beneficient result was a 6-1, 6-1 victory against Doug Judah.

Undoubtedly the closest match of the day concerned a couple of sophomores. After dropping the first set, Carolina's O. H. Parrish gathered his game together to win, 4-6, 6-4, 6-3 over Tucky Mays. Although Parrish was obviously suffering from a case of opening match tensions, Mays fought him all the way to the extent of almost pulling out a Dartmouth triumph.

The last match on the sixth court was efficiently handled by veteran Keith Stoneman. He raced through a 6-0, 6-0 win over Ned Miller.

The two teams will meet each other again Monday afternoon at 2 p.m.

SPU Refuses Membership To 'Marxist' Dennis King

The Student Peace Union Sunday voted unanimously to uphold the decision of its Steering Committee in rejecting the application for membership of Dennis King, a member of the local Progressive Labor Club.

After much debate, King was rejected on the grounds that he did not agree with the Statement of Purpose. Agreement with this Statement is a constitutional requirement for membership.

King said that he did not agree with the "equal blame clause" of the statement and that the statement itself contained two views which were mutually exclusive.

The "equal blame clause" states that both the East and West must bear responsibility for the Cold War and that both have "pursued foreign policies which are not in the interests of their own people or the people of the world."

The Statement of Purpose also says that the SPU does not commit "any member to a precise statement of policy." According to King, these two statements are incongruous.

"I am a Marxist," said King. I am a member of the Progressive Labor Movement based on Marxist-Leninist principles.

"The SPU Statement of Purpose is contradictory," he concluded, "merely to oppose Marxists and is therefore a red-baiting clause."

Pat Cusick, SPU chairman, spoke after King and pointed out that it makes no differences what a person's political affiliations or beliefs are if he agrees with the Statement of Purpose.

"One member of PL joined SPU," said Cusick, "though I understand he has since left the Progressive Labor Club." He added that he thought SPU was in a strange position, being called "red" by conservatives and "red-baiter" by leftists.

"What is important," concluded Cusick, "is whether or not he agrees with the Statement of Purpose. Mr. King has said that he does not agree with the Statement of Purpose.

Therefore he cannot obtain membership in the Student Peace Union. It is for this reason alone that the Steering Committee has refused him."

A motion from the floor to support the decision of the Steering Committee in rejecting Mr. King was passed unanimously.

Strong Slated In GOP Talk Tonight At 7

Senator Charles Strong of Guilford County will address the UNC-YRC at its meeting tonight at seven o'clock in Gerrard Hall. Senator Strong was scheduled to appear last month, but the snow forced a postponement.

Since assuming his Senate seat, last November, Strong has been instrumental in formulating Republican stands on a wide number of issues. His activities in Raleigh have forced the press and Democratic majority to take note of the "preacher from Guilford" as he is referred to. He is a Christian minister in Greensboro.

Erickson Says Edit 'Vicious' Again Defends Firing Crais

Says Scheduling 'Clerical' Error

By GARY BLANCHARD AND MAT FRIEDMAN

UNC Athletic Director Chuck Erickson yesterday termed as "vicious" and in "total error" an editorial criticizing his athletic policies which appeared in Sunday's DTH.

The editorial was written by Bill Wuamett, a senior and DTH Managing Editor, in connection with Erickson's recent firing of freshman tennis coach Tom Crais because of a letter which Crais had written to the DTH.

Erickson stated that the firing of freshman tennis coach Tom Crais was a result of charges made in a letter which were harmful to the University and couldn't be backed up. "Academic freedom and right of criticism has never been an issue," he said.

In the letter Crais cited "subterranean murmurs" about grade-changing and Honor Council concessions for athletes. He said Sunday he still feels the charges are true but he cannot prove them.

Erickson said there "have never been any concessions made for athletes so far as I know.

"Anybody who'd write a vicious thing as that without even coming down here and asking questions does damage to the whole university . . . it's wrong.

Erickson said he follows the Faculty Athletic Committee policy in running the sports department. "Their philosophy is to have as many activities as the students want and as we can afford and have facilities for.

"Of course you play to win. That's why you have a scoreboard. Is there anything wrong with that? We've never juggled integrity—you either play it right or you don't play at all.

Erickson took issue with four of the editorial's main points: 1) that former All-American Lennie Rosenbluth and other athletes have been "forced to return to school on their own to get the education they missed under the pressure of passing at all costs to perform for Erickson the godhead."

Said Erickson: "He got his degree in '57, played pro ball for two years and went into business for awhile. Now's he's back here taking graduate work to teach. That editorial damaged him and there's no excuse for it. I think that's dastardly."

2) that Erickson is responsible for "inadequate seating for students" at last fall's State-Carolina game.

Erickson: "The students asked me to arrange it so they could bring dates and relatives. I thought that might lead to overcrowding but they said 'Never mind, the students want it.'"

3) The Duke-Carolina football game was scheduled over Thanksgiving vacation when over half the student body was away.

Erickson: "We play ten football games and we can't start until school opens. As the calendar rotates, every seventh year the Duke game—if it comes last—automatically falls during vacation. This scheduling is a very difficult thing. You're always working around conflicts. You change one game with one team and you can back up 50 teams."

4) that the Duke Carolina basketball game was scheduled for semester break, "giving many students no chance to compete for the inadequate number of tickets."

Erickson: There was a "clerical mixup" and special arrangements were made to televise the game to accommodate the large number of students and fans who wanted to see it.

On the charge that "lacrosse players search vainly for money and equipment" while new stadiums are being built, Erickson said that "the lacrosse team has been getting everything they have asked for. If there is any problem, no one has complained to me."

Deposits Due On Dorm Rent For Next Fall

The UNC Housing office has announced that students now assigned to dormitory rooms should reserve space for the summer and fall by April 1.

Housing Director James Wadsworth said about 200 more men's rooms would be tripled next fall.

For the first summer session only, double rooms will be available in Joyner and Winston dorms, with single rooms available in Graham. Double rooms will be open for the second summer session only in Old West.

Rooms may be reserved for both summer sessions in Carr, Connor, Manly, Mangum, Ruffin, Aycock, Grimes, and Stacy. Alexander dormitory will be reserved for married couples for both sessions.

Summer school room rents are $20 for a double room, $30 single, and $40 for married couples.

Fall reservation fees of $10 are also due by April 1.

Room rent for the fall semester has been tenetativtly set at $96.50 for each occupant of normal double rooms. This amount includes a dormitory social fee of $1.50. Rent for the fall must be paid in full by July 1. Most rooms in the fall will be tripled except those in Avery, Parker, Teague, Craige, Eringhaus and Conner.

COOL SCHOOL STOOLS—Polly Hastings looks down from a stack of Cool School Stools, being sold by the Senior Class through April 6, in fraternities, sororities and downtown to raise money for their class gifts. The stools can be ordered with fraternity and sorority seals, in addition to the UNC emblem.

Phi Delts Receive Greek Week Win

The Phi Delta Theta fraternity pledge class was awarded the Stanley Sturm Memorial trophy for the "best pledge class" at the Greek Week Convocation in Memorial Hall last night.

Charlie Battle, president of the IFC, in awarding the trophy said, that "The contest was as close this time as it has been in many years." The awarding of the "best pledge class" trophy climaxed Greek Week activities for this year.

Greek Week was set up to reduce the hazing of Hell Week and to improve fraternity relations with the community. Pledge classes participated in athletic events, a Field Day, work day projects and in the Campus Chest Carnival. In addition, they were judged on the basis of scholastics and extra-curricular activities.

Chi Psi received the trophy for the highest scholastic average. St. Anthony Hall and Phi Kappa Sigma were second and third, respectively.

The best booth in the Carnival, judged in conjunction with the Campus Chest Committee, was awarded to Phi Delta Theta. ATO took second place, while Chi Psi was third.

Field Day, which was judged on the basis of quality of work and participation, resulted in a tie for first place between ATO and Phi Kappa Sigma. ZBT was awarded third place.

Dean of Men William G. Long addressed the pledge classes last night and issued a challenge to the pledges to "Revolutionize pledge training in fraternities." He drew a parallel between the unity engendered in many pledge classes and the unity of the allies during the second World War. Such unity based on a "common enemy" soon falls apart when the enemy is eliminated. Dean Long said that the pledges had an opportunity to — "put fraternities on the map by eliminating immature practices". Long also urged them not to put their "successors through the wringer just because they themselves were."

Individual Cannot Be Cog—McDevitt

UP Presidential candidate Larry McDevitt yesterday discussed his plans for Student Government academic, cultural, and social programs "designed to preserve the concept of the student as an individual here for academic stimulation and cultural enrichment."

"In dealing with the problems of student growth in a growing University," McDevitt said, "Student Government's obligation is to prevent the student from becoming a depersonalized cog in the larger University machinery. Our programs must provide for student well-being and creativity, goals often neglected in the over-all expansion program."

While outlining suggestions for academic improvements, McDevitt stressed the "dual nature" of Student Government activity by distinguishing between long-range and short-run projects. "We must initiate action even though more than one year is required for full realization of the plans," McDevitt said, "while at the same time we cannot forget our responsibility to students here now."

Seminars And Discussions

"Although we are planning an extensive evaluation of the freshman curriculum and the expansion of our international exchange scholarship program, for example," McDevitt stated, we can take immediate steps in the promotion of a better intellectual climate by Student Government sponsorship of seminars and informal discussions in living units and by encouraging more effective utilization of interested and talented persons in the Chapel Hill area in courses and informal programs."

McDevitt enumerated several other long-range projects for academic improvement including the investigation and establishment of a more practical and feasible drop-add system and the participation of student representatives on faculty curriculum committees.

"At the same time," he noted, "we can work for the expansion of library services (including dorm libraries and the extension of hours), the reinstatement of the much-needed reading day before exams, and the broadening of the Merit Scholars information program."

Dorm Social Life

In explaining the application of his two-fold programming approach to problems of dormitory life, McDevitt pointed out that "while we plan for a co-ed resident hall with common eating and social facilities, Student Government can improve existing conditions through the financial assistance program announced earlier and more effective coordination between the IDC and CWC on the planning of dances and open houses throughout the year."

"Student Government will also assist in the planning of more frequent dances with WC students, both here and at Greensboro," McDevitt said, "and will initiate a more extended program of co-ed visiting programs in mens' dormitories."

McDevitt also listed two special projects, "a realistic carrier current system and the construction of several gravel car washing areas" upon which he said immediat action can be taken.

"Student government," McDevitt concluded "must plan creatively and act decisively in all areas of University life."

Dormitory Spotlight: Nurses

This is the twentieth in a series of articles on UNC dorms. It is sponsored jointly by the dorm president and the Communications Committee.

Strong leadership, good ideas and plenty of work have resulted in an active and successful year for the Nurses' Dorm.

Such features as a dorm newspaper, a booth at the Campus Chest Carnival, an entry in the "Beat Dook" parade, dorm dances, an entry in the Valkyrie Sing and leadership in Student Government have contributed to the present high standing the dorm holds.

The newspaper, unique among women's dorms, is published regularly and contains reports from the dorm's representatives in the WRC, CWC, and Student Legislature along with news and announcements.

Social life has been featured by two semi-formal dances, one at Christmas and the other in the spring in honor of the seniors. In addition, there have been several mixers with men's dorms.

Julia Davis did an excellent job as president the past year, and much of the dorm's success can be attributed to her. Betsy Clark will lead the dorm next year, and will be assisted by Becky Bradner, vice president; Pat St. John, secretary; Jerri Moser, CWC representative; and Judy Tyson, social chairman. Jean Yoder and Ann Lupton have represented the dorm in the Student Legislature this year.

Lawler Sets Goals For Improved SG

The President of the Student Body must select specific projects and integrate these into a comprehensive effort to establish a more creative and self assertive student government. These efforts must be in terms of a government which is of, by and for the students. This means that the President should be a public official by three practical methods; presitial press conferences, public stands on issues which arise during the year and visits to as many living units as possible for dorm and chapter meetings.

In working with the four areas of living unit-government this year, I have become acutely aware that the furthering of an effectual and progressive IDC, WRC, Panhellenic and IFC will be a major factor in determining the success of our efforts to solve the critical problems we face. This year the IFC established a jurisdiction in disciplinary matters involving individual fraternity men. The WRC is asserting an increasingly vital and independent voice. The Panhellenic has established solid precedents in the area of sorority participation in parades, etc. The IDC has a campus-wide paid intramural managers program as well as the two-year-old improvements Committee planning major dorm renovations, libraries, etc.

Next year the President must establish a student-faculty committee on the problems of deferred rush to carry on the groundwork laid at the Southern Pines Conference, set up by a financial grant from Psi, Sigma Nu. The President must direct the examination of the present goals and purposes of the fraternity system and stand up for and encourage internal reform—not imposed by external agencies.

The President must carry out three definite programs with the IDC. First, (rather than the impractical proposal of coed dorms submitted by the other party) the establishment of an open-room policy in one or two dorms whereby guys could entertain dates in the rooms on two or three Saturday night dorm parties. Second, the strengthening of the IDC Court through increasing protection of defendants' rights and realistic disciplinary action through increased co-operation with dorm officers and advisers. "House councils" will weaken dorm government as they did when tried in 1958. Third, presidential action to establish a clear and fairer policy on dorm residents paying for room repairs.

In 1960-61 report of the Campus Affairs Committee, 80 per-cent of the students questioned stated student government was necessary in the dormitory. The President must take vigorous action to continue the positive steps to bring about more effectual living-unit government in ALL FOUR AREAS of the student community.

Students must be a part of the University decision-making process for the following reasons. The report of the Harper Committee noted the inordinate flunk-out and drop-out rate in the top quartile of three entering freshman classes. This is our problem! We must contribute our opinions towards its solution. This caliber student must not be lost!

I believe a workable tutor system employing graduate and undergraduates can be implemented on an experimental basis. Each tutor will be assigned five or six freshmen who are required to meet with him once a week. We must continue vigorous course evaluation to make the General College more stimulat-

Di-Phi Argues Weapons And War Tonight

Blasts against nuclear testing will echo in the Di-Phi chamber tonight as the society debates a resolution urging early disarmament agreements.

"The human self-conduct is being cheapened and morality indermined by rationalizations in statistical terms against disarmament," the bill states.

It emphasizes the imminent dangers of the present arms situation and states that the probabilities of accidental nuclear war are increasing as time goes on.

The bill cites the practicality of "black box" checks by the United Nations, supplemented by seismographic detection of any treaty breakage, as a means of aiding disarmament.

The resolution was introduced by Rep. Hubert Hawkins of Rockingham County.

The Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Society meets at 7:30 on the 3rd floor of New West.

SZULC TO SPEAK

Tad Szulc, foreign affairs specialist for the New York Times, will speak on "Cuba, 1963" tonight at eight o'clock in 104 Howell Hall as part of the UNC Journalism Lecture Series.

An authority on Latin American Affairs, Szulc covered the Cuban Revolution for the Times as South American correspondent from 1955 to 1961. He won the Maria Moors Cabot Gold Medal for hemispheric reporting in 1959, and published his book "Twilight of the Tyrants" in that year. With Karl E. Meyer he co-authored "The Cuban Invasion" in 1962. A third book "Winds of Revolution," is scheduled for publication this spring.

Bentley Delivers McNair Lecture Tonite In Carroll

The McNair Lectureship on Science and Religion has a most unique mission, provided for in the will of the Rev. John Calvin McNair of the UNC class of 1849. The mission: ". . . to show the mutual bearing of science and theology upon each other and to prove the existence and attributes, as far as may be, of God from nature.

Lecturer this year will be Dr. Bentley Glass, a professor of biology at Johns Hopkins University who has become recognized as one of the foremost investigators in the field of molecular genetics. He will speak tonight and Wednesday, March 26 and 27, at 8 p.m. in the Carroll Hall Auditorium.

Glass will speak tonight on "The Evolution of Values" and Wednesday night on "Human Heredity and the Ethics of Tomorrow."

Dr. Glass has made major contributions to the field of human genetics and in recent years has served on the Advisory Committee for Biology and Medicine of the Atomic Energy Commission and on the Committee for Genetic Effects of Atomic Radiation of the National Academy of Science.

'Good of the University': Mr. Erickson's Concern?

A DTH staff writer called for the replacement of Athletic Director Chuck Erickson with an editorial in Sunday's paper. The editorial said that the athletic director's philosophy was "win and the costs be damned." The writer criticized Erickson for his firing of freshman tennis coach Tom Crais and for a series of other actions which appeared not to be in the best interest of th student body.

Mr. Erickson reacted by calling the editorial "vicious."

* * *

We support the sentiment of Sunday's editorial.

We believe in a university where a faculty member is not fired for expressing his opinion. Tom Crais was.

We believe in a university of properly oriented athletics. We believe that there is no place at Carolina for misguided big-time athletics and the big-time weight that swaggering athletic czars are prone to throw around. And we believe there has been some of that "weight" thrown around recently.

Crais spoke out . . . and he was fired.

* * *

We believe in a university where the students' interests come first and where box-office and television receipts are not the end goal of sporting events; in a university where the good of the athletics, in both major and minor sports, is put above the desires and demands of alumni and money.

We believe in a university which practices as well as preaches academic freedom.

Mr. Erickson repeatedly expresses a concern for the good of the University; he apparently worries about its reputation. We question whether certain of Mr. Erickson's actions are for "the good of the university."

An Age-Wracked Rule

If the Apartment Rule wasn't killed for good by the Women's Residence Council action last week, it will certainly soon die the sure death of the impractical, the out-of-date and the publicly-ridiculed.

Since Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael "voided" the WRC repeal of the Apartment rule there has been a great deal of talk about the rule among students and faculty.

It should be obvious to anyone by now that neither the students (male or female), or the faculty have the slightest respect for the Apartment Rule.

At meeting after meeting women students have expressed their displeasure, and often amusement, with the futile Apartment Rule. Few women have spoken differently. Male students always have found it humorous, much as any other remnant of the days of Tin Lizzies and Prohibition. . . .

One faculty member called the rule "absurd" in his class last week, and said its repeal was long overdue. Two other leading professors have said they always favored doing away with the rule.

* * *

The debate over the Apartment Rule is somewhat frivolous—because the rule itself is not worth debate; its demise is so obviously demanded by circumstances as to make any dissenting opinion suspect as to rationality.

The Apartment Rule did not do what it claimed to do—keep coeds out of men's apartments, and into the consequent safety of morality. Even assuming the goal of the rule was vaguely sensible (which few people this side of Queen Victoria have claimed), its enforcement is an impossibility.

The rule brought the Honor Code and Campus Code into disrespect among students and the academic community as a whole—and forced the womens' honor council to try cases under a rule they believed unjust.

* * *

Repeal of the rule has come late, but better late than never. There can be no turning back—not as far as Dean Carmichael wants.

The Apartment Rule is dead, whatever anybody — student, professor or administrator—says about it. Nobody can resurrect its age-wracked body now.

We hope the Faculty Committee on Student Discipline will recognize the situation, and stand by the WRC action. We hope Dean Carmichael, behind the rules-rules-and-more-rules shield she feels is necessary, will (secretly, if necessary only to herself) admit the demise of the rule. And we hope the women students stand by their action—in hopes of a more practical and slightly saner set of women's rules. (JC)

Student Government Proved Ineffective?

SG Not 'Autonomous'

To the Editors,

The recent action of the Dean of Women regarding the "apartment rule" is an excellent indication of the nature of the so-called "autonomous" student government of this university: a system whereby the students are free to govern themselves completely — EXCEPT when they disagree with the decisions of the administration. In other words, the farce of student government may play its meaningless games and dabble in its petty politics, but the final power lies with the administration.

Why should such an absurdity be perpetuated?

Ultimately authority is not Student government's.

Any worthwhile functions for which it may be responsible can stand independently or with supervision and support of the administration, the ultimate authority which supervises and supports regardless of the existence of student government.

Why, then, waste the time, the talent, and the money required by our "autonomous student government"?

The Di-Phi has raised its voice in opposition to this petty system. The upcoming elections will show the campus sentiment. If you, too, feel that student government cannot justify its own existence, I urge you—DON'T VOTE! And if you wish to see the present system continue —if you believe that there are benefits which could not be obtained equally well without student government, then, by all means — VOTE! And when the tally is in, it will be a direct indication of the opinion of the student body. If anything less than an overwhelming majority of the student body expresses its support of the present system, there is distinct need for a searching analysis of student government. If fewer than sixty percent of the students vote, there is occasion for a referendum of the entire student body on the question of the continued existence of our "autonomous student government."

SG Only Puppet

To the Editors,

Dean Carmichael came through.

Now are you convinced student government is a myth

The SG has not come near to closing the gap that exists between the points of view of the administration and the student.

If the student view is right don't you think the administration should be reasoned with? What is the virtue of vainly trying to go over their heads?

And if the administration is right, don't you think we should hear their reasons

How often do the politicians tell us, "I'll work to put more power in the hands of students rather than the administration."

For South Building is our enemy. The student politicians tell us so.

Just as the principal, — the headmaster, — the kindergarten teacher is our enemy. Stick together, kids.

I have heard some unfortunate but very average students speak of "the University" (presumably meaning its faculty and administration) as some sort of great enemy.

These average people either held the SG in contempt, or leave the solution of all the trouble up to them, identifying them with student interests.

But when does the average person support the SG or take interest? Maybe at voting time. Set the machine and go back to sleep.

As an opiate, the SG might well be tolerated by anyone in the administration who has delusions of autocracy. For the real power is behind the scenes, and only comes out when the SG winds up with the "wrong" decision.

Communication during my three years here has been poor. The administration doesn't get across what it's doing or why; neither does the so-called student government.

We're just here. We'll be gone soon.

God! Is that all there is to a university?

—Hubert Hawkins

Need For Student Union

To the Editors,

In 1931, 32 years ago, Graham Memorial Student Union was constructed. There were 3000 students enrolled at Carolina then. One-third of the proposed building was completed at that time and no facilities have been added to it. The enrollment has more than tripled since then and the Student Union is now only 1/9 the necessary size.

In 1938, Woollen Gymnasium was constructed for a school of 3000 students. Today there are 6,000 more students, yet there is no more seating capacity. Check your identification, the part your picture covers which says: "Due to restricted seating space in Woollen Gymnasium, admission to indoor events will be limited." While the bleachers are standing in Woollen, there is hardly any room for Physical Education activities and P. E. classes are held in a World War I supply depot which was bought from the government in 1922. We are all familiar with this "Tin Can" as are our fathers and our grandfathers because it was here when they were Carolina students.

Memorial Hall is the largest auditorium on campus. It has accommodations for 1840 of our more than 9600 students. If it had rained October 12, 1961, how many people would have seen President Kennedy during his brief speaking engagement as Carolina? And even though we saw him, how many of us could understand what he was saying? The accoustics aren't very good in Kenan Stadium, are they? . . . but we don't have a large auditorium. How many of us missed Farrante and Teicher; Peter, Paul, and Mary; the Kingston Trio; or Joan Baez because there was no room?

A university is no better than its faculty, yet teachers are lured into other vocations or even to other universities because they are offered better salaries. It is hard to be devoted and hungry at the same time.

Have you ever searched for a place to study in Louis Round Wilson Library? The Undergraduate Library and the Reserve Reading Room are very popular study spots, so popular in fact that there are often no seats available — no room to study in a university whose purpose is study.

At one time or another we've all wished for a larger, better, more complete Student Union; we've all wished we had been able to see the basketball game with Duke, but Woollen just couldn't hold us; I surely hated not seeing Joan Baez, but I simply didn't get in line soon enough to get a seat in Memorial Hall; we wish Dr. Doodlebug had stayed on at Carolina because he was a good professor, but who could blame his accepting the salary industry offered; and we've wanted to study but couldn't find a seat in the library, of all places. We've all wished and we all care, but do we care enough to do anything about it?

One group on campus cares enough to do something about it. This group is the State Affairs Committee whose purpose it is to create enthusiasm throughout the state and in the State Legislature for improvements on these bad conditions; improvements such as a new student uion, an addition to the present or a new gym, a new auditorium, better library facilities, and higher teachers' salaries — but they can't do it alone. Bill Hoyle, the chairman of this committee, is puzzled and he has a right to be. The work of writing to legislators, newspapers, parents and alumni throughout the state has fallen to a couple of dozen people, and it is practically impossible to create enthusiasm for University improvement when there is no evident enthusiasm on the campus. If the students don't care, why should anyone else care?

Two dozen concerned people cannot succeed in such a wide scale operation. Were you asked to help with the project and didn't? Would you be willing to help? Do you care about improving your Alma Mater This committee needs your help. How do you feel about this, Carolina? . . . DO YOU CARE?

—Barney Folger

Wrong Choice In Library?

To the Editors,

It was interesting to see in the recent publication "Library Notes" by Dr. Jerold Orne, that he proposes extending air conditioning facilities in our library.

The problem arises however, as to the best place for air condition units. In other words, where should they be placed in order to accommodate the most people for the longest amount of time per day?

Dr. Orne seems to think that the BA/SS division and Technical Processes rooms should receive top billing in this matter.

Granted the BA/SS division is the study ground for numerous future executives, but it is beyond me why Dr. Orne chose the Technical Processes room to likewise receive these expensive aids to more productive work.

That particular room employs about two dozen people, and is open only 8 hours a day.

It seems quite obvious that the second choice should have been instead the Humanities Division — an area open from 7:30 a.m. until 10:45 p.m.

Possiby Dr. Orne does not breeze through there too often during the spring and summer months. If, however, he should decide to journey through — as do countless students each day — he would find it an extremely sultry excursion.

Armistead Maupin, Jr.

The billboards and the bumper stickers declared it. A tuneless jingle on the radio blared forth with it two dozen times a day. And the candidate himself, in a series of televised "chats", drawled it out to a statewide audience.

"A New Day is Coming"

The prediction, we must admit, was accurate.

A new day did come. And 24 hours later, another one came. As a matter of fact, a recent investigation has revealed that almost 750 new days have dawned in North Carolina since Terry Sanford first packed up his carpetbag of glittering platitudes and set up shop in Raleigh. Several of these days stand out as milestones — days that North Carolinians everywhere will remember for a long time to come.

Like the day during Sanford's second primary campaign when he and Bobby Kennedy conferred secretly in a Raleigh motel. And the day Sanford flatly denied the Kennedy powwow. And the day Sanford reversed the denial with, " I thought you meant Jack, not Bobby."

And the day the Governor strutted off to the Democratic Convention leaving North Carolinians with the assurance that he would throw the state's electoral votes behind the winning candidate, whoever he might be.

And the day of the televised public education address when thousands of North Carolina school children were told to write a letter of support to the Governor.

And the days and days of empty bantering over the most profitable, the most ambiguous catchword of the 1960 election — Quality Education.

The Governor's most publicized stunt of recent months was launched (conveniently enough) in a speech before the North Carolina Press Institute.

"Reluctance to accept the Negro in employment is the greatest block to his continued progress . . ." Sanford said. "The time has come for Americans to give up unfair discriminations, and to give the Negro a full chance to earn a decent living for his family and to contribute to higher standards for himself and all men."

As usual, it was difficult to take the Governor seriously. The noble lament over the Negro's employment problems rang a little hollow coming from a man who, in doling out over a thousand salaried posts to his liberal cohorts, was unable to find a single position for a Negro.

* * *

The facts are disgustingly self-evident. Terry Sanford, having long ago lost the support of his state, has fastened his sights on one of the bureaucratic plums from Washington. What North Carolinians must now endure is a long and ritualistic affirmation of Sanford's loyalty to the New Frontier. The pious whimperings before the Press Institute were part of this. And, undeniably, there is more to come.

A minor incident last week might serve to illustrate: Ross Barnett of Mississippi had consented to address a group of law students in Raleigh. His plane and a plane bearing Sanford landed at the Raleigh-Durham airport within two or three minutes of each other. Sanford's plane was barely on the ground when Barnett's was making its approach. Yet, in a frantic attempt to avoid the Mississippi governor, Sanford left his limousine for Barnett, walked directly to the nearest patrol car, and headed for Raleigh.

The incident served only to show our governor's smallness. A code of common courtesy dictates that one chief executive should greet another on a visit. No one would have taken such a simple extension of hospitality as an endorsement of Governor Barnett's racial policies. Yet, Sanford, living in the morbid fear of somehow offending the Kennedys, acted as he did to safeguard the comfortable niche that awaits him in Washington.

If this statement seems unreasonable, wait till 1964. Then take another look.

Right And Generous Thing

Greensboro Daily News

Strange things have been happening recently in North Carolina.

Governor Sanford has inaugurated a nationally publicized Good Neighbor program supporting increased Negro employment. Now 22 state senators have signed a bill proposing that racial barriers be abolished in the N. C. National Guard.

Both these actions are important not so much because of their influence as because they indicate a new tone in North Carolina. Previously the politician cowed before the positive and constructive action in race relations. He feared political retribution of an aroused racist majority.

When the matter of acceptance of applications at the University of North Carolina on a non-discriminatory basis arose several years ago, the state's political hierarchy — from Governor on down — waited to have its hand forced by the courts. The politicians — and even the educators — thought that would spare them a measure of vulnerability, even if they failed to win a medal for courageously doing what they considered right. They preferred to hold back and respond, when the racists spoke up: "Our hands are clean; we only did what the courts forced us to do."

But today that mood has changed. Governor Sanford did not need to make his Good Neighbor speech at Chapel Hill or set up his Good Neighbor Councils. Nobody forced his hand.

State Sen. David Clark and 21 associates were not pushed into introducing the bill to abolish the "white only" requirement for membership in the National Guard. But they knew the stipulation was probably unconstitutional on its face. "Almost without exception the lawyers with whom I have talked," said Senator Clark, "feel that it is unconstitutional, in the light of recent federal court decisions."

Perhaps these 22 senators deserve no special credit for moving to repeal what the courts have already made null and void. But the very act of abolishing the racial requirement voluntarily bespeaks courage and grace. It also demonstrates a spirit of good will.

To do the right and gracious thing, even when compulsion is not overwhelming, is a mark of good sense and maturity. We are glad North Carolina is demonstrating this quality in more than one area of public life. It will generate a similar response on the other side.

Panama Interviews Still Open At Y

The deadline for returning applications for the Panama Exchange has been extended to Friday, March 29. Applications can be obtained in the YM-YWCA office and must be returned to that office by Friday.

Interviews will be held next week, and the exchange will begin in September. According to present plans, one UNC student will receive a scholarship for one regular smester and a Feb.-May "summer" session. He may also receive a travel grant.

The purpose of the Exchange the Y said, is to increase communication and understanding between the two countries and the two student communities. Because of an alarmingly small number of American students on the U. of Panama campus there is little exchange of ideas. Thus, aside from the obvious advantages afforded by the presence of a Panamanian student on this campus, the Exchange offers a UNC student a unique chance to increase international understanding.

The American student will also have an unusual opportunity to observe two cultures which are in constant contrast because of the U. S.-governed Canal Zone which cuts a swath ten miles wide across Panama. He will also be able to obtain first-hand knowledge about how the two governments are handling this potentially explosive situation.

Netters Roll Past Dartmouth Again, 8-1

Hoehn's Illness Forces Default

By DON KING

Carolina's talented tennis squad scored another decisive win over an outclassed Dartmouth team, 8-1, before a crowd of about 300 yesterday.

The only defeat was a default by No. 2 man Ted Hoehn who had to quit because of an upset stomach. The score was 3-all at the time.

On the No. 1 court George Sokol belted Doug Floren, 6-1, 6-1.

Charlie Shaffer got in early trouble with Doug Judah, and lost the first set, 2-6. But experience and competitiveness helped him win the last two sets, 6-4, and 6-3.

John Morrison lost his match with UNC's Bitsy Harrison, 6-4, and 6-3. O. H. Parrish had little man easily put Tucky Mays down, trouble with Ned Miller in winning, 6-0, 6-1, and Keith Stone 6-1, 6-2.

Coach Don Skakle praised his team for its hustle and improvement. "The team is shaping up real well; we'll be real sharp in three or four more matches. We are improving with each match; hitting the ball cleaner, making our shots sharper.

In the doubles the Tar Heels swept all three matches in straight sets. Parrish and Shaffer whipped Floren and Morrison, 6-3, 6-0. Stoneman and Harrison beat Smoyer and Mays, 6-2, 6-1. And Sokol and Kirby Jones took Judah and Marshall Wallach, 6-2, 6-2.

Dartmouth coach Red Hoehn, Ted Hoehn's father, said Carolina played even better than in the Saturday match.

Coach Hoehn made no excuses for his team's showing. "We played as well as could be expected," he said. But he pointed out that his team only started practice last Thursday.

"We play Navy at Annapolis next," Hoehn said. "They are a conference rival, and I'm sure we'll give them a fight.

"Then we play in the Cherry Blossom Festival in Washington with Michigan State, George Washington, and Georgetown. It should be fairly even though Georgetown will rate as the favorite.

Skakle doesn't expect too much trouble from Carolina's next opponent — M.I.T. — on Wednesday. "They usually come up with a couple of good men, but they lack depth. It'll be a good game, though," he added.

Skakle said he was somewhat concerned about Rollins, Michigan, and Miami. "But we're taking each match as it comes," he asserted.

The Tar Heels will play those three in consecutive matches beginning April 11 after a long home stand.

UNC Tennis Frosh Open Season Today

By BILLY HATFIELD

After three days of challenge matches, UNC's freshman tennis team opens its season at 2 p.m. today against Woodberry Forest at Chapel Hill. Varsity Coach Don Skakle reported that the lineup was still somewhat undecided due to the recent freshman eligibility ruling given academic sophomore Don Long. Long who had been working with the varsity until the end of last week is now rated eligible for freshman competition by ACC Commissioner Jim Weaver.

Coach Skakle has just recently found an able replacement for ex-freshman tennis coach Tom Crais. Al Hunt, a graduate student, will be working with the freshmen netters. Hunt has worked with the physical education department of Los Angeles Junior College and is termed by Skakle as a tennis veteran.

In the words of Skakle, this year's Frosh will be well balanced with not much difference between the number one and number six man. Skakle feels that Long should be a contender for the number one position, yet he also has seven "above average" boys that can be rated very close. They are Andy Goddard, Carl Evans, Jeff Ruday, Ken Oettinger, Allen Neeley, Neil Thomas, and Chip Sadow. Five of these, along with Long, should get the starting duties today against Woodbury Forest.

As for the general outlook of the team, Skakle said, "These boys have a lot of learning to do but the schedule we have will help develop this."

Skakle mentioned a still somewhat tentative schedule of 13-15 matches with Duke, State, Wake Forest, and Davidson probably the toughest teams to beat. Skakle also added that tennis is building in the Big Four schools and that Carolina's greatness in the past is to be challenged more each year. Finally Skakle felt his freshman team should go undefeated, yet with the lack of a big hitter like last year's freshman ace and now number five man on the varsity O. H. Parrish this could very well be an impossibility.

Needless to say, Skakle's calm, deliberate ,scholastic-minded policy of freshman tennis shall have an influence on this year's freshmen as it has in the past, which is evident with a look at this year's varsity.

Ithaca College's Bombers Play Tar Heel Nine Today

By ED DUPREE

Ithaca College's 1962 District 2 NCAA baseball champions will provide the competition for UNC's Tar Heels at 3 p.m. today in Emerson Stadium.

Coach James A. (Bucky) Freeman, the Bomber coach for 29 years, will miss the southern trip through North Carolina for the first time in seven years. Freeman has been hospitalized following a major operation on March 15.

Assistant Coach Ed Pesaresi will accompany the team on the Southern Exhibition trip. On the tour the Bombers also meet Pembroke State, East Carolina and Newport News Apprentice School this week.

Last year the Bombers ran up an impressive 18-2 record, rolling up 17 straight victories before losing two games in the NCAA playoffs at Omaha. The scheduled 1962 UNC-Ithaca game was rained out last spring.

The Bombers have 19 lettermen returning, but the pitching staff is a big question mark. Roger Freize, the ace moundsman last year with a 7-0 record and an earned run average of 1.36, is the only pitcher with varsity experience. Another hurler, Dick Lindamer was lost to the pitching staff because of an injury.

UNC started its season by splitting two games with Southern Illinois last week. Pitchers who saw action in the two weekend contests were Larry Jenkins, Joe White, Bill Haywood and Spencer Willard, but Coach Walt Rabb still has plenty of hurlers to call on.

Probable starters today are Andy Billesdon, Bobby Carter and Bill Danneman. Jenkins, who pitched well in his five innings Friday could start again.

The other starters for Carolina should be the same as last week. Bernie Isgett is the catcher, with either Bill Brown or Frank Gallagher at first. Dick Prindle, who collected three hits Saturday, is at second, with Jim Speight at short and Bill Taylor at third.

Outfielders Buddy Tilden in left, Gary Black in center and Heyward Hull in right round out the lineup. Ken Willard and Dave Pope could easily slip into starting spots.

Pope, co-captain of the team with Tilden, is one of the fastest men on the team. Willard has been bothered with an ankle sprain, but should be ready to go full speed soon.

Visiting Coach Treats Ruffinites To Magic Show

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

The big yellow sign on Ruffin dormitory read, "Second Annual Magic Show featuring the one, the only, Red Hoehn."

Hoehn, who is head tennis coach at Dartmouth, is quite a man with the card and rope tricks, it seems; and each year around this time, the boys at Ruffin are treated to some of the "magic."

Coach Red's young son Ted, who is a member of the Carolina tennis team, lives in Ruffin, and so it follows quite naturally that anytime Coach Red's team is in town, he usually winds up at Ruffin entertaining the fellows with some of the tricks that he has polished during the past 25 years.

Hoehn usually starts off with a couple of routine tricks such as tying a rope into several knots, clipping it to pieces, and tying it together again; then, saying the magic words, the rope comes out whole.

Hoehn hands out two decks of cards, one red and one black, to two different boys. He asks them each to pick out a certain card and place it back in the deck. Hoehn then "thinks about which cards the boys picked," mutters a few "magic words" and presto, the red card that the one boy picked appears in the black deck and the black card that the other boy picked winds up in the red deck. Magic, huh?

When asked if there were one trick he couldn't do, he said there was but that he was patiently working on it. He said he was still trying to figure out a way to make the entire UNC tennis team disappear before yesterday's rematch. But he didn't and Carolina won again.

Enrollment Might Climb To 10,000

By Mickey Blackwell

UNC's projected enrollment for next year is 9,918, but it may reach as high as 10,100, according to Charles Bernard, Director of Admissions.

"We are trying to keep within the budgeted figure Chancellor Aycock's figure of 9,918," Bernard said, "but if the usual number of students return again next year and if next year's freshman enrollment is as high as 1800, then I think we'll probably go over that figure."

Last year's freshman enrollment was 1708 and next year's projected enrollment is 1,850, but Bernard said, "We don't think the figure will reach that high. We are trying to keep the number down, selecting better in-state students and at the same time, keeping within the 15 per cent of out-of-state quota.

"We had hoped to keep next year's freshman enrollment as near as we could to this year's," Bernard said, "but it will be more and just might reach 1,800. We do plan to keep it between 1,700 and 1,800, though," he added.

Bernard said that UNC's enrollment had increased almost every year. "In the past five years," he said, "the enrollment at Chapel Hill has increased 2,556. That number alone is more than the total enrollment of 54 of the 62 institutions of higher learning in North Carolina."

Applicants Swamp Admissions Office

"We usually interview around 90 people a week," reported Mrs. Jack Seigler of the Admissions Office. "We have about 10 a day Monday through Thursday, usually around 20 on Friday and 30 or more on Saturday. In the past two weeks alone Mr. Bernard (Director of Admissions), Mr. French (Assistant Director) and Mrs. Folger (in charge of women's admissions) have interviewed close to 200 people."

The girls in the admissions office have been receiving 300 to 400 letters each day from high school seniors wanting to plan for an interview time. "We have appointments now that will carry us to at least the middle of April," Mrs. Seigler said.

"Even some high school juniors are coming by to talk with us," she continued, "but most of them are visiting from out of state, or drop in while on vacation."

She said that some people even come in the summer but that number was considerably less than the peak months of January and February, "when we were confronted with people out on semester breaks in high schools, junior colleges, women's schools, and other people just wanting to transfer . . . We book solid then, . . . we even had to work late on Saturday afternoons," she added.

TKE Organization Meeting Tonight; 15 Members Here

By VANCE BARRON

The nation's largest fraternity will begin colonization efforts at Carolina at an organizational meeting tonight. Mr. Snider Herrin, a representative of Tau Kappa Epsilon will meet with about 15 TEKE members at Carolina and all other interested students at 7:00 p.m. n Graham Memorial.

Mr. Herrin said yesterday that "our central office is very pleased to be able to colonize at UNC. We feel our representation on this campus will give us added prestige in the South." He invited all students with a 2.5 grade average who would be interested in forming a chapter to attend the meeting.

The colony that TEKE plans to form can affiliate with the national within a year if it has a membership as large as the "average membership of all fraternities on this campus," according to Herrin. The fraternity has received full permission from the University to begin a colony.

Mr. Herrin also said that the colony may have to live in a section of a dorm until housing arrangements can be made. "This would be only for a semester or so until we get organized. We might move out with other fraternities to the new Fraternity Row, or we might acquire the old house of a fraternity that is planning to move out there." The nucleus of the TEKE colony will be composed of TEKE members on this campus who have transferred from other schools.

TEKE was founded in 1899 at Illinois Wesleyan and is now the nation's largest fraternity, both in number of undergraduate members and in number of chapters. At the present time there are 12,000 members in 192 chapters. TEKE also qualifies as an international fraternity with chapters in Canada.

According to Herrin, the emphasis of TEKE is on scholarship and a "constructive" pledge program. TEKE last year had the "largest number of chapters that were first in scholarship on their respective campuses," he said. TEKE also was the first fraternity to outlaw the "pledge paddle" and hazing. Herrin said that TEKE emphasizes "content" in its pledge program. They often invite faculty members to speak on academic matters and current events. "While we are not a service organization," he commented, "we encourage participation in service projects by the

Shaffer Issues Statement On Sr. Class Presidency

There seems to have arisen in the past few years a movement to consider the possibility of abolishing class officers. People tend to ask, why should we have class officers and, what good can they do? I feel very strongly that it is easy to dismiss such criticism; for with initiative, ambition, and cooperation, class officers can perform a vital function on this campus.

This past year, the officers of the Jusior Class have sought to achieve a certain class unity; a unity that will distinctively delineate the Junior Class as an ambitious group of students. Our hands have not been tied by political affiliations, and our success merely dependent upon initiative and cooperation. A sale downtown, combo parties, a faculty variety show, establishment of the campus college bowl, continuation of the essay contest, and Junior-Class day are all examples of what class officers, with cooperation from fellow classmates, can do.

In working together on such projects, it has been our hope to unify the Junior Class. Perhaps, in view of various accomplishments, members of our class will even be able to say that they are proud to be a Junior. Certainly, it is hard to muster a love or devotion for a particular class, but in view of acquaintances one can make, goals one can achieve, and results one might see, perhaps students will be able to say that they are proud to be a member of a particular academic class.

It has been said that the best chance evil has of conquering mankind is for good men to do nothing; and surely, the best way to bring about the downfall of class offices is for good students to do nothing. There is a wealth of potential to be tapped within each class, and with the proper cooperation among classmates, interesting and enjoyable projects can be carried out, and class officers will achieve the vital status on this campus that they deserve.

In regard to my candidacy for the office of President of the Senior Class, I would like to express my hope that I will have the opportunity to serve the members of the rising Senior Class. I have been endorsed by both parties, and, if anything, I feel that this is an added responsibility that has been placed upon me to campaign actively in order to insure that I will represent members of the UP, the SP, and, above all, every member of the Senior Class, if I am elected.

I feel that a class office is not a "political" position, and therefore, the important thing to me is not which particular party I might represent or serve; the important thing is that I have the opportunity to represent and serve the rising Senior Class.

For UNC Grads

Job Opportunities Are Good

Job-hunting UNC students are finding that the employment picture is apple bright for degree-holders.

One UNC graduate professional school which aids its students in finding employment reports that its graduates have about 10 to 12 opportunities apiece to consider for jobs.

Other comments regarding employment of UNC students are just as shiny: "Notices for available jobs come in by the ton," said one enthusiastic U N C administrator; the job picture is "going very well" says another; while most concur that the demand for employees exceeds the supply of job-hunting students.

In addition to the University's Placement Service which handles job arrangements for the greatest number of students, the Schools of Journalism, Education, Library Science, and Social Work all take care of placing their graduates. The UNC Department of English also runs its own service to find positions for its graduate students, and the School of Law runs an informal clearing house type of service for its graduates.

The Placement Service has about 700 to 800 students registered plus about 300 alumni. Most of these students are graduates from the arts and sciences, business administration students, and graduate students in the arts and sciences.

$436 Average Monthly

Salaries for students obtaining jobs through this office in 1962 were an average of $436 monthly for A.B. or A.S. graduates and an average of $585 monthly for business school graduates.

Last year, 420 companies sent interviewers to the campus. They hailed from mainly east of the Mississippi River. On one day in the busy springtime of the year, as many as 150 individual interviews, scheduled by about five different companies, can be going on in the placement office.

Joe Galloway, director of the Placement Service, says that if some students cannot be placed through the service it is probably due to the students' lack of application to the task of looking for a job. He said, however, that these students are in the minority.

From the School of Journalism, Dean Norval Neil Luxon reports that the school's supply of job-hunting students runs short of the demand here in the state. The school does not run a formal type of placement service, yet it is usually always able to offer its students a choice of from three to five jobs.

About 70 per cent of the students who have graduated from the school have come from North Carolina and about 76 per cent of these graduates have gone to work in the state. The school gets inquiries from all over, but mainly from the Southeast, the Northeast and the Midwest.

The starting salaries for Journalism graduates averages out to about $79 per week which is "too low" according to Dean Luxon. He cited a survey made by the Newspaper Fund and supported by the Wall Street Journal which showed that the salaries for journalists in the South and Southeast were the lowest in the country.

The School of Social Work, which offers a two-year graduate program, brings the opportunities for jobs to the attention of its students.

"Notices for available jobs come in by the ton," said Dean Arthur E. Fink. There are about 10 jobs for every student who gets his degree, he said. Most of the students who come from the state like to accept jobs in the state, but the students wind up all over, according to Dean Fink. Salaries range from a beginner's $5,500 to $6,500 for someone with experience.

"The job market in social work has a demand which is greater than the supply and this is true throughout the United States," said Dean Fink, who pointed out that social work is expanding.

From California, New York, and Florida, and all over representatives from school systems come to the UNC School of Education looking for teachers.

Salaries for teachers run about $5,110-$5,200 per year offered by schools outside North Carolina as compared to $3,607.50 offered by North Carolina schools, according to Assoc. Prof. Neil Rosser who runs the service. Twenty-two per cent of the students went out of the state to accept jobs last year, according to Prof. Rosser, who added that it is mainly the men who take positions outside the state.

All undergraduates in the Education School are required to sign up with the school's placement service.

Demand For English Grads

The job picture for graduate students in the Department of English has been "going very well," says Albrecht Strauss, assistant professor who is in charge of the English Placement Service. "The demand is much greater than the supply," he said. Usually college and university teachers of English flood the market. Prof. Strauss says that they expect to find positions for all the some 30 to 40 students now seeking jobs for teaching on the college or university level. He said that the top salary reported thus far is $7,500 for a beginning instructor who is just getting his Ph.D. This is a very good starting salary, according to Prof. Strauss.

The School of Law receives inquiries from law firms in the state, from some firms outside the state, from government agencies, and from corporations wanting people with a legal background. There are some 80 to 90 members of the school's senior class and about 30 per cent of these already have positions for the coming year or are committed to military service.

Assoc. Prof. Dickson Phillips Jr., who handles the school's service, says that it is a tendency for the vast majority of graduates to go into private law practice. A heavy majority of graduates go to firms in the state. Prof. Phillips said that the demand is much better than it was 15 years ago in terms of students being placed in law firms.

The trend in salaries has been about $5,000 to $7,000 for a government position depending upon the individual's academic background and about a $400 to $500 per month starting salary for those going into private firms.

Organizations May Submit Finance Report

George Rosental, chairman of the Finance Committee Student Legislature reported yesterday that only 18 of the organizations which receive funds from Student Government have submitted fiscal reports for the current year as of Tuesday.

The following organizations have already turned in their reports: Audit Board; NSA; WRC; WAA, Graham Memorial; IDC; UNC Debate team Cosmopolitan Club; Carolina Quarterly; Daily Tar Heel; Yackety-Yack; Carolina Handbook; Publications Board; ISB; Carolina Forum UNC Glee Club; Victory Village Board of Aldermen and the Di-Phi.

Rosental noted that if the organizations which have yet to submit a report, do not send a representative to today's Finance Committee meeting (four o'clock in GM) they may not be included in the 1963-64 Student Government budget.

Mike Lawler: Academics & Athletics Divide His Time

Aside from what the average Carolina student learns from his numerous political posters spread out on the campus, how many actually know Michael H. Lawler, SP candidate for student body president, as a person. When April 2 arrives and it comes time to cast your ballot will you merely put a check beside the candidate who presents the best looking poster? Or will you want to know a little bit more?

A native of North Hollywood, Calif., Lawler attended Van Nuys High School. As a student there he was senior class representative to the Student Council and president of the Interdenominational Youth Club.

Judging from his 5'11" 150-pound frame (it decreases during campaigns) one would never suspect that the presidential candidate was once a Los Angeles championship backstroker, in addition to being captain of the varsity swimming team. In fact it was swimming which earned him a scholarship to Santa Barbara College and encouraged him to pursue his great interest in human affairs.

Leaving behind him the roaring surf of the Pacific and his active love for surf fishing along the beaches, Lawler journeyed to the University "to experience a different culture and way of life."

The young politician began early to make a place for himself at Carolina. A member of the freshman swimming team, Lawler went on to work in the Honor Council and the Student Legislature. Aside from being vice-president of the student body under Inman Allen this year, he is president-elect of the UN Model Assembly for 1964.

A Swimmer and a Teacher

In case anyone ever needs to find Lawler on Sunday afternoons he is always in Bowman Grey Swimming Pool teaching a swimming class which includes President William Friday's daughter.

Swimming and teaching have become integral parts of Lawler's life and it is in these two areas where he might settle.

Two years ago the young Californian spent his summer teaching mentally retarded problem children how to swim in a North Hollywood high school. And, although Mike would be modest in relating this incident himself, he taught a young girl who was stricken with polio in one arm to swim 25 yards.

Last summer Lawler stayed at Carolina taking courses and working with the Chapel Hill AAU swimming group. He was also president of the UNC summer school.

People, current affairs and teaching seem to be Lawler's greatest interests. He has seen a great deal of the country having visited Toronto, New York, Oregon, the Grand Bahamas, Ohio and Annapolis. Two years ago Lawler hitchhiked from Carolina to Long Beach, California (of course he managed to get a ride with a graduate student only a few miles outside of Chapel Hill).

Interest in Human Relations

Lawler has become greatly interested in the National Student Association (NSA) and traveled with Allen last summer to the national conference at Ohio State. At Columbus he met two students from Antioch College and the University of Texas who have interested him in an international exchange program.

As to what the future holds for the SP presidential candidate remains to be seen. Majoring in English, with a possible double major in religion, Lawler has definite ideas about graduate work for his MA and Ph.D. Carolina, Wisconsin, Florida and California were four colleges which he expressed interest in but he also showed a desire for teaching as soon as she graduates. There are even possibilities that he might pursue graduate work in the field of American studies.

Lawler's four years in North Carolina have almost persuaded him to remain here permanently. "There is no doubt that I miss the big city but North Carolina is a growing state and it is developing rapidly," he claimed. "Education is and will be one of the key issues in North Carolina."

What interests others seems to interest Mike Lawler. He is a person who realizes the importance of human relations and is curious enough to probe beneath the surface of things. And it does not seem strange that the individual who once waited tables at Harry's during the football weekends is the same one who is running for president of the student body.

Running with Lawler on the SP ticket on April 2 are Dick Ellis, vice-president; Bonnie Hoyle, secretary; and Dick Akers, treasurer.

Academic Freedom, For The Right Only?

The furious allegations of vicious irresponsibility and dastardly wrongdoing currently being hurled about in the wake of the dismissal of freshman tennis coach Tom Crais have only succeeded in sweeping the serious question of academic freedom under the rug of self-righteousness. That carpet, incidentally, may also be hiding a good bit of the dirt concerning UNC's athletic policies.

Despite Mr. Erickson's assertion that "academic freedom and right of criticism has never been an issue," it seems that his firing of Coach Crais for his expressions of critical opinions in the DTH is precisely a violation of the right to dissent. It is claimed that his opinions were "harmful" to the University and could not be "backed up." Are we therefore to conclude that the right of academic freedom is only enjoyed by those who are right?

Does the right to dissent mean that one can only speak his mind when he can prove the "rightness" of his opinions?

Because the dissenter is often a man alone, "proof" is difficult to obtain—even if it were necessary. The little boy who failed to see the Emperor's new garments should have "backed up" his point by making his fellow townspeople pinch the monarch themselves. But then the king would have screamed (having no fabric of sustance to protect him) and that would have made things unpleasant.

Sharp pinches and questions are indeed unpleasant and often harmful to those who think they have all the answers, but the strength of a university lies in its abiilty to tolerate such questions and in its willingness to aid the questioner in his search for an answer.

This University cannot promise answers, but it should offer protection for those who ask questions, however stupid, irresponsible, or harmful they may be. If the Athletic Department is a part of the University (and until Del Webb buys stock in the "educational" foundation, one assumes it is), it should not object to questions. It should meet questions with answers and not greet its critics with hatchets.

Until every segment of the University is willing to tolerate its critics, the right to speak out will be a perfunctory and meaningless rite, and "Carolina, priceless gem" may well be only a cheap piece of scratched glass.

—Henry Mayer

Some More Questions

A coach has been fired and his name is Tom Crais. He was fired after a critical letter, and, as Mr. Erickson said Monday, if this doesn't "involve academic freedom and the right of criticism," one is hard put to think of any violation of these rights.

But if this is the opinion of the administration of this school, if Tom Crais' job rests on proving his statements, sufficient evidence exists to justify his charges before any responsible committee investigating the status of athletics at UNC.

This is the pressing issue, and a much more thorough investigation is required than the solicitation of statements from the Chancellor and the Chairman of the Men's Council, however well informed these persons may be.

But while investigations are being made, there are other questions that should be asked.

Why are football players once again being housed together in a single wing of a single dorm?

Why were over 100 student tickets to the Duke basketball game at Duke sent back there without advertisement that these tickets were on sale here?

Why should students and their dates have to sit in the end zone in a stadium of over 40,000 capacity, and why weren't provisions made to seat these students before the end of the half?

Why wasn't the Duke football game scheduled when school was in session when the athletic director had, as he stated, seven years to work on it? ?

Why weren't provisions made to send the tennis team to the national championship last year when UNC had one of the best teams in the country?

Why isn't adequate equipment provided for the lacrosse team, and why aren't lacrosse and fencing made varsity sports when money is being spent for stadium improvements?

Why was there no adequate statement made by the athletic director in defense of two Carolina basketball players suspended two years ago after a fight at Duke?

Has an athletic director here ever made statements to a Daily Tar Heel Sports Editor that he would go with the team to Miami if he would "lay off" the Athletic Department and the Educational Fund?

Why was the Duke basketball game scheduled for semester break, and how much money did the University receive for so graciously arranging for the game to be televised?

This is a partial list of questions, but the answers are needed to these and others in order to determine the status of athletics at this school.

And this must be the ultimate question: are athletics here big or small time, and is a compromise possible between the two?

And finally, can any of these alternatives be realized with our present athletic director?

NSA Candidates Blast 'In Loco Parentis'

Pete Wales (UP)

The most important function of NSA to the students at this University is its role as information center for student governments all over the United States.

The Student Government Information Service and the National Commission of NSA send out pamphlets and information pertaining to all areas of student activity. This information is used as advice to student government committees and campus projects. The International Students Board, for example, in planning its symposium to take place this Saturday made extensive use of these services to obtain names of speakers and ideas for topics. On the Academic Affairs Committee this year, we have often used the publications of these services for ideas on our many projects.

Other NSA activities on campus include the Foreign Student Leader Program which sent Sang Woo Lee, a South Korean, to this campus for this year. A Conference on Human Relations to take place here in May which will be attended by representatives of schools as far away as Texas is under the sponsorship of NSA. Debates, such as the one this fall between Russell Kirk and Cary McWilliams Jr. on academic freedom, are also sponsored by NSA.

These and many other direct benefits to the students at Carolina are possible through NSA. When you elect the students to represent you at the National Student Congress, choose those candidates who are most involved and concerned with student government and the student activities that will be benefited by this experience.

John Ulfelder (UP)

The National Student Association has an important role to play in student government as the largest, representative body that protects the rights of students everywhere. It is the belief of NSA that students are in most cases capable of governing their own affairs; often this belief is not shared by administrative personnel — NSA tries to defend the rights of students in these cases. We have seen an example of this at the Carolina campus in the Beat Dook parade incident last fall. It is in this type of situation that NSA will strongly back the right of student government to handle their own affairs adn to correct their own mistakes. It must be understood that students can make mistakes, but no student government is really autonomous unless it has the right to make these mistakes and to seek solutions on their own. This is what NSA fights for.

Student autonomy is faced with the challenge of gaining independence from the doctrine of In Loco Parentis. By the terms of this antiquated doctrine, advocated by most colleges and universities, the administration takes over the position of your parents or guardian during your time at that school and may handle you accordingly. Actually this gives the administration almost unlimited power over your affairs. A truly autonomous student community cannot operate under these conditions. Thus, in most cases, the best policy would be to abolish this outmoded doctrine. Admittedly there are cases where this cannot be done completely, but most students would be better off if this policy were changed.

But if all this is to be done successfully, the students involved must fully realize their responsibility. No administration will sanction full student rights if the students fail to accept their responsibilities and live up to them. NSA, while fighting for student rights, also seeks to educate the students about their responsibilities in order that they can maintain these rights. A Carolina, NSA has played an important role in fighting for these student rights and in maintaining them. NSA must continue to play this role through its many and varied programs, while the students themselves must participate as much as possible.

Kellis Parker (SP)

In my visits to dormitories, sororities, fraternities, and through informal discussions, I have noticed a growing interest in NSA and its national congress. Students agree that issues confronting higher education and student life should be dealt with on a local, regional, and national level. I am in complete agreement with this feeling and would submit that NSA should continue to respond to these challenges in the following ways: first, NSA should continue its efforts to maintain academic freedom, academic responsibility, and student rights; second, attempts should be made to stimulate and improve democratic student government; finally, efforts should be made to promote international understanding and fellowship.

Academic Freedom: Inherent in the nature of the university is the concept of academic freedom, a concept which defines the necessity of the individual to move freely in a world of ideas. I am firmly convinced that it is the right and responsibility of every student to participate fully in independent inquiry and criticism. It is his right to question, criticize, and dissent from ideas with which he comes in contact, to hold and advocate his personal beliefs, free from all pressures which tend to restrict the student in his pursuit of knowledge. If a university respects academic freedom, it will not reprimand a student, professor, or coach for expressing personal opinion. The American Association of University Professors recognized academic freedom when it reported that "Removal of a faculty member can be justified only on the grounds established by evidence of unfitness to teach because of incompetence, lack of scholarly objectivity or integrity, serious misuse of the classroom or of academic prestige, gross personal misconduct or conscious participation in conspiracy against the government." The administration should make every effort to protect academic freedom.

In Loco Parentis: In opposition to academic freedom is the theory of in loco parentis, which establishes the university as the guardian of the moral, intellectual, and social activities of the student. A university, operating within the framework of in loco parentis, establishes restrictions on the operations of the student government, the student press, and other student organizations. You will agree that such a doctrine removes responsibility for personal decision-making from the individual student. I would suggest that faculties and administrations open universities to fully and more meaningful student participation in those university and community affairs which shape student life and development.

Student responsibility: The student's primary responsibility is to achieve academic excellence. This does not mean that the student should limit himself to his assigned classwork, for every student should attempt to increase his knowledge of the world around him. He should become familiar with the democratic process and support student government in a democratic manner. NSA provides for students the opportunity to gain a profound awareness of the role that we should play as citizens of the United States.

Neal Jackson (SP)

The great omniscient bosom of "Mother Administration" smiling on us in our governmental endeavors and chastising us for our mistakes is an image that disgusts me greatly. This image is called "in loco parentis" by legal minds and is translated "in place of parents" from the Latin. When a detached, often senile group of faculty members decide that the students are not capable to make their own decisions on matters that affect the student body directly, then I seriously doubt that we could continue to have an enlightened campus which would be a testing ground for the ideas learned in the classroom.

I am not saying that we should immediately do away with all faculty administration, however we must be realistic—how many faculty members know what our dorm and fraternity problems are, how many faculty members know what changes we want in our academic system, how many really know what we have the potential of doing? I assure you that there are very few that could know this as well as Student Government. Student Government will know the answers to these questions and will carry out the solutions to this problems provided it is allowed to.

The role of NSA should be to actively research the most effective ways to promote this student autonomy. This should be in the areas of efficient student government organization and student-faculty relationships to combat the possibility of inroads. NSA has done this in the past and should continue to do it on an even greater scale in the future.

What is even more important is that we continue to have effective communication to and from the congress. Without this, all the fine research of NSA would be a loss to us AND to the researchers at NSA. When electing delegates, we must be concerned with the desire of each one to carry out this communication. If there is no communication, then our money that was spent on sending the delegates is thrown to the wind.

Virginia Carnes (UP)

Because of the failure to achieve a democratic process on many campuses today and a subsequent antagonism between students, faculty, and administrators, NSA has done much study on the problems of In Loco Parentis.

The principles of Academic Freedom, emphasizing the right and responsibility of each student to participate in inquiry, criticism, and to hold personal beliefs against pressures that may restrict this right, are stressed.

The student should take the responsibilities necessary to become a vital part of an educational community, which will develop him "intellectually, spiritually, physically and socially." This environment may best be seen in an educational community in which faculty, administration, and students may function together, each assuming its proper role and rights.

In recent days UNC has been confronted by just such a problem in its conflict of administrative and student rights.

As a firm advocate for the maintainance of student rights, I feel that in order to achieve a responsible and successful student government the WRC (Women's Residence Council) must maintain its right to make and abolish rules, such as the apartment rule, regulations for residence closing hours and determination of what offenses should be tried by the Honor Council. It is only through student policy making, student investigation and student enforcement that the responsibilities and rights of the UNC students can be effected.

In order to sustain cooperation among students, faculty, and administration the Dean of Women should be allowed to express opinions, issue advice and seek understanding, but not administer a veto over the WRC.

With an understanding of the roles of those who learn and those who teach and administer, an awareness of mutual trust, a fulfillment of responsibility and an enjoyment of rights, UNC will fulfil its ultimate role as the ideal university.

Vance Barron (SP)

The NSA Congress in the past has been chiefly concerned with political issues, and perhaps rightly so, for the last few years have seen the rise of student protest movements against segregation, HUAC, capital punishment and other matters of political concern. This focus on political problems has been somewhat to the neglect of other issues that face the American student in higher education, issues that are felt on this campus.

In Loco Parentis is a concept adopted by many universities that the University should guide the "education" of the student in all its facets, acting "in the role of the parent." NSA was founded on the idea that responsible democratic and active self-goverment by students is an important part of the educational process. NSA has stood for the principle that the freedom of association among students is an integral part of academic freedom on any campus.

NSA can do much to strengthen student government on this campus and on other campuses. Incidents such as the one at Pfeiffer College, can and should be investigated by NSA so that recommendations and assistance can be offered to students who wish to re-establish responsible student government on campuses where the rights of students have been denied.

Perhaps the most important benefit that NSA can offer to this campus is the opportunity for students from this campus to meet with students from other universities to discuss new programs and new approaches to the common problems of students. Problems such as the integration of foreign students into the total life of the university, providing improved services to students while keeping the costs of education down, the improvement of curriculum and the establishment of strong student government are not unique to this campus. By investigating new approaches and by the exchange of ideas NSA can strengthen the concept of student government, providing such ideas are brought back to this campus.

I feel that NSA should discuss these problems, and I would promise to return to lend my efforts to implement them at Carolina.

Phil Baddour (SP)

The most important areas in which this year's National Student Congress will deal are those which directly relate to the student in his role within the student community. In a basic policy declaration, NSA has asserted that student government must be committed to the goals of higher education in order to justify its existence. This seemingly obvious truth seems to be over-looked many times at Carolina. Much too often we find ourselves caught up in the intricacies of running an organization while at the same time losing sight of any real objectives. At the National Student Congress, student governments from throughout the U. S. come together to examine, evaluate and define the purpose and role of student government. Delegates to the congress have a direct responsibility to return to their campus and to stimulate discussion and action in the areas which have been the concern of the Congress.

One of the topics which the Congress traditionally concerns itself is the doctrine of In Loco Parentis. NSA in the past has taken a stand against this archaic principle, and rightly so. The idea that the University is the paternal guardian over the activities of the student is often the University administration's rationalization for usurping the rights of an autonomous student government. At Carolina, an example of this can be seen in the stand which the Dean of Women has taken in regard to the WRC's action on the "apartment rule." In Loco Parentis seems to be in direct opposition to the idea of a self-governing student community.

Assuming that a student community maintains a certain level of autonomy, there can be no doubt that student groups must accept these rights and act with responsibility. However, there seems to be a misconception on the part of some that if a student group is lax in maintaining one of its responsibilities that the administration can step in, (eg. the censorship board set up after the "Beat Dook Parade") With this I must disagree. While University officials have a duty to call attention to areas of student failure, it would seem that they should have enough respect for the idea of student autonomy to allow the students to correct the problem themselves.

Students do have a right to take a stand in the areas which have been discussed. NSA is an excellent organ through which this is possible. NSA should formulate and define student feelings and beliefs in these areas and the delegate to the National Student Congress should be responsible to the communication of these ideas to their respective campus.

Inman Allen (UP)

The relationship between the National Student Association (NSA) and member-student governments is based on 3 assumptions. They are: (1) UNC student government can be helped in solving the issues and problems which confront it by using the services provided by the NSA, (2) UNC student government will benefit by a exchange of ideas with the other member colleges and universities, and (3) UNC will contribute to the leadership, policy-making, and services of NSA. It is with these three areas that I will explain my stand on the role of NSA and the Carolina student government.

This year, literature put out by the NSA has been used in a majority of the branches and agencies of student government. Problems in such areas as honor systems, academic affairs, and dorm social conditions are discussed in this literature, which has solutions that have been worked out by schools all over the United States, many of which were in a similar situation to Carolina is dealing with these situations.

Although extensive use of this service of NSA has taken place this year and in the past, there is almost inexhaustible room for expansion. At the National Student Congress, I hope to collect information to enable UNC to take full advantage of NSA's opportunities in student travel abroad, student exchange programs, student discount plans, and a multitude of other services to those attending college.

Both through NSA services and through an exchange of ideas with other students, such as at the Congress, valuable insight can be gained into the ways of dealing with issues which presently confront us as UNC students. Almost every school in this country has the problem of "In Loco Parentis." This simply means that when a minor is attending an educational institution away from home, the university administration acts as his parent.

When this idea is enforced, the administration must make innumerable rules and regulations governing the students' social life; for instance, the currently controversial "apartment rule." The practice makes no allowances for individuals; it assumes that all students have the same level of social maturity and responsibility.

NSA has taken the stand that students have a right to make their own rules, without coersion from the administration. To again use the example of the "apartment rule," the W. R. C. (Women's Residence Council) has the right to abolish this regulation, and establish whatever new rules it wishes, without being subject to the "veto" of the Dean of Women, or some other branch of the administration.

Such a belief does not deny that the university has the right to enforce the protection of its property, or to prevent students from physically endangering themselves. However, it is my belief that students must be credited with being mature enough to be free from the arbitrary social rules that the adminstration may seek to enforce.

Because NSA is an "association" of students, it cannot work unless the members actively participate in its functions. This year, I have worked and corresponded with the officers and students working in the Association. I feel that my experience in this will enable me to contribute substantially to the Congress this summer, and continue Carolina's tradition of being a national leader in NSA.

A Poem . . . On Being

A POEM
By John R. Tyndall
"The Ultimate Consequence of All Being".

Humanities, concede!
Yours is defeat;
For all life is nothing
But a chemical feat.

All research and knowledge
Leads to this find —
A line? There is none
Between body and mind.

They're one and inseparable
Bound to the laws
That Nature has set,
And each has a cause.

Babies and babies
Born every day,
Babies and babies:
Mere pieces of clay.

Hardly a difference
Between any two.
Examine them closely:
They're like me and you.

Our emotions of fear,
Joy. love, and hate:
All this determined
By functions of state.

Why is this so?
What are the facts?
Our knowledge is growing;
Look at the stacks.

We're just about quantized.
Ask any scientist.
He'll tell you the truth,
Unless he's a leftist.

For me and you.
Take up a cross,
And that'll make two.

Scream from the rooftops
That your god exists —
They'll tote you away:
"Forty-three per cent bliss!"

With a chuckle and grin,
I wave you goodbye.
They're hauling you off,
And I nod with a sigh:

"Poor, poor Romantic:
Born a little too late
In the twentieth century —
Goddammit! What fate!"

ISP Does Exist

To the Editors,

It has recently come to my attention that there is a general consensus of opinion on this campus that the Independent Student Party has ceased to exist. As chairman of this fledgling organization, I feel that I must refute this erroneous supposition.

In actuality the I. S. P. is far from extinction. Since our formation a short while ago, our membership has continued to grow until now we feel that we deserve the proper recognition due us.

As for the statements of Mr. Charles Cooper, I would suggest that before he again indulges in such blase, off-the-cuff remarks, he make a more complete study of the situation. The Independent Student Partry is by no means dead, nor is it dying. It is a growing political organization on the U. N. C. campus and we encourage all those concerned with responsible student government on this campus to join.

The colony will be called the Alpha Omicron Kappa colony of TEKE. "The name 'AOK' may sound a little corny," Herrin said, "but we hope that the colony will deserve the name." TEKE has no discrimination clauses and does not use the blackball system. Herrin pointed out that individuals were pledged not for "wealth, honor or rank, but for personal worth and character."

TEKE has chapters in 5 other schools in the state. They are at N.C. State, Belmont Abbey, Lenoir Rhyne, Western Carolina College and High Point College. Other chapters in the area are at the University of Maryland, George Washington University, the University of Virginia and the University of Florida.

Does a man really take unfair advantage of women when he uses Mennen Skin Bracer?
All depends on why he uses it.
Most men simply think Menthol-Iced Skin Bracer is the best after-shave lotion around. Because it cools rather than burns. Because it helps heal shaving nicks and scrapes. Because it helps prevent blemishes.
So who can blame them if Bracer's crisp, long-lasting aroma just happens to affect women so remarkably?
Of course, some men may use Mennen Skin Bracer because of this effect.
How intelligent!

Frosh Baseball Prospects Good

By LARRY TARLETON

Four outstanding pitchers and a great catching prospect give freshman baseball coach Bill Lovingood reason to be optimistic about the approaching season.

This is Lovingood's first season as a coach. He was a pitcher for Wake Forest during his college years and has been an instructor in the Physical Education department here since 1960.

Lovingood says the pitchers, right-handers Phil McLaughhin and Danny Walker and left-handers Beattie Leonard and Buddy Cohoon, are "as good as any we have had since I have been here."

The catching prospect is Gordon Weir from Tokyo. Gordon's father is stationed in Tokyo with the Air Force, and Gordon has learned some of his baseball from the Japanese. Lovingood is very enthusiastic over his catcher. He says, "Gordon is the best catching prospect that I have ever seen. He has a few minor faults but experience should correct them. His hitting ,speed and arm make him an outstanding pro prospect."

Lovingood terms his outfield as "a dependable freshman outfield." The outfield is anchored by centerfielder Ed Warren. His coach says that Warren is a fine defensive outfielder with good speed but he adds that Warren needs to improve his throwing. Billy Dean Davis, Hugh Sessoms and Bob Kaufman will probably battle for the other two outfield positions. Kaufman also plays first base and may open the season at this position.

His infield is causing Coach Lovingood due concern. First base will be in capable hands if Kaufman starts there, but the picture for the rest of the infield is cloudy. Lovingood is anxiously awaiting the end of spring football practice when first-baseman Bob Hume and third-baseman Gene Link can join the squad. Link was considered one of the best high school players in North Carolina last year.

Jon Baylin will open the season at shortstop. At second base Bruce Palmer and Danny Galves, captain of the freshman soccer team, are staging a battle for the starting nod. Bob Bonczek, whose brother was captain of the Duke team a few years ago, will probably start at third base. Coach Lovingood says, "Bonczek is exceptionally strong but he is not a polished fielder. We're hoping that he will develop into as good a ballplayer as his brother."

Chuck Lewis, Clyde Edgerton, Morehead Scholar Bill Taylor, Frankie Gibbs, Gene Williams and Lynn Kirkland are among the boys whom Coach Lovingood says will see plenty of action.

In giving an over-all estimation of his team, Coach Lovingood said, "We are strong at pitching, catching and in the outfield but we are weak in the infield and in hitting. We expect additional strength as soon as spring football practice is over and Jim Harrington, Bob Hume, Gene Link and several others join the team."

"I don't want to make any predictions, but this team is as strong as most freshman teams that I have seen. In three games against the varsity the boys have shown a tremendous desire to win, but we must remember that these boys are unproven ballplayers. I will be able to tell a little more about them after they get two or three games under their belt.'

Walsh Has Time For Law Studies And Basketball

By MAT FRIEDMAN

Donny Walsh would rather lose his sleep than stop playing basketball.

The former UNC cage star, who led the law school to the graduate division championship last week, makes it a habit of burning the midnight oil as a freshman law student here. But he still finds time during the season to play an intramural game each week and help coach the freshman basketball team.

"In some ways," he says, "I appreciate the opportunity to play more now than in my undergraduate days because of the relaxation it provides. But there's no time to keep in shape and it feels terrible. You think you're doing things the same way during a game, but realize you're doing them a second slower."

Donny devotes 8-10 hours a day to his law studies. He still loves basketball and is thinking of going into coaching after graduation.

His teammates enjoy the break just as much as he does. "I enjoy the exercise," says Poo Rochelle, who played high school ball at Kinston, "but you get badly out of shape. After a game, I'm sore for a week."

FEHL NAMED TO FACULTY

Phillip Fehl has been appointed an associate professor of art here and will assume duties in September. Prof. Joseph C. Sloane, Chairman of the Department of Art announced today.

Fehl is presently serving as an associate professor at the University of Nebraska, where he has been since 1954. He received his B.A. degree in 1947 and his M.A. degree the following year, at Stanford University.

Another Test Is Requested For Bryant

ATLANTA (UPI) — Georgia Attorney General Eugene Cook Tuesday "respectfully" requested Alabama coach Paul (Bear)Bryant to take a second lie detector test concerning a national magazine report that Bryant obtained football secrets from Wallace Butts.

Cook sent a telegram to Bryant who was quoted by the University of Alabama President, Dr. Frank Rose, as feeling another test would be of no value.

The attorney general, who is conducting one of several investigations into the magazine report, telephoned a similar request to attorneys for Butts who has filed a $10 million libel suit against the Saturday Evening Post which carried the story.

Butts' attorneys were reported considering Cook's request.

Both Bryant and Butts have undergone lie detector tests administered by independent operators and both indicated they were telling the truth when they denied they did not conspire to rig the 1962 Alabama-Georgia game. Alabama won 35-0.

"Dr. Rose stated to me that he had . . . concluded that in as much as you have taken an examination and said all you would have to say about the entire matter," Cook said in his telegram to Bryant.

"In view of this statement I respectfully request you to submit to a polygraph test administered by experienced and approved polygraph examiner or Maj. (Barney) Ragsdale either here or at your convenience in Tuscaloosa." Ragsdale is head of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation.

Appendectomy Sidelines Hoehn

Carolina's No. 2 tennis player, Ted Hoehn, underwent an appendectomy at 8 Monday night in Memorial Hospital.

He had to discontinue a match with Dartmouth's Doug Floren Monday afternoon with the score tied 3-3 in the first set. It was the only match Carolina lost.

Dr. R. B. Lindsay, Hoehn's physician, said he was doing as well as could be expected after a major operation.

Golfers Coast Past Davidson

North Carolina's golf team just missed a shutout victory over Davidson yesterday on Finley Golf Course. Coach Ed Kenney's Tar Heels defeated the Southern Conference team, 23½-½.

Seven UNC golfers blanked their opponents in the best ball scoring, 3-0. Skip Tucker gave up the half-point when he defeated Mackey McClelland, 2½-½.

Les Fleisher and Bill Stephenson tied for medalist honors with 72s. Tucker followed closely with a 73 on the par-72 course.

Les Fleisher defeated Bill Ross, 3-0, Mike Dore defeated Frank McPhillips, 3-0, and Harvey Hill defeated Nims Rogers, 3-0.

Also on the long end of 3-0 scores were Bill Stephenson in his victory over Tom Romoda, Ed Hoopes in a win over Dick Nickel, and Tommy Arnold, victor over Bob Bost.

The golfers toured the course in rain that forced cancellation of the baseball game with Ithaca and a freshman tennis match with Woodberry Forest.

The Tar Heels are now 2-1 pending the commissioner's decision on the match lost to South Carolina Saturday. A ruling in favor of Carolina would give the Carolina team a 3-0 record when it takes on its first ACC opponent next week.

Wake Forest will play host to the Tar Heels on April 2. In a three-team medal play match at the beginning of the season the Deacons out-pointed both Duke and UNC on the Winston-Salem course.

Playmakers Need 10 Men, 5 Women

Auditions for "The Cherry Orchard," The Carolina Playmakers last major production of the current season, will be held at 4:00 and 7:30 p.m. Monday, April 1, at the Playmaker Theatre.

Written by Anton Chekhov, Russia's greatest dramatist, director Russell Graves acclaimed "The Cherry Orchard" as "one of the greatest and most fascinating classics in modern theatre." Dr. Graves' latest directing assignments with the Playmakers were "The Great Diamond Robbery" and "The Beggar's Opera."

"The Cherry Orchard," translated from the Russian by Stark Young, has roles for 10 men and 5 women. They range from a teenage girl to aged character parts.

Scripts are available for advanced reading at 307 Bynum Hall and at the Reserve Room of the UNC library. "The Cherry Orchard" will be presented May 8-12 at the Playmakers Theatre.

Record, Cabe Lose In Kansas City

Coaches Elect Sam Barnes

Wrestling coach Sam Barnes took two of his UNC wrestlers to the NCAA championships last weekend. His men, Jerry Cabe and Gene Record, came back home with experience. Barnes came home with an honor.

Barnes, who doubles as an English professor, was named President-Elect of the Wrestling Coaches of America during the weekend in Kansas City. He will take office at next year's finals and preside during the 1964-65 season.

Fritz Knorr of Kansas State took over the office last week and will hold it until Barnes moves up.

Record and Cabe each lost to men who were later defeated by the eventual champs in their respective weight divisions.

Record, wrestling in the 177-pound division, drew Roberts of Syracuse in the first round and lost by a decision, 5-2. Roberts was later defeated by the eventual champ, Dean Lahr of Colorado.

Since Roberts didn't make it to the finals, Record was eliminated from further competition.

Cabe lost his first match to Larry Kristoff of Southern Illinois, the Small College NCAA champion and runner-up in the Pan-American trials. The SIU heavyweight pinned Cabe in 7 minutes, 14 seconds. When Kristoff went to the finals in the heavy division, Cabe qualified for the consolation round.

His second opponent was John Gillingwerth of Lehigh who defeated the Tar Heel footballer, 5-1.

Barnes said that his wrestlers met three real tough opponents, but added that "we learned a lot."

The Big Eight conference dominated the team standings. Oklahoma won the championship and Iowa State finished second.

CHOCOLATE BAR FORMULAS

Finding the best formula for chocolate bars may be the candy manufacturer's problem, but it is also a concern of statisticians.

Dr. J. N. Strivastava addressed the UNC Statistics Colloquium this week on "Confounding and Fractional Replications for Assymetrical Designs," helps biologists, industrialists and farmers reach the best formulas in their businesses.

The candy manufacturer, for example, knows he needs cocoa, sugar and other ingredients, but isn't sure how much or how long to bake them. Dr. Strivastava helps him arrive at the best recipe without trying every combination, a process which would be long and expensive.

A research associate in the UNC Statistics Department, he is a graduate of Lucknow University in India and received an award from the Indian Council of Agricultural Research for his work there.

Whitehead Wins Coed Basketball

Whitehead swept to the Women's Athletic Association basketball championship without a defeat this month in coed intramurals.

Behind the scoring of Judy Newton, Christie Early, and Barbara Parks, the Whitehead girls first destroyed their League II opponents and then whipped Spencer in the campus champ match, 32-27.

West Cobb gave Whitehead the "best" game in league play, but lost, 41-19. Pi Phi was strangled 69-4, and KD forfeited.

Spencer had had it easy winning in League I. The girls on the corner smothered Kappa Gamma, 52-9, beat Tri Delta, 21-11, and squeaked by the Nurses, 19-17.

Then Spencer won a 20-19 thriller over League III champ Alpha Gamma Delta. Whitehead got a bye into the finals and had too much for Spencer in winning, 32-27.

High scorers for Spencer in the championship game were Mary Lynn McCranie, 11, Margaret Shaw, 9, and Polly Osborn, 7. For Whitehead the leaders were Judy Newton, 12, Christie Early, 8, and Barbara Parks, 8.

Ithaca-UNC Are Rained Out Again

It's becoming tradition that when Ithaca's baseball team comes to town, rain also comes. For the second year in a row the Bombers and Tar Heels will not get to play their scheduled game. The New Yorkers play at Pembroke State this afternoon as they continue their Southern tour.

The Tar Heels have three more non-conference games scheduled this week. They play Yale Thursday, Colgate Friday and Virginia Tech Saturday, all at home.

Presidential Candidates Explain Platform, Views

The revitalization of the Di-Phi as an integral part of the legislative branch and the reorganization of the Student Government executive branch along cabinet lines were proposed yesterday by UP Presidential candidate Larry McDevitt as "necessary steps for the translation of student creativity into activity."

Under McDevitt's plan, committees and staffs will be grouped under the direction of five cabinet-level administrators who will coordinate activities in each field, strengthen weak committees, and give over-all leadership to programs underway.

"By centralizing responsibility in this way," McDevitt said, "it will be possible to eliminate some superfluous committees and to combine existing committees into more efficient working and planning units."

Under McDevitt's plan a Di-Phi Senate would be the legislative branch responsible for the discussion and consideration of "off-campus" issues. Di-Phi Senators would include delegates from all campus political interest groups as well as geographically elected members.

By restoring the Di-Phi Society to its rightful position as the campus forum, Student Government will greatly contribute to student awareness and understanding of major issues and will be a meaningful expression of student opinion," McDevitt said.

Yesterday McDevitt also expressed criticism of suggestions that Student Government concentrate upon the establishment of a Carolina Abroad program. "We're having our hands full with getting the University of North Carolina at Raleigh, much less the University of North Carolina at Rome.

"The influence of our foreign exchange scholarship programs is enriching, vital and welcome," McDevitt added, "and expansion of these international study programs is necessary. But the brunt of our efforts must be directed toward the securing of higher standards and broader educational benefits for the University at Chapel Hill. We should not export mediocrity," he concluded.

McDevitt commented further on the possibility of establishing experimental co-ed dorms. "These dorms have been successfully tried in colleges and universities across the country. Although coed dorms are subject to controls and regulations, they provide common social facilities, study rooms, and dining halls." Contrary to the opinion of the opposing party, McDevitt expressed confidence that "students will show this to be a perfectly feasible plan which is not the answer provided in an immediate "open room" policy.

Memorandum: from the Dean of Men's office: December 5, 1962: "Until further notice all public parades, displays and presentations (especially the "Beat Dook" Parade, Homecoming Weekend and Sigma Chi Derby) will be reviewed for approval prior to the event by an ADMINISTRATIVE-FACULTY committee . . . should an offensive presentation occur, this committee will make a recommendation to the Dean of Student Affairs for appropriate DISCIPLINARY ACTION."

Students shall be responsible for the ungentlemanly or irresponsible actions of their fellow students. This is one of the most basic principles of our student government. Administrative intervention in the "Beat Dook" parade, as only one example, sacrificed this principle to expediency. If such an essential principle continues to lose its vitality, neither political party will be able to implement the proposals contained in its platform. Consider the following actions: increased administrative action concerning "morals" cases without student consultation, the tone of discussions on the "inactivity rule," administrative policies such as three-man rooms, room repairs, fee increases and freshman dorms. This direct quote is from the duty-sheet given to resident advisers, who are urged to work with the IDC: "Refer serious problems beyond his competency to the OFFICE OF STUDENT AFFAIRS."

The past five years have seen an increasing number of "serious problems" become administrative problems. Our grant of autonomy presented once in 1875 by the president of the faculty was reinforced in 1910 when the Faculty Committee recommended: "all cases arising under the honor system be handled by the student council." This recommendation was approved by the Faculty without a dissenting vote.

In the recent past, and now, we see an indication of a misunderstanding of the nature of student self-government by some administrators, some faculty and some students. From this misunderstanding issues many of our separate problems. The challenge faces us now, and we must confront it with our vote in the coming election? The nature of student autonomy is not understood in terms of it being retracted if the grantor disagrees with our actions. Nor can it be retracted if we sometimes falter in the perfect implementation of our ideal. Next year's president will establish the direction of our tradition of self-determination. He must come to grips with this central issue of student autonomy. Yes, Freshman Orientation needs attention, so does the co-op investigation, the physical educational and recreational conditions in the dorms, the creative atmosphere of academics. BUT, unless the President of the Student Body meets the crisis of the maintenance of student autonomy with integrity, experience and strength, the candidates of 1965 will not be able to suggest such ideas as this year's candidates and party platforms propose. OUR AUTONOMY PRECEDES THESE PROPOSALS. OUR AUTONOMY IS THE MEANS TO THESE ENDS.

EDITOR'S DEBATE

Chris Farran, Harry Lloyd, Dave Ethridge and Garry Blanchard, editorial candidates for DTH, will meet in debate tonight 7:30 in 104 Howell Hall.

Blanchard and Ethridge, originators of the debate, stated that they viewed it "as simply a chance for candidates to express views of the office and to indicate the outlook and probable performance for next year."

Lloyd stated that he would "heartily accept the challenge of Mr. Blanchard and Mr. Ethridge. I think there are a number of things that should be brought out into the open, he said.

In answer to the challenge Farran said he would attend the meeting to state again his "past and continuing interest in a truly representative student newspaper."

The procedure for the debate as suggested by Lloyd is to allot 15 minutes to each candidate for an opening statement, followed by a period for each candidate to ask questions of his opponents in rebuttal. Questions from the floor will follow.

PE Hour To Get Credit

By DICK ROTH

Physical Education will count for quality point credit starting with the first summer session.

This was the decision of the Administrative Board of the General College of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Dean Sitterson, head of the board, announced yesterday that P.E. will count one hour course. A person making "A" will receive four quality points.

He said, there were two ways of handling physical education. "Some schools give no credit or grades for the course; others give hours, grades and quality points. We were in the middle. We gave hours and grades but no quality points."

The board decided to go toward the extreme that would be most helpful to the students here.

By making this decision, it is hoped that this will encourage participation in the physical education program. "We hope this will increase student's desires to finish in four semesters," Dean Sitterson said.

In the past, there have been students that have not completed their PE requirement until their senior year. They come for a few weeks and then dop out feeling that they can pick it up some other time, Sitterson said.

The Dean said the credit might help some people to pass but in most cases the help will hardly be significant."

Senior Class Gift Deleted From Next Year's Budget

Money Come From Entire Student Body

The Finance Committee of Student Legislature yesterday deleted an appropriation of $680 for a senior class gift to the University from the proposed Student Government budget for 1963-64.

The Committee tentatively approved appropriation requests for the Executive Secretary ($1200); Orientation Committee ($1970); typewriter maintenance fund ($250); IDC ($3,540.) and the Cosmopolitan Club ($180).

All requests approved by the Finance Committee are subject to the approval of SL before they can go into effect.

Committee chairman George Rosental reported that the reason the appropriation was stricken from the budget was that, "This gift is not really a gift from the senior class, but instead one from Student Government to the University for the benefit of the student body."

He added that, "He felt this gift to be of a dead-wood tradition and not a necessary appropriation for the whole student body to finance."

Rosental requested that the following organizations send representatives to next Tuesday's Finance Committee meeting at four o'clock in Gm: NSA, Audit Board; WRC, UNC Debate team and the treasurer of the student body.

Szulc Says U. S. Must Urge Cubans To Overthrow Castro

By RUDY WARD

Cuba will continue to frustrate us until we "convince the Cuban people that it is worthwhile to overthrow their government," Ted Szulc said Tuesday night in the seventh of a series of journalism lectures.

Our (the U. S.'s) policy problem is to persuade the people of Cuba that "we are tied to the people of Cuba" and are not intent on turning back the clock.

"The possibility of an uprising either from the bottom or at a high level can be ruled out."

Szulc of the Weshington Bureau of the New York Times. He has written two books and co-authored a third about Cuba, and won the Maria Moore Cabot Gold Medal for hemispheric reporting in 1959.

"The central fact concerning Cuba is that four years since Castro took over, Cuba is still with us in a Marxist-Leninist state. There is no reason to foresee a change in this in the immediate future."

The important thing for us, as a nation, is "to place Cuba in the proper perspective."

"The time has come to dissociate Cuba as a political guerrilla warfare against President Kennedy and treat it as a political problem."

Castro has an uncanny talent for surviving and for landing on his feet after a tussle. After four years, "Castro has not been dislodged," noted Szulc.

Indications are that Cuba, "in her present posture," is not a clear and present danger to the U. S. since the removal of the Soviet missiles.

Cuba is not likely to invade any other Latin American countries. The U. S. has made it clear what it will do should this occur. "Cuba is boxed-in in the Caribbean."

The "Cuban Crisis" was liquidated with the removal of the missiles. Cuba is now "very much a part of the U. S.-Soviet problem."

Szulc said that we have two major problems to contend with: the problem of subversion and, the necessity of making the Alliance for Progress work.

"Cuba is the headquarters for subversion and insurgency in Latin America, and subversion is a problem of people," he said. "Over 1000 youths are being trained annually in subversion. This has been going on since '60 under the Cuban Scholarship Program."

In Latin America, the Cuban guerrillas, not the Russians, are the experts on subversion and insurgency.

"The prevailing rule among Latin Americans," he continued, "is that guerillas should procure their equipment locally. There is no evidence of infiltration of Soviet arms from Cuba to other Latin American countries."

Szulc suggested that the key for us is the Alliance for Progress.

"Our problem is to make the Alliance for Progress a meaningful, workable arrangement which it hasn't been. The best and cheapest deterrent is to show the people of Latin America that the U. S. has something to offer."

The view in Washington is that it wouldn't be worthwhile to invade Cuba and "scoop six feet dirt off the top of the island." This would accomplish no desired end in the overall political configuration of the world. Blockade Cuba? This has been rejected because the starvation of a country "shouldn't be part of U. S. policy anywhere in the world."

From Church To Cabinet

By R. LEE FERRELL

Josh White played guitar on one of the first phonograph recordings made in America. That was 30 years ago.

Today his albums are universal hits. They sell in the millions each year.

When Josh was 14, a record scout offered him $100 to come to New York and make recordings. His mother made him promise to sing only spirituals, no blues. To his religious family blues were "sinful."

Josh began recording, and 16 spirituals later he ran out. So under the pseudonym "Pine Wood Tom," he recorded his first blues.

Church groups praised his religious songs, but the masses made him famous for his blues.

Many of Josh White's songs are products of his experiences. For example, President Franklin D. Roosevelt heard him on an album, became interested and invited him to sing at the White House. Josh made many return trips to sing for the President and Mrs. Roosevelt. From his friendship came what critics call one of his most touching songs, "The Man Who Couldn't Walk Around."

Josh studies almost every folk song he performs. In one of his studies he traced "St. James Infirmary" back to the British Isles in pre-American revolution days. For his research into the origin and development of folk songs, Fisk University gave him an honorary Doctor of folk lore degree.

Kemp Battle Nye, local merchant and friend of White since the late 30's, said, "We've sold thousands and thousands of Josh's albums since he started recording. We sold 5000 of 'Josh At Midnight' almost as soon as they came in the door." What about Josh as an artist?

"Josh is one of the finest artists I've ever known or heard," said Kemp. "He's got something that allows him to communicate with any audience. He always goes over 100 per cent."

As a person?

Kemp said, "He's got patience and understanding. He took time to talk with every person who had a question when he was here last year."

Josh White returns to UNC Friday, March 29 at 8:00 p.m. Tickets for the Memorial Hall concert are $1.60 at GM and Kemp's.

ECONOMICS CLUB

The Economics Club will hold its first meeting tonight at 7:30 p.m. in room 2, Carroll Hall. Dr. David Brown will address the club on "Is Success Spoiling American Labor Unions?" A short organizational meeting will follow.

PARA-PSYCHOLOGY GROUP

Tonight's scheduled meeting of the Para-Psychology Group has been cancelled. The next meeting will be Thursday, April 4.

Candidate Larry McDevitt; A Scholar And Leader

"In order to know a man you must get inside his skin and walk around for a while." Although this quotation was designed for 'To Kill a Mockingbird,' it might be appropriate in judging Larry Stephen McDevitt, UP candidate for student body president, before the polls open on April 2.

A resident of Asheville, McDevitt attended Chapel Hill high school his sophomore year while his mother was working on a National Merit Foundation Grant. He returned to the mountains to complete his final two years at Lee Edwards High School.

In addition to being a top ranking scholar, McDevitt was elected president of his high school student body and was a member of the student council. Athletically, he was an outstanding runner and basketball player.

Receiving a Morehead Scholarship from the University, the presidential candidate turned down acceptances at Duke and Davidson. He was the winner of a Duke scholarship, second in importance only to the Angier B. Duke award. "I have never regretted it," McDevitt said in regards to his choosing UNC.

Track and cross-country consumed most of his time freshman year but he quickly became active as a Student Government legislator.

As a member of the State Affairs Committee under Bill Harriss (past president of the student body and presently assistant dean of men), McDevitt was recommended to Governor Sanford by Harriss to organize The Torch of Education Marathon. Working closely with Sanford, the young politician was in charge of organizing 13 colleges and universities and two city colleges to work in support of the Bond Issue. Students started in western and eastern North Carolina and each carried a torch for one mile until the two groups converged in Raleigh. During the project McDevitt came in contact with the highway patrol, Sanford's press secretary and other top state officials. "It was one of the most worthwhile things which I have been active in," he said.

Presently McDevitt is co-chairman of the Junior Class Scholarship Committee, which is responsible for the teacher of the month and the reknown College Bowl series (McDevitt insists that all credit for the College Bowl should go to Woody Harrison). He has served on the Ways and Means Committee and is acting as presidential assistant to Inman Allen.

The summers hold quite a unique place in McDevitt's life. For the past several years he has worked in a boys' camp in Asheville. One summer he and a friend instructed boys from 7-11 "how to play." They worked with about 25 boys from the wealthier section of Asheville who were never really instructed how to hit a baseball or were never taken on a camping trip.

After attending Carolina summer school last year, McDevitt and another student set off around the country in an MG and only $150 apiece. For six weeks they played the Route 66 role and did everything from swimming in the Mississippi to seeing the World's Fair in Seattle. Along the way they stopped at Los Angeles, San Francisco, Yellowstone National Park, Lake Taboe, Los Vegas, the Grand Canyon, Denver and Nashville. Certainly the highlight of the trip for McDevitt was when he climbed Mount Whitney, the highest point in North America. And while most hiking enthusiasts take two days to scale this peak, McDevitt's one day feat attests to his love for the outdoors.

Larry McDevitt is a person who loves to meet people and it does not seem unusual that he was able to stop off and stay with people whom he had never seen before.

A member of Beta Theta Pi and an English major, McDevitt's immediate plans are to attend the Stanford Law School in Palto Alto, California. "Law provides a base for just about anything one might decide to go into," he said. "And Stanford offers the type of curriculum which I am looking for."

Editor Candidates Issue Views

Blanchard & Ethridge

DTH co-editor candidates Dave Ethridge and Gary Blanchard said yesterday they are glad that their opponents have accepted their challenge to debate.

"Properly conducted, this will be an excellent opportunity for the student body to appraise the competing DTH candidates and get a good idea of their views and probable performance if elected," they said in a statement.

The two juniors also said they "would like to set the record straight" about their determination to apply themselves fully to the production of a better Tar Heel if they are elected.

"One of the points we have repeatedly stressed in our talks and visits around the campus is that the Tar Heel should and can be a quality newspaper.

"This is goin to take time—lots of it. That's one of the reasons we're running as co-editors."

It's also one of the reasons why Ethridge intends to go to summer school this summer, they said, and why Blanchard says he's glad he'll only need 19 hours to graduate when he returns this fall.

"This after all is not something we just rushed into," they continued.

"In addition to providing for a sensible class load, Blanchard intends to sever his status as a regular contributor to the Charlotte Observer and the several area radio stations he has worked for this year.

"We hope this serves as an indication of the dedication we intend to bring to the Tar Heel if we are elected," they said.

"It is important to remember two things here:

(1) Both of us are asking for the privilege and responsibility of running the Tar Heel this coming year. That means that both of us are pledged to devote our full time and attention to it.

(2) We are convinced that this need not take from noon till midnight every day. If the Tar Heel once gets organized as it should be

Lloyd

"There is no reason why the Sunday Daily Tar Heel cannot be the best paper of the week," said Harry Lloyd, candidate for editor, in a statement yesterday.

"In the past, the Sunday edition has been weak because not enough work was put into it. It's hard to get a staff to work on Saturday, which is not a good "news day" anyway. But I think this situation can be remedied.

"What I want to do is to use more creative work," he said. "There should be a place for student fiction, poetry, and cartoons, and I think the Sunday DTH could be that place. The 'North Carolina Magazine' was killed because of a lack of responsibility, but I think there were some good ideas in it. The Sunday paper can be made into a highlight of the week."

Lloyd said he also has a proposal to solve the problem of assembling a capable staff. "I want to put that responsibility under one executive editor. This person would keep a record on new staff members and see that they have something to do. The main problem in keeping a capable staff right now is that new people aren't made to feel that they are necessary. The paper that can assemble a competent, hard-working staff will be successful.

"The proposals of a new Sunday edition and a staff reorganization should help me to achieve my first three objectives," Lloyd said. "They are concentration on campus news, emphasis on sports coverage, and a more interesting, more responsible editorial page.

"I have several ideas for the improvement of the editorial page," he said. "Those would only start out with a new makeup. I want locally drawn cartoons instead of snydicated ones. I will print letters that show value, as well as reviews of current books, movies, and other entertainment. There should be regular columnists, both on humorous and serious subjects.

"Most of all, I want to present an editorial column with thoughtful and thought - provoking commentary. The editor should not compromise hs ideals, but must

Farran

"I feel strongly that the Daily Tar Heel must become a truely representative student newspaper," Chris Farran, candidate for the editorship of the DTH, said yesterday.

"I think the Tar Heel can adapt a lively personality of its own only by mirroring the diversity of interests among UNC students," Farran said. "That includes all departments, all organizations, all sports and all political ideaologies."

"For instance, I'd like to institute a 'spotlight 'on interesting and worthwhile instructors and courses. I'd like to pick a campus, state, or national issue each week and have a campus conservative write his view of it and a campus liberal write his view of it.

"And the Tar Heel must answer pertinent questions about campus affairs: obviously we have not been told everything about the firing of tennis coach Tom Crais by UNC Athletic Director Chuck Erickson. Next fall dorm room rent will go up $10—why? And where will the money go? What is being done now with the tremendous profits made through the Book Exchange and why is the University unwilling to part with its monopoly on campus outlets? Student understanding of and interest in Student Government would be increased if the Tar Heel could run articles on the structure of Student Government, its financial set-up and the functions of its many committees, courts and boards.

"In sports," Farran said, "Carolina is experiencing an expansion that should be mirrored in sports coverage: lacrosse, wrestling, track, and fencing are a few. We can still increase reportage of soccer, tennis and swimming and at the same time find interesting 'sidelights' on baseball, basketball and football: the people involved (coaches as well as students), where they come from, where they hope to go from here.

"Most of all," Farran said, "the DTH must stress balance—on the edit page, in the news columns, and in the range of its coverage.

That Soft "Click"

The confusion which has followed the firing of the freshman tennis coach has done little but irritate old wounds and demonstrate the well known fact that you can't please everybody, even part of the time.

Had Mr. Erickson not fired ex-coach Crais, there, no doubt would have been innumerable alumni demanding to know why. They would have made, perhaps, "vicious" attacks upon an athletic director who sat back while one of his staff criticized the department. Erickson would have been obligated to do a great deal of explaining to pacify individuals who make a great deal of every university's athletic program possible.

The fact that the DTH or the student body felt that they were wrong would not have made things any more comfortable for Mr. Erickson. Let's face it, he answers first to the alumni, and he is not alone in having to do so.

The issue of academic freedom or the right to criticize is rapidly clouded over, when individuals who have harbored resentment for Erickson (or what they think Erickson represents) because of other incidents, quickly jump to points of contention in other sports or other mistakes.

What we have is a man caught in the middle. On one side he must face opposition which is extremely vocal and vitriolic, while on the other he encounters an opposition which, though more subtle, is vastly more influential.

Students throw words around . . . alumni, dollars.

So, although we must repeatedly and even heatedly maintain that Mr. Erickson was wrong to fire Crais because he fumbled, we must not overlook the fact that the "fans" watching Erickson are vastly more spirited, certainly more critical, and always more fickle.

An athletic director must, somehow, please supposed fans on both sides o fthe field. The fact that students may yell loudly cannot permit Erickson to ignore the other sides of the field. The fact that stu- soft but vital "click" of an opening-or-closing-purse. (CW)

A Money Club

A small group of resolute Economics majors has again set its sights on the establishment of an Economics Club, and we would urge any undergraduate student with more than a passing interest in the science of money to become a charter member.

Past efforts to form this club have succumbed to the peculiar apathy that haunts such noble intentions, and it would be a shame to see another discussion group falter without even being heard.

The organization will be established mainly for the interests and memberships of undergraduate students . . . not just undergraduate Economics majors. The doors are open to any interested person, and with a format of speakers and discussions such as the topic that will kick-off the first meeting ("Is success Spoiling American Labor Unions?"), we would suppose that acting president John Barrow should find Room 2, Carroll Hall filled this Thursday night.

YRC Leadership

North Carolina, like the rest of the South, is a traditional Democratic state. Like the rest of the South, however, it is moving steadily toward two-party status.

Republican presidential candidates have run stronger in North Carolina than in the rest of the South, and on the state level, the GOP has two U. S. Congressmen and an increasing number of state legislators.

As the Democrats have run the state, the Young Democrats Club traditionally has dominated the UNC campus. But this is no longer true.

In the past two years—more particularly this year—the Young Republicans Club has shown itself to be more energetic, hard-working and dynamic than their YDC foes.

Under President Bud Broome, the YRC has proven itself innovative and imaginative—qualities exemplary in political groups on this campus. Broome's progressive leadership has made the YRC the campus political organization (a sad admission for a confirmed Democrat).

This year the YRC has already brought one congressional candidate, two state legislators to speak on campus—with three U.S. congressmen and another state legislator due to come next month.

The Young Republicans have abandoned the restrictive mold of most political groups and entered into all phases of campus activity.

They sponsored an All Campus Leadership Award and a "New Frontier game" at the Campus Chest carnival. Due during the next month are a party in the Legion Hut, crowning of a Miss UNC-YRC and a party with WC girls.

The UNC chapter also has sponsored a film on "New Breed in the South" and activity within the state YRC.

In all, membership has grown under strong leadership, resulting in a top year for the Young Republicans. (JC)

Letters To The Editors

Erickson Controversy; Editor Candidates

Question Of Integrity?

To the Editors,

Policy is established ultimately by the people who have the power to make it. There has never yet been any one policy that has pleased everyone whom it has affected, nor has there ever been any person in a position of power who has enjoyed the unanimous support of those he was responsible for. Human nature simply doesn't work that way.

Because there is inbred within any such causal relationship, a certain degree of dissidence, then there is going to be a certain degree of vocal, overt criticism aimed at the policy and the person who made it. This happens all the time in American politics, and it happens all the time on this campus.

Two such instances occurred this past week with the challenging of the authority of the Dean of Women and the Director of Athletics. In both cases student indignation and self-righteousness were extraordinarily quick to precipitate . . . "How can they do this to us . . . we're supposed to have student autonomy and stand for what is morally right . . . that's what it says in the catalogue and the DTH anyway . . ."

But there is one problem that perhaps the students have overlooked in their barrage of vitriolic criticism. Granted they have the right to criticize, and they should exercise this right, it is imperative that this right be used with a considerable measure of intelligence and integrity if it is to be effective at all.

To a considerable and praiseworthy extent, concerned students have expressed their disagreements with Miss Carmichael with the maturity and responsibility that they are supposed to possess. Regardless of their personal feelings on the matter of the apartment rule, most people, students and administration alike, would agree that there is a legitimate reason for complaint and dissatisfaction.

But this isn't the case with the sudden, out-of-the-sky attack on Chuck Erickson, the Director of Athletics. He fired a tennis coach, and as a direct consequence all the petty grievances harbored by an oblique faction of campus Don Quixotes have come to the fore. "Charge," they shout, "fight on the side of G—d and goodness and save the world from evil men like Chuck Erickson!" This all sounds well and good; it probably sounded even better during the McCarthy reign of terror in the early 1950's.

If all the clever little phrases and smug references to godheads and green pastures are stripped bare from the accusation, what is the fundamental issue at stake? Does anyone really know? Probably not, at least the ones who are so eager to send Erickson to the chopping block.

Did it once, ever occur to the writer of that slanderous editorial in Sunday's DTH that perhaps Tom Crais was fired because he deserved to be? Did it ever occur that these charges on the lack of integrity by Erickson may be the very reason that Crais was dismissed? What if Erickson had written a letter to the DTH defiling the integrity of our honor system on the basis of unsupportable rumors? Wouldn't we expect, and justifiably so, that the administration ask for his resignation?

Quite possibly, and if is possible, Chuck Erickson is a black-hearted scoundrel only out for himself and his bankbook. Perhaps he really did fire Crais just because his policy of win at all costs was challenged. Perhaps Erickson is a man who lacks integrity.

But who knows? Who honestly knows? Does Tom Crais? Does the writer of the editorial? Does anybody on this campus?

In writing that attack on Erickson as Director of Athletics, its instigator is guilty of the most heinous crime that he was so eager to charge Erickson with—a lack of integrity. The writer has twisted a situation to use as a springboard for a despicable piece of muckraking, and as such it is one of the most contemptible pieces of journalism to ever appear in the Tar Heel.

If somebody has genuine, ascertainable proof that Chuck Erickson is not fulfilling his obligations to the University that he serves, then let that person come forward and speak. So far nobody has. Tom Crais apparently believes that there is something morally wrong, at least that's what he implied as a rumor. The student who penned that editorial also is a self-qualified expert at extracting fact from hearsay.

And this is the whole heart of the problem. Student leaders decry the absence of trust and co-operation on the part of the administration in their relationships with the student body. But how can we as students expect the administration to do anything else when we have students, running around, not in a comparable position of responsibility, tossing off unproven, slanderous charges. What can we expect?

—Louis Legum

Low Ebb In Hypocrisy

To the Editors,

The dismissal of Mr. Crais marks a low ebb in hypocrisy at Carolina. From a university that supposedly is liberal and open-minded and prides itself in encouraging freedom of thought, expression, and speech from students and faculty alike, this act was indeed quite surprising if not dismaying. Whether one agrees or disagrees with Mr. Crais' opinions is irrelevant; the question is whether Mr. Erickson was justified in infringing upon the right of an instructor to express his ideas because they were contrary to his own.

Mr. Crais' statement about "subterranean murmurs about grade changing and Honor Council concessions for athletes," was no reason for him to be fired. He merely reiterated what had been current gossip on campus at the time.

Perhaps Mr. Erickson sees it differently, but the criticism offered by Mr. Crais, I am sure, was intended to be entirely constructive. If Mr. Erickson disagreed with Mr. Crais, as he obviously did, he merely had to issue a statement to the Daily Tar Heel explaining his views . . . unless of course, he felt that there was a great deal of truth in Mr. Crais' arguments and felt that the only good dissenting faculty member is a fired faculty member.

Perhaps you would like to be chairman of the Dept. of History, Mr. Erickson, so you could fire those professors who teach that the South lost the Civil War?

—Kenneth Mann

Petition For Open Policy

To the Editors,

The Daily Tar Heel on 6 Feb 1963 announced that the Honor Council had convicted and suspended 6 students, acquitting a seventh, for cheating on the famous Archaeology final exam. Three days later, a front-page article released the information that there were three more trials pending from the same exam case. Then there was silence, apparently for lack of further information to the Tar Heel from the Honor Council. On March 9, the letter from Tom Crais appeared, quoting in part, "College coaching is a business or professional endeavor only in so far as it improves character and continues the learning process . . . May I remind us that the primary reason for the existence of amateur sports is, not winning, but learning and enjoyment . . ." A few days ago, the student body was informed through the Tar Heel that Mr. Crais was fired a few days after this letter was published, and that the statement from the department of Physical Education professed ignorance as to the source of the rumors of Honor Council favors to athletes, and continuing, that the department did not share Mr. Crais' views on athletics anyway.

Two questions arise: (A) Is firing a critic a legitimate way of dealing with a question which in fact brings the University athletic policy into question, as well as the dealings of the Honor Council? (B) When is the Honor Council and/or administration going to make public its up to now secret machinations as regards the remaining trials, and when is the student body going to become regularly and reliably informed as regards the actions of the Honor Council and the reasoning behind these actions?

In short, is the administration of, by and for students to be kept secret, even when the implications are of an order of justice to be taken completely on faith?

Where Is Carrier Current?

To the Editors,

Last year during the Spring Elections, I remember that the candidates of the Student Party (Dwight Wheless, Mike Lawler, Lindsay Raiford and Jim Weeks) used the fact that they were responsible for Carrier Current in their campaign. However this year I have noticed that they have said very little about it. Could the reason be that Carrier Current, as executed by the Student Party, was a flop?

Carrier Current could be a tremendous asset to our campus if it were well done. Let's hope the next time it is tried more money is appropriated and that better plans are made.

DTH Needs Organizing

To the Editors:

Incipiently, this letter is but one of those irate protestations over Daily Tar Heel policies and practices which make such frequent appearances on your editorial page. In my case, the straw which broke the camel's back was a simple omission. The "Duke's Men," a singing group from Yale, sang to a fortunate but sparse audience this past Sunday evening March 17. I would like to have been one of those fortunate few, but apparently the DTH does not consider that kind of event worth so much as a notice in the "Campus Briefs." Certainly, there was nothing in Sunday's edition about this group's appearance, and I cannot recall having observed any mention of them in any preceding issue. I discovered their purported appearance on Monday, March 18, gratis a sign in Lenoir Hall reading "tonight."

My sense of disappointment stems from the fact that, having attended Yale as an undergraduate, the opportunities to hear and enjoy both the "Duke's Men" and several comparable groups were ample. But this same disappointment, whether prompted by nostalgia or not, is merely indicative of a far larger disappointment where the DTH is concerned. I can find no better way to describe my impression of the present state of your paper than to say that it must suffer from crass disorganization.

If my understanding is correct, the "Duke's Men" (who have a first-class ensemble of both voices and personalities, in my opinion) were sponsored by Graham Memorial. Both the G.M. office and the DTH offices are in the same building. Surely communication is the problem here, but is it really so difficult under these circumstances? I would hesitate to venture other suggestions as to the source of your organizational shortcomings, and a comparison of this year's DTH to the Yale Daily News is certainly out of place.

But hope there is, in spite of all, if only on the horizon. At least one of the candidates for the editorship of the DTH holds promise of the kind of editor who would make your paper into a first-class daily, and I for one would suffer considerable despair were he and his running-mate not duly elected. I speak of Gary Blanchard and Dave Ethridge. Indeed, the marked difference between the organizational plans of these two hopefuls and your present performance is sufficient alone to prompt me to write. And I will only touch on the ideas—over and above organization—they have evinced, not only in conversation but in the varied accomplishments and abilities they bring to their task from past experience. Examples are myriad, but to cite a few: Gary's present positions with WCHL news and the Charlotte Observer, and recurrent offers from other news sources including a St. Petersburg, Florida paper and several radio stations around this state; and Dave's editorship of two West Virginia journals, and his work with the Louisville Times, not to mention the considerable sagacity relative to the proper handling of a newspaper which must have rubbed off on him from his father, Mark Ethridge, a noted journalist of national stature.

And the DTH? (I will forego further comment on your present condition and concentrate on the future.) What other candidate has advocated a viable "beat system" for reporting which regenerates itself — and the DTH — by training associate reporters in the process of going out and getting the news, while preparing the "official" reporters for work of a more responsible nature? What other candidate has stated that all editorials, not to mention announcements of campus events, would be prepared a minimum of twenty-four hours in advance, and preferably 72 hours in advance? What other candidate is acquainted with such journalists, around the state, as Ed Yoder of the Greensboro Daily News, and Roy Thompson of the Winston-Salem Journal and Sentinel; or nationally, such as Anthony Lewis of the New York Times and Ralph McGill of the Atlanta Constitution, and Mark Ethridge, and — well, I'm out of breath and the list is much longer. What other candidate is actively seeking advocates of, at least, both ideologically-oriented political points of view with an offer to give a column on the editorial page to the most cogent and rational exponent of each view? Or what other candidate has expressed his own concern in terms of trying to provide a ground for the meeting of these views through the vehicle of his own editorials? Has any other candidate thought about his responsibility as editor to the extent that before he raises a question or flings an accusation he will investigate the problem in depth, analyze it comparably, and write his opinion only after this consideration? And still have it prepared at least twenty-four hours in advance, so he can re-read the editorial in, perhaps, a less emotional state than when he wrote it? One final query. What other candidate so enjoys the job of reporting that he will organize the DTH to that degree where he will enable himself to indulge in this job — a pleasure for Gary Blanchard — however occasionally the opportunity arises?

To be sure, I speak of potential in Blanchard and Ethridge where the DTH is concerned, but upon what else can you depend when you vote for editor? For my reading purposes, they possess the greatest potential by a fair margin, not only with respect to correcting the present state of organizational disrepair into which the DTH has fallen, but with regard to making remarkable improvements as well.

Now, I spent two hours quizzing Gary Blanchard about all this, and you are to be commended for providing each of the candidates space in which to express their views. May I suggest that you could further assist the student-voter in reaching his own decision by advocating a debate among the candidates, to be sponsored by you, or the Carolina forum. It could be that you would do the University community a service in this, and even indirectly effectuate the announcement of such events as the appearance of the "Duke's Men", to the infinite delight of such old and nostalgic law students as myself.

—Frank Christian Gray

Give New York Correct View

To the Editors,

I suggest that during the N. Y. strike, some attempt should be made to distribute the DTH to those "educated idiots in New York"—about who Mr. Clyde Wilson is so concerned. This would help correct the impression in N. Y. that "white women of the South are seducing Negroes." By reading the DTH they could learn that it is not the white women, but the white men — of un-named fraternities — who are doing 'the seducing of Negroes.' At least, this would correct any erroneous impressions about Chapel Hill.

UNC's 'Racketeers' Bomb MIT, 9-0

By LOUIS LEGUM

The Carolina team did it again yesterday afternoon, not that anyone expected them to do otherwise. Coldly and calculatingly, they laid to rest a visiting Michigan State team, 9-0. It was the Tar Heels' third consecutive win of the season.

Except for the one and two doubles matches, Michigan State never really had a chance. Even though the Carolina line-up was without its number two player Ted Hoehn, recovering from an appendectomy operation, they played as well as in their two previous encounters with Dartmouth.

George Sokol set the pace for the afternoon by sliding past State's number one man, veteran Jack Damon, 6-4, 6-1. Damon gave Sokol a little trouble in the opening set in carrying it to ten games, but Sokol came back in the second set to put Damon in his place once and for all. As usual, it was just a matter of Sokol wearing down his opponent with his steady, pounding groundstrokes.

Charlie Shaffer and Bitsy Harrison, elevated to the two and three posts because of Hoehn's illness, seemed to respond well to the sudden promotion. Shaffer, the Tar Heel co-captain, found stiff going against Tom Wierman in the first set before pulling it out, 8-6. The second set was only a matter of Shaffer getting his big serve working with a measure of consistency as he breezed to a 6-3 score to wrap up the match.

In an exact reverse, Harrison started out as if he couldn't wait to get off the courts when he took the initial set from his opponent Dwight Shecton, 6-3, 8-6. However, Shecton decided to make things a little tougher before he bowed 8-6 to close out the match.

O. H. Parrish also successfully closed out Charles Wolff by an easy 6-3, 6-3 score.

Keith Stoneman at five remained as stingy as ever with a brusque 6-2, 6-1 triumph over Bill Bremer, 6-2, 6-1. Bremer, like all of Stoneman's victims so far, must have wondered whether he was even on the courts, the match went so fast.

The final Carolina singles victory went decisively to Pete Myers, who made his varsity debut with the win. Myers' consistency helped bring about the 6-2, 6-2 decision over Dave Click, and most definitely opened Myers' career on a happy note.

It was the unexpected in doubles. At one and two Carolina experienced much more difficulty than they anticipated. In a pair of three set matches, Shaffer and Parrish combined to beat Damon and Wierman, 6-4, 3-6, 6-3, and Stoneman and Harrison forged a come-from-behind victory over Shecton and Wolff, 1-6, 6-2, 6-1.

However, it was the "pit crew" team of Stan Cooke and Kirby Jones that captured the hearts of the crowd. Basking in their glories of yesteryear, the bench-warming Mudville duo took out their latent frustrations with a crushing, horrendously brutal slaughter over an unsuspecting and hapless team, Bremer and Click, 6-2, 6-1.

Coach Skakle was pleased with his team's success in handing State their second deefat in five decisions. He commented that the team was coming along pretty well. Skakle thought that Cocke and Jones played exceptionally good tennis.

Carolina's next match will be with Williams next Wednesday, April 3.

Baseballers Meet Yale Today At 3

North Carolina's baseball team goes after its second non-conference victory of the young season at 3 this afternoon in Emerson Stadium against Yale's Bulldogs.

The Ivy Leaguers defeated the Tar Heels last year by 9-6

Coach Walt Rabb's men have a 1-1 record, splitting a pair of games with Southern Illinois last week. Tuesday's game with Ithaca College of New York was rained out.

Following the Yale game, Carolina has two more non-conference games scheduled this week. Tomorrow Colgate comes to Chapel Hill and Saturday the Tar Heels play host to Virginia Tech.

The probably starting line-up for the Tar Heels is: Bernie Isgett, catching; Frank Gallagher or Bill Brown at first; Dick Prindle as second; Jim Speight, shortstop; Billy Taylor at third; and Buddy Tilden, Gary Black and Heyward Hull in the outfield.

Rabb will probably choose his starting pitcher from the trio of Bill Haywood, Larry Jenkins and Andy Billesdon. Billesdon is the only one of the three who hasn't seen any pitching action this season.

Lacrosse Club Opens Season

By MARTIN KRUMING

In what could be the year in which it gains varsity recognition, the UNC Lacrosse Club initiates its 1963 season this afternoon at 3 against Randolph-Macon on Navy Field.

Led by tri-captains Bob Kepner, Tom Thayer and Dick Vanderwerker, the squad is coached by Conrad Steele. In his first year with lacrosse, Steele is relying on the experienced players to take charge on the field while he serves as an administrator and organizer. When the season gets under way and Steele becomes more familiar with the game he will become an active coach.

The line-up for today's encounter will find Harvey Stanley in the goal and Duff Green, Bruce Green and Morriss Griffin at the defense. Steele rotates three midfields since these players do much of the running. The first two midfields are Jake Fuller, Vanderwerker and Jack Emory, and Ally Tyler, Ted Gans and Mickey Simmons.

Spearheading the attack will be Thyer, flanked by newcomers Bud Adams and Jeff Parker. Thayer, a sophomore from Asheville, tallied 10 goals in five games for the Tar Heels last season.

This year's squad is blessed with three outstanding freshmen from Baltimore, Md. Stanley has been termed a phenomenal goalie and a good stickhandler. Both Adams and Parker are good all around players with speed and stickhandling ability.

Carolina's midfield is overloaded this year and so Steele has installed the platoon system to keep a fresh unit in the game at all times.

After the Randolph-Macon game the club faces Duke twice, Washington and Lee and Amherst twice. "We certainly hope to improve on our 1-4 record of last year," said Thayer.

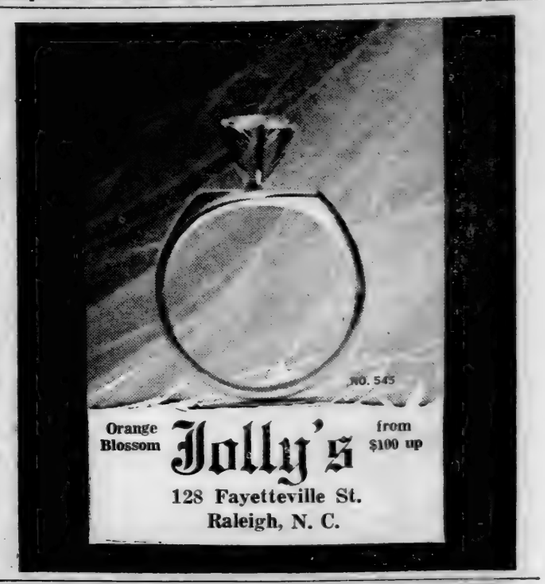
Regarding varsity recognition Steele has been informed that if the team has good support and the attendance at the games is encouraging, then it is very likely that it will be a varsity sport next year.

Lacrosse was a varsity sport at Carolina until 1956 when it became a club. Although Jim Tatum incorporated it into the football program, lacrosse never really caught on. But during the past few years there has been an influx of good lacrosse players from New England and Baltimore, and the interest is high.

Steele works with a nucleus of 45 players after having a first day turnout of 75. Assisting him is Les Sutorius, a UNC graduate who played on the 1956 lacrosse team.

Jane Engle Wins WAA Badminton

Miss Jane Engle of Spencer has won the Women's Athletic Association badminton tournament. She whipped Betty Johnson of Kenan, 11-5 and 11-7, last week.



On her way to the top spot, she first defeated Sandra Gardner of Nurses. Miss Johnson had to defeat Carolyn Powers of Alpha Gamma Delta to get into the finals.

ATO Defeats Law School

A last-second basket by Watts Carr Monday gave Alpha Omega a 62-60 victory over the Law School in an intramural basketball exhibition.

The contest between the campus champs and the graduate division champs was close all the way with neither team able to build up a substantial lead.

Balanced scoring featured the ATO attack. Pud Hassell led both teams with 19 points, followed by Roger Penland with 16, Sammy Simpson with 13 and Buff Moore with 12. Carr scored four points.

Two Quit Di-Phi After Vote To End Student Government

By CHUCK NEELY

Two Di-Phi representatives, including former President Arthur Hays, resigned Tuesday night in protest of the Society's passing a resolution advocating the abolition of student government for the second time. President Nat Dean refused to accept the resignations at that time.

The debate over the SG resolution far overshadowed consideration of the main resolution of the evening—"a resolution to discontinue nuclear weapons testing." This resolution passed the Society, by a vote of 8-4, and guests, by a vote of 16-7. Two votes were cast in protest of the resolution because it was felt that it was too vague.

A motion was introduced to reconsider last week's resolution concerning SG. It was voted to reconsider the resolution, and, after a heated debate, the resolution again was passed by the Society, by a vote of 7-6, with Dean casting the deciding vote.

It was maintained that by abolishing student government, the Di-Phi was defeating itself and all the other student organizations. Rep. Hays stated that he could not be part of an organization which had voted against all that he had worked for on this campus and all that he had ever believed in. He said that though he regretted his action, he felt compelled to resign.

What Is SG?

One of the main points of contention related to the question as to what student government is. One view was that student government consists of all the activities in which students are engaged. Supporters of the resolution however, felt that student government consists only of the three formal branches, executive, judicial, and legislative, and not the whole broad spectrum of student affairs.

Pleas were made by individual members for unity on the part of all members. It was argued that no issue could be so important as to occasion the resignation of two Society members. Rep. Hays maintained his position and re-iterated his view that the Society had "sounded its own death knell" in repassing the resolution to abolish Student Government.

Re-Establish Old Societies

Rep. Bullard suggested that the dissident members might wish to re-establish the original two Societies, the Dialectic Senate and the Philanthropic Assembly, and dissolve the Di-Phi. The proposal was rejected at the time because although it was generally felt to be a worthwhile goal to strive for, the Society, for all of its recent advances, was still not strong enough to split once again.

Before finally adjourning at 1:30 a.m., Rep. Les Bailey introduced a resolution reprimanding the University Party for stating in its platform that the Di-Phi should be made into an upper house of the student legislature. Rep. Bailey pointed out that the Di-Phi "is an independent student organization, automomous and completely separate from student politics." The resolution was accepted by acclamation.

POSTER PULLING

The chairmen of the two campus political parties yesterday urged students not to deface or to tear down campaign posters.

"Regardless of personal feeling this is deplorable conduct. Candidates go to considerable expense, to say nothing of time and trouble, to see that these posters are printed and displayed. They are making a sincere attempt to reach their constituents, and they deserve to have their material respected," Phil Baddour (SP) and Mike Chanin (UP) said yesterday.

Secretary Candidates Give Views And Request Votes

SARAH BROADHURST UP
Secretary

"The secretary of the student body is ultimately responsible for all correspondence, filing, and record keeping in Student Government," Sarah Broadhurst UP candidate for Secretary said yesterday. The other officers of the student government can make policy, directives, and correspond for the student body to every area connected with this University. However, the responsibility that any policy, directive, or correspondence be communicated revolves around the secretary and the secretariat.

To be qualified to do this job requires that the secretary be an able typist, a hard worker, and an organizer. It is necessary that the voters know how I am qualified to be secretary in these three areas:

The immense amount of correspondence requires a large amount of typing; I can type. This may seem like a minute point, but it is important to consider the skill of a person seeking the job of secretary of the student body.

In order to increase the efficiency of the secretariat, there are three basic systems which I would put into effect:

1) I will assign a secretary to each of the student body officers. There is a lot of paper work concerned with each of these offices and this plan would allow them to have more time to attend to many of the more important things concerning student government. In order to expedite interviews for appointments at the beginning of each year, I will establish an appointment-secretary to handle scheduling.

2) To increase the efficiency of distributing materials of the student government offices, I would put all supplies under the control of the secretary. This would allow for a system of giving out sup-

BONNIE HOYLE SP
Secretary

"As a new student at Carolina this fall, one of the things which impressed me most was the emphasis placed on student government," Bonie Hoyle, SP candidate for secretary, reported yesterday. "I have worked in student government this year as a member of the Elections Board and as secretary of the junior class, and I was not disappointed. I do feel that student government is an important part of Carolina life, and I would like very much to serve as its Secretary.

"While it is true that the secretary's main responsibility is organizing and directing the work of the secretariat, her job should entail much more than clerical work. I feel that the student government secretary is the most important representative of the women students. Through her their ideas and desires may be expressed to the executive and legislative branches of student government and to the University Administration. I would make a sincere effort to communicate with the women students and make their ideas known. I would like to draw more women into student government work, and the secretary is surely in a position to encourage such participation.

"I feel that the secretariat could be better organized. I would like to assign one girl, or two if needed, to work with each of the student government officers and committees. I feel this would eliminate confusion and enhance efficiency.

Secondly, I would like to reorganize and bring up to date the student government files. These files are most helpful to a new administration and are useful throughout the year to the various committee chairmen. If these files are set in good order they can be

Treasurer Hopefuls State Money Handling Capability

GERALD THORNTON UP
Treasurer

"The total anticipated income for student government next year is $165,415.92. This money belongs to you, the student body. It is your investment in student government, and you must decide who will be in charge of it." This was the statement Gerald Thornton, the UP candidate for treasurer, made yesterday.

He went on to say that he just could not make himself believe that anything such as policy should be the treasurer's primary concern.

"After all, what do you elect a treasurer for?" His job should be to take care of money, and Thornton said, "The most important thing to me will be $165,415.92! This is what you, the owners of this money, expect; and, you have a right to know where your money is, how it is being spent, and how it could be spent."

Thornton does not propose for the treasurer to spend his time working on campus projects; however, he does propose to keep a close controlled check on all student government spending. He also wants the student body to help him do this.

By publishing position statements all during the year, each student will be able to see exactly what student government is doing with his money. Then the student can sound off when he disapproves and give support when he approves.

Being an accounting major, Thornton envisions student government as the big business which it certainly is, with you, the student body, as stockholders. He feels that the main job of the treasurer is to represent your interest, and all his ideas point in this direction.

He believes that policy is important. It is an integral part of his plans, but Thornton's policy is concerned with only those things which give the individual students the financial information about student government which they rightly deserve.

DICK AKERS SP
Treasurer

"During this campaign, I have stressed and shall continue to stress what to me is an important point: the Treasurer of the Student Body must be more than simply a bookkeeper," Dick Akers, SP candidate for treasurer, said yesterday. The paying of bills, the drawing up of the budget, and the balancing of accounts are important and imperative for the job. Having taken courses in accounting and economics I feel qualified to perform these functions, but of primary importance is the making of sound policy and the exercise of fiscal responsibility. There are numerous examples which illustrate the fact that these two facets have not been considered in the recent past.

Two years ago Carrier Current was begun by a Student Party legislature. Briefly described, Carrier Current consisted of the playing of good music into the dorms on a closed circuit—no commercials, campus news three times a day. During the present UP administration Carrier Current was allowed to collapse because of a breakdown in some of the transmitters. With a bit of investigation, I have discovered that for $1226, Carrier Current could be instituted in every dormitory, sorority, fraternity, and apartment in Chapel Hill, as well as in Victory Village and Glen Lennox. With the present $40,000 general surplus and $10,000 unappropriated balance in Student Government, I feel that we can well afford to get Carrier Current going again in the way in which it was originally intended.

Another failure on the part of the present treasurer to exercise fiscal responsibility is that of a misuse of existing funds for the repair of dormitory TV sets and for the improvement of dormitory social rooms. There has been appropriated $1300 and $2000, re-

Senior Candidates Propose New Ideas

RICHARD BARRETT, UP
Vice President

It is my desire to talk to each junior to find out what you want our Senior class to be next year. Even though I have had previous experience with the student legislature, Judicial council, the class vice presidency, and various student committees, I am not running on past experience but with a purpose for our Senior class.

I would like to see a new meaning put into the words "Vice President" — a significant meaning. Many students feel that the role of vice president is that of a mere figurehead.

If elected to this office, I hope to extinguish this feeling and through hard work establish a functionable office. It is my feeling that the president should not be burdened with all the major duties of the Senior class without the support of his slate and his fellow classmates.

With an honest conscience, I really can't promise a flowery, idealistic platform, but I can promise several down-to-earth projects which would be specifically the job of the vice president. Besides social functions pertaining to the ENTIRE class, I would like to develop a project that will be of lasting value to each member of our class.

It is my idea to create a dynamic senior class magazine that would include every phase of our career as students at this university. This magazine would cover not only the major sporting, political, and social events of the past three years and future but would also emphasize many facets which have not been given adequate recognition in the past. These facets include the members of our class who have served well in dormitory organizations, on the class cabinets, on class committees, in minor sports, and those who have not received open credit for scholastic achievement. Just a few examples would be members of our class who have served as HDC representatives, those who have worked on

WOODY HARRISON, SP,
Vice President

My name is Woody Harrison and I am running for Vice President of the Senior Class. I am very interested in serving the class in this capacity and I will do a good job if I am elected. As treasurer of our class in the sophomore year, I never missed a cabinet meeting and I was active in presenting ideas and participating in projects. During that year I presented two financial statements in the Tar Heel so that all members of the class would know why we were $98 in the hole at the beginning and $43 to the good at the end of the year. This past year, as Vice President of the Junior Class, I have served as an overall committee chairman trying to keep all the committees functioning and mainly as the advisor to the Scholarship Committee, which has met an average of once every two weeks. On the committee we conducted a poll, contacting as many Juniors as possible, and from this poll we have given three Teacher of the Month awards and plan to give three more. We are now sponsoring an essay contest which, as yet, has had little response even though there is a monetary prize. Our major accomplishment is the beginning of the Junior class College Bowl. It has been a great success, especially with the participants. We now have more teams entered than there are Sundays left.

This may seem more like a report than a campaign, but I want you to know that the job of Vice-President is not a figurehead and that I have the experience, initiative, and interest to do a good job. If you elect me, I am not going to rest on what I have done, but work hard for the present.

I would like to see better communication among the members of the class and better participation in class sponsored activities and I will strive for this wholeheartedly if you elect me Vice President of the Senior Class.

Football Team Moved To Ehringhaus Dorm

Josh Playing Tonight With Playgirl Help

Playmate of July 1960, Teddi Smith, will be the special guest at the Josh White concert tonight in Memorial Hall. Miss Smith, currently a playmate at the Chicago Playboy Club, is appearing courtesy of the Hub.

She will give an award to the universally-known folksinger on behalf of Phi Mu Alpha, the sponsor of the concert. The award lauds White for his "outstanding work in folk music and his help on the James M. Barham Scholarship fund."

Tickets for tonight's concert are going fast, but there are still a few left, according to President Ron Friedman.

Tickets are $1.60 at Kemp's and GM for the 8 p.m. concert. Proceeds go to the James M. Barham Scholarship.

Josh White will be doing the songs that made him famous, plus new ones not yet released on his albums. White is noted for his distinctive guitar technique and sensuous voice.

He is a product of the South, born in Greenville, S. C. Many of his songs have come via his varied experiences. His musical career began early when he led such legendary street singers as Blind Lemon Jefferson from corner to corner.

Following the Phi Mu Alpha concert, the music fraternity will give a party in honor of White. Miss Smith has also been extended an invitation from Phi Mu Alpha members.

Pig Receives Wild Support In Lower Quad

By VANCE BARRON, JR.

A spontaneous demonstration for Griselda, the all-campus pig who is running for secretary of the student body, broke out in the Upper Quad Wednesday night about 12 p.m.

The rally gathered strength until two or three hundred students were present, all chanting "Griselda! Griselda!" According to Tony Mason, Griselda's campaign manager, this is how it happened:

"We had just finished making a campaign speech in Stacy. I couldn't take Griselda to the Nurses Dorm where we were scheduled to go next because she was too tired to walk—none of the other candidates would give her a ride.

"Well, I took Griselda and started walking near Mangum Dorm. I was having a little trouble with

Road Players Will Occupy Single Wing

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Varsity and freshman football players will be housed in Ehringhaus dormitory on a strictly experimental basis next fall, and the football squad training table as such will be abandoned according to head football Coach Jim Hickey and Dean of Men William Long.

"The main reason we are going to try this," Hickey said, "is to help save time and then too, we can have the boys together during football season. As it stands now, the boys have to sleep in the field house during football season, and sometimes there's as many as 12 boys in one room. It will be a lot easier on everyone if there are just two boys in each room."

Hickey said he wanted to have his team together during football season so he wouldn't have to hunt all over campus if he should have to call a spur of the moment meeting.

"If we want to have a meeting, the boys are right there together, and we can save a heck of a lot of time by just meeting there in the dorm," he said.

He said he planned to place his quarterbacks and centers in a certain suite and so on. "Then, when I want to meet with them, we can do it right there and not bother anyone else."

Hickey said he plans to house the "traveling team, composed of about 40 boys," close together. But the rest of the team will be placed throughout the dorm.

"We are not going to have a training table as such next year," Hickey said. "All the boys will eat breakfast in the Ehringhaus, or if they have late classes, at Lenoir Hall.

Hickey said that the evening meal would be the only time that the team would be separated. "We plan to convert a storage room in Ehringhaus to a room where the 40 members of the traveling squad can eat together at night. The rest of the varsity and the freshmen will eat in the regular dining room at Ehringhaus or Lenoir . . . The boys next year are going to have as much freedom as they ever had . . . and I think we're going to have the best situation we've had.

"Some people think we are trying to isolate the football team from the rest of the campus and not let them meet other people. What they don't realize is that many of the players seldom see each other and I think they should really get to know each other, especially during the football season," he said.

Dean of men William Long said that putting the players in a dorm together "will develop a sort of sprit that they very seldom get in any other way."

The plan will be in operation for the fall-semester-football season

Lawler And McDevitt: What's The Difference?

The difference between the two Presidential candidates has been spotlighted in the controversy over the Apartment Rule.

The Women's Residence Council eliminated the unpopular and outdated rule. The dean of women then claimed to have overruled the WRC action.

Clearly, this became a student-vs.-administration struggle — a case of student autonomy — a test of how much trust the administration and faculty really have in student government. In short, the rule controversy presented an excellent "issue" for the candidates — except for one important difficulty: it was impossible for the candidates to disagree. It was beyond the realm of possibility that either UP candidate Larry McDevitt, or SP candidate (and incumbent vice-president) Mike Lawler would not back up the WRC against "South Building."

So what happened?

Both candidates acted in the manner most characteristic of them. It was a crisis situation and they acted, it would seem probable, in the same vein and spirit as if they were President.

Larry McDevitt introduced a strong resolution in Legislature.

McDevitt's first impulse was political.

Lawler acted first in the broad best interests of the student body.

This is the difference between the candidates. They agree generally, on the goals of student government. They both want to protect the scope and responsibility of the WRC. They both favor abolition of the Apartment Rule.

The difference is in methodology, in personalities, and in priorities.

Lawler believes in creating a solid base for solid student actions, such as the WRC took. This base must be established over a long period of time — it must be carefully and maturely nurtured, and constantly reinforced. In the past year the vice-president has taken such action.

The difference is not black-and-white. McDevitt certainly recognizes the need for such careful action —but does not always take such action. He has the best interests of student government at heart, too— but his methodology and priorities do not always seem to work as well as Lawler's for the student's best interest.

Student government's problems are complex. Dealings with faculty, administration and other students must often be sensitive and always mature. In his actions in the Apartment Rule controversy, in not seeking to exploit it for political gain, Mike Lawler has again proven his sensitivity to this complexity and his maturity in dealing with the problems. UP Put In Place, By Acclamation

Last year the UP platform promised the appointment of several "presidential advisors" who would handle certain vital areas of student government concern. One of the proposed appointees was referred to as follows: "A national and international affairs advisor who would coordinate and expand the existing programs in this area: he would examine and make recommendations for revitalizing the Di-Phi Debating Society. . . ."

This year's UP platform expresses a similar interest in the "revitalization" of the Di-Phi, reading: "The establishment of an additional legislative branch of Student Government. The Di-Phi would be used as a vehicle for the expression of student opinions through representatives from political organizations (YDC, YRC, etc.). Membership would possibly be extended on a geographic basis."

* * *

The confident manner in which the UP has so graciously assumed the role of safiour in its hytothetical relationship with the Di-Phi has prompted a small amount of gratitude and a great amount of laughter. We can but nod vigorously in agreement with the members of the Di Phi, who recently passed the following resolution by acclamation:

"A Resolution to Enlighten The University Party Concerning the Autonomy of The Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Society:

"Whereas, the older and original student organizations at the University of North Carolina are the Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies founded in 1795; and Whereas the Di-Phi initiated and has long fostered the growth and development of responsible student self-government; and Whereas the membership of the Di-Phi is absolutely voluntary, open, autonomous, and free from any group (especially the histor of the University and Whereas the recent UP platform indicates that the UP is deluded in thinking that it can usurp the Di-Phi for its "pet" of an additional legislative branch. . . .

"Be it resolved by the Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Society that: the UP should read thoroughily te istory of the University and student government, in order to correct its delusion of control over the Di-Phi; and that the Di-Phi remain open to all students of the University, yet free from control or use by any particular group; and that this resolution demand a public retraction by the UP of its pretentious designs on the Di-Phi."

As we said, it passed by acclamation. (CW)

NSA Candidates

Opinions On HUAC, Civil Liberties

(Eds. Note: Vance Barron (SP) did not turn in a statement).

JOHN ULFELDER (UP)

Up to this point in the campaign, all the NSA candidates have been primarily concerned with explaining NSA's role in relations to the campus and to students in general. In many ways, this time is well spent and often produces concrete results. But rather than flog this point to death, I will move directly into some of the national and international issues that the Congress also considers. Let me first point out that these issues are just as important as any others considered at the Congress.

Civil liberties is a term used for a wide area of diffeernt problems; but in the South it primarily refers to the desegregation issue. NSA has long been a supporter of desegregation and a large number of Resolutions concerning this issue are brought up at the Congress every summer. The preamble to the NSA Constitution states, ". . . to guarantee to all people, because of their inherent dignity as indivduals, equal rights and possibilities for primary, secondary, and higher education regardless of sex, race, religion, political belief or economic circumstances;". This quote from the Preamble states very well where NSA stands in regards to civil liberties. I too am in favor of desegregation, but I believe that there are problems in the South that are not completely understood by the Northern members of NSA. Carolina plays an important role at the Congress as a representative of the Southern view in this area. Other issues found under civil liberties are the McCarren Act and the House Un-American Activities Committee. NSA has come out strongly against both of these issues, they seem to limit our freedom of expression as guaranteed in the Constitution. I agree with this stand, and see more harm than good being performed by HUAC or the McCarren Act.

There are other issues that appear at the Congress, but I cannot hope to cover them all in this short article. What I would like to say in closing is that NSA plays a very real part in the student realm, whether seen or unseen. Many of the opinions that NSA expresses are not the opinions of all its members; but the important thing is that these opinions are expressed and can be changed.

KELLIS PARKER (SP)

In my previous statements I have attempted to present the role of NSA as it relates directly to UNC. Accordingly, I have advocated a four-point program that includes a re-evaluation of the role of student government, a re-newed emphasis on education, investigation of ways and means of assimilating international students into normal campus life, and increased efforts to share conference experiences with students.

Students also have a legitimate right to be concerned about the world around them, to ask questions, to take stands. NSA attempts to do this by discussing national and international issues that affect us as students, as Americans, and as human beings.

The House Committee on Un-American Activities has been directed to "investigate the extent, character and objects of Un-American propaganda activities in the United States." In Watkins vs. the United States Chief Justice Earl Warren stated: "Who can define the meaning of Un-American? What is that single solitary principle of the form of government as guaranteed by our Constitution?" I am in complete agreement with Chief Justice Warren, but I think that HUAC poses a more serious threat to democracy. The very creation of the commission is inconsistent with the Constitutional guarantees that "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech . . ."

I am firmly convinced that HUAC should be abolished; however I recommend that Congress investigate acts of espionage, sabotage, and conspiracies to overthrow the Government of the United States through Judiciary committees of the House and Senate respectively. NSA supported this stand at its last annual Congress.

USNSA has reaffirmed its belief in principles of the students in the total community which states that "the role of students extends beyond the classroom." As students we are concerned about social and economic in equality. We detest the discriminatory practices of many Americans who refuse to allow the principle expressed in the Constitution to become reality. We should proceed towards the destruction of all discrimination and segregation "with all deliberate speed."

The life of students is centered around challenges and responses. Challenges to the democratic process are a direct concern to students regardless of political affiliation. A positive response to these challenges can only be taken if we meet them in a responsible and unbiased manner.

INMAN ALLEN (UP)

It would be futile to attempt to explain my opinion on the many political issues which have confronted the National Student Congress in the past, and which are now dead issues or policy resolutions. Instead, I will deal with my stand on the questions which, from my past experience at the Congress, I expect to arise this year.

NSA has taken many stands concerning the rights and struggles of students in other countries and in the international student community. Undoubtedly, specific cases of this will come up this year, and I will stand in support of the concept of international student solidarity. I would oppose efforts of foreign countries to suppress student opinion. I would support the African students who recently left communist universities where they were being discriminated against.

A resolution urging the repeal of the McCarren Act will be the central legislation in the field of civil liberties this year. Although I am in some agreement with last year's resolution which expressed concern about some features of the Act. I am not in favor of its total repeal.

There is a possibility of a resolution coming up concerning the right of fraternities to have racially discriminatory clauses in their charters. Although I oppose discrimination solely on this basis, I feel that fraternities, as autonomous student organizations, have the right to determine their own membership without pressure from ANY outside source.

VIRGINIA CARNES (UP)

In Indiana this summer the NSA Congress, through discussions and seminars, will seek an understanding of the many problems that plague the United States and the world today.

The past years have seen a world threatened by nuclear war and an accelerated arms race. NSA Congress will examine this threat, and the issues precipitating it.

The issues of disarmament and nuclear testing have been discussed and evaluated. NSA has encouraged its member schools to distribute information on these subjects and to form discussion groups in which students, after investigating all facets of the problem, may express their views.

The Cold War has brought forth much discussion. NSA has noted that a military emphasis has been put into education and supplemented by federal funds. Also a feeling has been expressed that there remains a restriction of information which is detrimental to the academic community of free expression. NSA urges a broadening of the scope of education through exchange programs and area studies, studies concerning the crucial problems of economic and social development of underdeveloped countries, and an interest in a UN University which would bring students from around the world together to discuss a program for increased international understanding.

NSA has also sought an insight into national problems facing the US today. Seminars concerning Civil Liberties; the McCarran Act, which demands a membership list of any group which the Attorney General or Subversive Activities Control Board deems subversive; HUAC committee of the House of Representatives, which investigates groups that it feels are infiltrated by Communists, will be held at the Congress.

Also discussions of Civil Rights, the present developments of the Supreme Court decisions on desegregation, the federal goverument role in Civil Rights concerning housing, employment, voting rights, etc. It is hoped that the delegates of NSA Congress may gain an understanding into the viewpoints of North and South in the problems of Civil Rights.

NSA has felt an increasing concern for national and international problems. I feel that a understanding and an awareness of these problems is important, but the emphasis should be placed on the problems facing American education today—the problems of efficient student government, the maintenance of student rights, and a better cooperation among students, faculty and administration. With an increasing realization of the responsibilities facing students today and a knowledge that, with this realization, the student may strive for the solutions to these problems and a more perfect educational experience.

NEAL JACKSON (SP)

The 1950 Internal Security Act (The McCarran Act) is an attempt to maintain the form of government that has protected our belief in free speech and thought. However, the Act in itself is a major block in the propagation of these freedoms. There exists a necessity to protect ourselves from violent actions against our country, but should we approach it from an angle that suppresses the freedom in our already free state?I think not. The McCarran Act deserves reform yet direct abolition should not be the direct result of this reform movement unless there is no other way to protect ourselves.

Much the same condition exists with the House Un-American Activities Committee. Its purpose is perhaps necessary, that purpose being to investigate methods to protect our national security. But, the Committee has taken its delegated powers and thwarted them into a "witch hunt" organization. In addition, HUAC has brought very little legislation to the floor of Congress, even though it has one of the largest appropriations of the House Committees. Again, if there can be no reasonable reform of this cancerous growth, then excision might very well be in order.

This being the last statement of the NSA candidates, I would like to reiterate an important factor that I feel should enter into a voter's decision in selecting NSA delegates. You, the students, are spending $340 to send these delegates to the congress. You should expect some degree of return on your investment. Representing this university is indeed important, but just as important is one's interest and ability to RETURN and disseminate the material learned in the workshops of the Congress. Individuals who will not be here next year obviously cannot do this. I suggest that you, the voters, investigate whether or not certain candidates are in a position to do this. To send a delegate who is expecting a paid vacation is rather ridiculous, isn't it??

PETE WALES (UP)

Aside from its activities concerning student governments, NSA meets to gather student opinion from all over the country about national and international affairs affecting students of this and other countries.

NSA is the most vocal and the most powerful student organization in this country for this purpose. NSA is formally affiliated with the American Council on Education, the World University Service and the American Committee for the United Nations to name only a few. In addition the NSA Congress is subject to numerous other pressure groups on both sides of the political fence. Thus NSA is forced by its involvement and its prestige to think and act responsibly when voting to take a position on this or that political crisis.

The importance of this function of NSA is to have a formal expression of student opinion in the U. S. These decisions are brought up in Congress in Washington and in the United Nations in New York when such problems as federal aid to higher education or student riots in Japan are discussed. It gives students a way to express themselves and to have their word in national and international affairs.

Reports of these decisions to the campus follow the NSA Congress in an effort to stir up political debate and discussion among the students of each member college and university. Debates such as the one this fall on academic freedom between Russell Kirk and Cary McWilliams are the result of this. I personally feel that more of such debates should take place on this campus if the full value of NSA is to be obtained. I also would like to see more written in the Tar Heel about these issues as discussed at the National Student Congress, and I plan to do some writing myself along these lines.

This is the last of my three campaign articles on NSA. I urge you all to make as wise a decision as possible in this election and cast your vote on Tuesday.

PHIL BADDOUR (SP)

It is my feeling that NSA should be primarily concerned with the discussion of topics and areas of concern which directly relate to the student in his role as a student. However, I do recognize the educational value of considering a broad scope of resolutions in which students have a direct interest, if not involvement.

I feel that the civil liberties which are guaranteed under the constitution should be protected and respected by all branches of our government. It seems to me that certain provisions of the Internal Security Act of 1950 (the McCarron Act) are contrary to the right of an individual to freely express his ideas and to associate with those whom he desires.

So far as HUAC is concerned, Congress has the right and duty to conduct investigations which are directly related to its legislative power. However, in the past HUAC has overstepped its proper role and in fact has had the effect of a judicial body. Any person who is guilty of a criminal act should be brought to court and tried with "due process." Often times a person called to testify before this committee is found guilty in the eyes of the public even though he has not violated any law. I do not feel that all of the activities of HUAC have been misplaced, many times they have been. For these reasons I believe the House of Representatives should either seriously limit or abolish the activities of HUAC.

With regard to the curtailment of nuclear testing and disarmament, I would not attempt to direct our executive in these matters. Of course most of us would like to see testing stopped and disarmament a reality.

As the United States NSA we are an intricate member of the international student community. We have a very definite responsibility to the community and should strive to promote understanding, co-operation, and an exchange of ideas with the students of the entire world. USNSA should assume a position of leadership within this international community and work diligently to promote the common goals of all students.

plies, writing letters, mimeographing them when necessary, and mailing under the control of one person.

3) Most important, I would like to set up a "one-day-mailing-plan." I feel that Student Government owes, as a courtesy to each person corresponding with student government, that their correspondence be answered within twenty-four hours after reception. Under the "one-day-mailing-plan," either the correspondence would be answered immediately, or a letter would go out that the matters mentioned in the correspondence were under investigation and that the answer would be forthcoming.

Concerning hard work, I can only say that, working under the present secretary of the student body, I am very much aware of the effort involved in being secretary of the student body. I will have the time necessary for the job, and am most eager to do an outstanding job as secretary of the Student Body.

her and she started squealing. Everyone knew Griselda was in the area. Some of the students were yelling 'oink! oink!' from their windows."

Crowd Of 250

Mason went on to say that students began pouring out of the dorms into the Quad. The crowd quickly grew to about 250 students. One observer said, "Everyone was milling around. Then they began to cheer and spell out her name like at a football game."

The crowd turned toward Cobb Dorm with Griselda leading the way. Mason said, "we thought it would be good idea for Griselda to give a speech to the girls—anything to get more votes for Griselda." The rally gathered in the court in front of Cobb and gave a few "rousing cheers" for Griselda. "The girls all had their windows open so I held Griselda up to say a few words," said Mason.

About this time, however, the police arrived to put a damper on the rally. Mason said that he went up to one policeman and "told him that I was the one he was probably looking for. 'Grissy' looked like she wanted to bite him; she was all over his leg." The crowd soon dispersed without any trouble.

Mason added that the campaign has been hard on Griselda. She has already lost two pounds, he reported.

Sponsored By Bachelors Club

Griselda has entered the "campus political pigpen" as a write-in candidate, according to her campaign managers, Tony Mason and Dennis Bobrowske. She is being sponsored by the Bachelors Club of UNC.

Griselda is running because she believes that elections have been largely popularity contests. She is not running because of her good looks but on a platform that promises to "bring home the bacon."

of great assistance to all student government workers.

"The secretary sometimes plays another important role, that of hostess to special guests and visitors to the University. I would enjoy very much extending to them the warm hospitality which makes Carolina such a fine place to live and work.

"These are a few of the ideas I would like to bring to the office of Secretary. I can only promise my sincere interest and time, if elected. The other Student Party candidates and I would appreciate your consideration on Tuesday."

spectively, for these two projects, but in nearly a year, less than half of this money has been used. The treasurer must do more than merely keep account of these funds; he must also inform the campus of their existence. This I propose to do if elected.

Less sensational, but perhaps most important in the area of policy is the matter of codifying and closing up loopholes in the present financial setup of Student Government. At the present time, a $90,000 surplus exists in the Student Activities Fund. This money is necessary for the proper management of an operation as extensive as this office handles—but, who has ultimate control of this money? Is it Student Government or is it the Student Activities Office, originally established as employees of Student Government? Because of lack of established policy, this matter is not clear.

class committees, those who have excelled in minor sports, and those who have survived in "not-so-crip-courses."

On the lighter side this magazine will contain satires and cartoons pertaining to class humor. And on the more valuable side it will include a complete reference as to the location and occupation of our classmates. I feel that this will be of unlimited value for future reference. Due to the space limit, I am not able to expound further on this magazine but I will try to talk to each and everyone of you about it soon.

I have had experience, having edited several student publications, which I feel qualifies me, as Vice President, to be overall co-ordinator and editor. The staff of this magazine will be composed of the better dorm editors, journalism students, and other qualified, interested classmates. Along with establishing a new position for the vice president, this will create a new and important tradition for the entire senior class of 1964.

These proposals cannot be successfully accomplished without your help just as the senior class will not be successful without your participation. This is our last chance for our class to gain recognition—and I'll work for You.

UNC Nine Defeats Ivy Leaguers, 5-4

By LOU ROSENTHAL

Carolina's hard-hitting baseballers rapped out ten hits, including five for extra bases, as they topped the Yale Bulldogs, 5-4, yesterday at Emerson Stadium.

Gary Black slugged a single, a double, and a triple, as he drove in four runs to lead the Tar Heels. Heyward Hull knocked a double and two singles, and drove in the other Tar Heel run.

Three hurlers saw action for UNC, with starter Jerry Davis picking up the win. Bill Dannemann came in in the sixth, and retired eight straight Elis before giving up a hit. Bill Haywood finished up, as he retired the last three batsmen on seven pitches.

Don Raymond absorbed the loss, his first decision, while going the route. It was the Bulldogs' sixth loss in nine games this season.

Carolina started the scoring in the second inning, when leadoff batter Ken Willard slashed a double down the third base line. Black followed with a ground-rule double that bounced over the left-center field fence, as Willard came in to tally the first run.

Yale came back in the top of the third, with the help of two Tar Heel errors. Bill Hildebrand went to second when Bill Taylor overthrew first on Hildebrand's slow roller. The next two batters were out, but Tim O'Connell's single off Davis' foot brought in Hildebrand. Taylor again overthrew first, but the ball was retrieved before a run could score. The next batter grounded out to end the inning.

In the bottom of the third, the Tar Heels loaded the bases on a single by Hull and Jim Speight. Willard was hit by the pitcher to fill the sacks. Black then powdered the ball down the third base line, and only a quick recovery by the Yale left-fielder stopped Black from going farther than third.

In the fifth, the Bulldogs closed the gap, when John Hunsacker singled, and O'Connell drove him in with a double to deep left field. Dick Horgan singled, and Robin Cody blooped a hit over second to drive in the Eli's third run.

In the bottom of the inning, with runners on first and second, Black was robbed of a hit and another RBI, when Yale centerfielder Jerry Slack made a fine running catch of Black's drive to deep right-center.

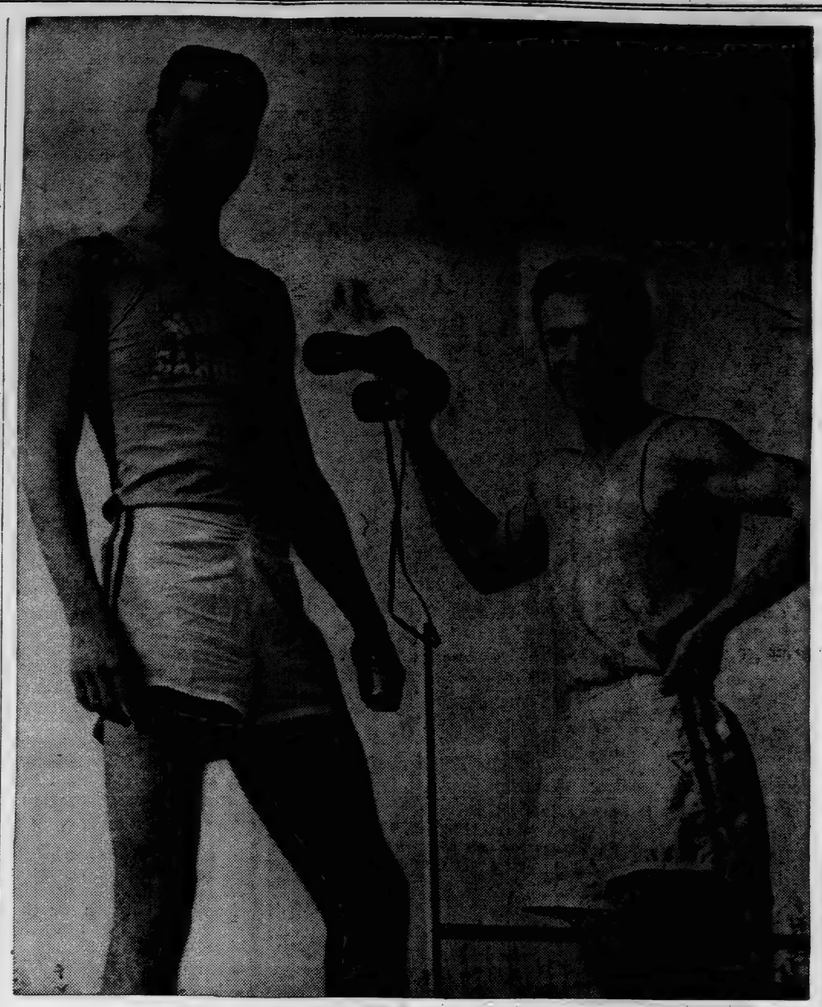
In the sixth, after right fielder Hugh Levick stole a base hit from Dick Prindle, by making a diving catch of the Tar Heel second sacker's line drive. Taylor walked and stole second, and came home on Hull's third hit of the day.

The Eli's got one run back in the eighth, after two were out. Slack hit a drive into right-center that Black just barely missed, and came in on Hildebrand's single. UNC catcher Bernie Isgett then threw out Hildebrand at second when the Eli tried to steal.

UNC coach Walter Rabb was delighted with the way the Tar Heel bats came alive. He was especially pleased with Black's performance.

The Tar Heel victory was somewhat marred by five errors, but Rabb said that "yesterday we were working on relays from the outfield, and I may have worked them a little too hard. Their arms were stiff."

The win was Davis's first outing. Rabb said that he was pleased with the performance of both Davis and Dannemann. Both are sophomores, and won nine games against only one loss for last year's freshman squad.



Emerson Stadium will be the scene of four games this weekend. Tomorrow, the Tar Heels take on Colgate in the second game of a doubleheader. The Colgate squad will play VPI at 12:30. Saturday, after the high school clinic, sponsored by UNC, UNC will play VPI, and then play an unofficial game with Colgate.

Doubleheader Slated Today

North Carolina baseball fans will be treated to a full afternoon of baseball today. The first doubleheader of the year will be held today at Emerson field.

In the first game Colgate and Virginia Tech will go at each other. And in the second contest, the Red Raiders of Colgate will face the once-beaten Tar Heels.

Game times are 12:30 and 3. The first game will be a seven-inning affair.

WHICH IS THE REAL BOB BENNETT?

It's a long way between Bob Bennetts at the University of North Carolina, hance the field glasses for a closer look. One Bob Bennett is a junior and competes in the 880 and mile run. His home is Chevy Chase, Md., and he stands 5-6 in his spikes. The king-sized Bob is from Mount Lebanon, Pa., and is a human skyscraper at 6-8½. He led the frosh basketball team in scoring and currently is participating in the 220 on the yearling cinder squad. (Photo by Ronman)

Tar Heels Swim In Nationals

The National Collegiate Athletic Association swimming meet got underway last night in Raleigh at the N. C. State pool.

The 50- and 500-yard freestyle, one meter diving, and 400-yard medley and individual medley finals were held at 8 p.m.

Harrison Merrill and Thompson Mann will lead UNC in the event. Other Carolina mermen at the meet are Thad Adams, Scott Smiley, Davis Roberts, and Frank Lea.

State's All-Americas, Frank Ellis, Ed Spencer, Bill McGinty, and Pete Fogarasy, are overshadowed by top-seeded international stars such as Jon Konrads and Steve Jackman.

The other two are Ohio State and meet favorite Yale.

USC coach Pete Daland expects Yale to win and Cincinnati to come in second. His own team has placed either first or second for the last three years.

Ohio State will be strong in the diving competition with Lou Vitucci, titlist in '61 and '62. SC and Cincinnati will be strong in the distance freestyle events.

Minnesota will be strong because of Jackman in the sprints. Yale is the favorite because it has strong teams in all events.

In the medley relay, Minnesota, Michigan, USC and Yale are rated high, though Minnesota is a definite favorite.

This afternoon and tonight, trials and finals in the 200-yard butterfly, backstroke, breaststroke, freestyle, and individual medley will be held.

Tomorrow finals and trials in the 100-yard freestyle, backstroke, breaststroke, and butterfly, in the 1,650-yard freestyle, and the 400-yard freestyle relay will be on the ticket. Three meter diving finals will also be tomorrow.

Frosh Netters Triumph, 8-1

Carolina's frosh netters won their first match of the season over Raleigh Broughton High School yesterday, 8-1.

The only defeat came on the No. 3 court where Broughton's Billy Trott fought down Andy Goddad, 7-5, 2-6, 6-1.

Don Long on the No. 1 court had a tough time with David Green before finally subduing him, 6-4, 8-6.

The other matches were one-sided. No. 2 Carl Evans whipped Ed Parker, 6-1, 6-1. Ken Oettinger beat Fred London, 6-3, 6-2; Jeff Ruday throttled Jim Weathers, 6-3, 6-1; and Allan Neeley set David Gerstel, 6-3, 6-3.

In the doubles, Goddard and Evans defeated Parker and Trott, 6-1, 6-0. Long and Ruday won over Green and London, 6-2, 6-1. Tom Smith and Neil Thomas overcame Weathers and Wickman, 6-0, 6-3.

Bob Bennetts: Track Team's Mutt And Jeff

If someone calls for Bob Bennett at North Carolina track headquarters, he must either look up or down.

You see, it's a long way between Bennetts. There are two athletes with the same name participating on UNC cinders.

One is 6-8½ and from Mount Lebanon, Pa. The other is 5-6 and hails from Chevy Chase, Md.

"The smaller Mr. Bennett is a very capable runner in the 880 and mile events," said Track Coach Dale Ranson. "He's a junior and does a good job for us."

The king-sized Bennett is better known as a frosh basketballer. He led the club in scoring during the past winter and is regarded as a prime varsity candidate.

Assistant Coach Joe Hilton said Bennett has promise in running the 220. Said Hilton: "He takes a tremendous stride and is graceful for a big man. You never know, but I think he could develop very nicely."

Big Bob wears a size 13 shoe. The other Bob wears a 6½.

Of course, one of the Bennetts is just a growing boy. Which one? Why the king-sized Bob. He has shot upward a half-inch since September.

only. After that, the players will be allowed to live anywhere they wish.

Both Long and Hickey pointed out that Ehringhaus would not be dominated by football players.

"Ehringhaus will not become a football dormitory," Long said. The football players will occupy only one-seventh of the population. It definitely won't be a football dorm," he said again.

Playmate Bunny Likes UNC Males

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

37-24-37. Her name is Teddi Smith, a former Playmate of the Month and cover girl for Playboy, and she "came to Chapel Hill to see all the college boys." She was at the Hub all day yesterday posing for and autographing hundreds of pictures.

Teddi has a dark sun tan, sandy brown hair, blue eyes; and on promotional tours she wears a white skirt, black turtle neck sweater with a bunny on the back, black hose and black high heel shoes—an outfit which many Carolina gentlemen thought was much too conservative. "We couldn't very well go around in our little bunny outfit," Teddi smiled. "It just wouldn't be right in the public, you know. When we are out on promotional tours, we try to present the girl next door type of image — you know the kind of girl you want to marry."

Teddi has been associated with Playboy magazine three years this June.

"I got my first real start modeling bras and girdles for Sears. Then one of the photographers sent some of the prints to Playboy and I received an offer from them. At the time, they were receiving more than 500 applications from female hopefuls. And as you know, they only choose 12 girls a year to be a Playmate, so I was very very lucky.

"When a girl first signs on to pose as a Playmate, she receives $1,000 right off. Then she is paid an additional $100 each month for the next 20 months. That's $3,000 and I suppose that's one of the main reasons I went to work for Playboy—money. But there's also lots of travel and it's certainly an exciting life.

"I've been able to go to Hawaii and Europe and none of this would have ever happened if I hadn't started working for Hugh Hefner and Playboy.

"There is only one major restriction on a girl who is a Playmate," Teddi beamed. "We can't do any other nude modeling for two years. But you can do most anything else. The girls could get married and have a dozen children if they wanted to. They (Playboy) don't care as long as the girls look good.

The 20-year-old Teddi, who began with Playboy when she was 17 is not married—repeat, is not married.

Teddi said she first appeared as Playmate in the July 1960 Playboy and she was also the cover girl on the December 1961 edition.

"I was also in the pillow fight edition which everybody seemed to enjoy. I was the one that was dressed, you remember. The girl with the blonde hair and the pony tail."

To the girls, Teddi says, "Dress for the men if you want to please them. Don't try to copy some of these modern hairdo's. Do try to find out what the man is interested in, though," she grinned.

* * *

"Good Lord, I can't believe this." That was the initial reaction of David Friedman of 209 Alexander Dormitory when he learned that he had just won a dinner date with Miss Teddi Smith of Playboy fame.

David and Teddi enjoyed a candle light dinner, compliments of the Ranch House last night and then a little later they adjourned to the Josh White concert.

After the date and after he had managed to clear some of the star dust from his eyes, David managed to say, "It was wonderful that's all, just great."

Durand Picked New Chairman Of Council

WHITNEY DURAND

Whitney Durand, a junior from Lookout Mt., Tenn., has been selected as chairman of the Men's Council for the coming year, according to an announcement made this week.

Durand succeeds Grant Wheeler, who was elected last month to serve the remainder of Walter Dellinger's term as chairman.

Peter Jason of Woodmere, L.I., N.Y. and Bryan Simpson of Jacksonville, Fla. were elected vice-chairman and scribe, respectively.

Durand has served on the Men's Council since the spring of his freshman year. Last year he was elected scribe of the council and then became vice-chairman when Dellinger resigned last month to work on his honors thesis in Political Science.

Durand, a Morehead Scholar and a member of the Phi Delta Theta fraternity, is reading for honors in History.

NSA Alternates Get Scholarships

Student Legislature Thursday night passed, by a vote of 18-13, a bill establishing four $40 scholarships for alternate delegates to attend this year's United States National Students Association (USNSA) Congress at Indiana University.

Also approved was an amended resolution calling for the International Students Board (ISB) to study the possibility of UNC establishing a scholarship program for an African student refugee from Bulgaria.

The NSA bill, introduced by Bambi Ainsley (SP) for Mike Lawler, sets up an experimental program which may encourage a broader representation of delegates who will represent UNC at this year's conference.

A selections committee, made up of the presidents of the IFC, IDC, WRC and Pan Hellenic Council, will consider and select four alternates. The committee will submit its choices to the president of the student body, who will add two of his own choices, and then will send the last to SL for its approval.

Representatives Rufus Edmisten (SP, TM 4) and Larry McDevitt (UP, TM 3) were absent.

EUROPEAN STUDY SEMINAR

A weekly seminar for students expecting to visit Europe this summer is being sponsored by Seminar Abroad. It is open to all students, faculty or Chapel Hill citizens interested in a background knowledge of Europe.

Eleven countries and all the major cities like Paris, Madrid, Rome, Florence, Vienna, Prague, Berlin and London are being covered. Maps and carefully selected printed material is used along with representative leaders from each county and city.

The meetings are held in the Y.M.C.A. conference room each Tuesday 7:00 to 8:30 p.m. Prague, Berlin and West Germany will be the subject for next Tuesday's meeting. Pete Raines and the Exchange Students from Germany will lead the discussion.

Other major cities will be covered during April. On April 25 to 27 a three-day conference in Washington will be led by representatives from the Embassies of the 5 major European countries and the State Department.

There are openings for three additional members in Seminars Abroad for the summer of 1963.

NEW LEFT

The New Left Club will meet with several trade union leaders who are on campus this weekend, Sunday at eight o'clock at 127 W. Rosemary St.

World Affairs Confab Opens Today; Welch To Give Keynote Talk

Editor Hopefuls Meet In Debate

By CAROL MANNING

The Daily Tar Heel was the subject, but its readers rather than the reporters asked the questions Thursday night.

In a pre-election "debate," editorial candidates Harry Lloyd, Chris Farran, Dave Ethridge and Gary Blanchard gave their views on their proposed plans, policies, and purposes in running the Tar Heel.

Farran promised more student participation in the Tar Heel, encouraged by the editor and his staff.

"Stories should come from the people on campus," Farran said. "Ask the students themselves about student autonomy . . . needle the administration a little for answers."

He stressed initiative and interest rather than actual newspaper experience for non-staff writers.

"For instance," he said, "the Tar Heel should use Journalism classes to get stories on the side."

Gary Blanchard and Dave Ethridge call for a "beat system of reporting." Three reporters would each be assigned to cover a specific area or beat—administration, student government and campus residential area events.

"They will know about their particular area," Ethridge said. "as, dormitory events will be the realm of the man covering dorms."

He added that this "beat" reporter will also know to whom to assign various articles within his specific area.

"The editor's job will be to supervise the whole staff," he said.

Blanchard felt the Tar Heel is free to go its own way too much.

"It should let the people of the University know where they stand," he said.

A reporter should "dig a story out," Harry Lloyd said. "He should be aware of most of the aspects of campus life."

"He should write fairly . . . reflect what the students think . . . even add seemingly insignificant stories, but of interest to the students," he said.

Farran feels that the difference between the Tar Heel and Chapel Hill Weekly ads is revealing.

"The advertisers are bent to the college audience," he said. "The articles, then, are mainly of campus interest."

Blanchard thinks the DTH is not as much of interest to the townspeople as to the students, but that a reporter should cover the town.

The Tar Heel should "take an interest in the merchants' problem," Ethridge said. He calls for a reporter to attend Merchants' Association and other meetings and "to find out what others do."

He thinks that the paper is of interest to students, faculty and townspeople alike.

Student Issues Is Topic

By JOHN KING

Bill Welch, Senate administrative assistant and first president of the National Student Association (NSA) will give the keynote address of the first International Student Affairs Symposium here this evening.

Welch will speak on "Issues Facing Students Today" at eight o'clock in Gerrard Hall.

"Challenge and Response: Issues Facing Students Today" is the theme of today's program.

"Challenge and response are recurring elements in the student's life, the daily attempts to understand the world and its problems. To be human, to a student means basically to be able to respond. Inevitably our response-ability involves us in responsibility, and brings to every person the ultimate questions of his life: 'What is required of me? How shall I respond'," said Kellis Parker were the reasons for the theme.

Registration will be held from 8 to 9 a.m. at the YMCA.

Chancellor William B. Aycock will welcome and address the Symposium at 9 o'clock in Gerrard Hall.

At 10 there will be a panel discussion for an hour and a half on "Issues Facing Students in Developing Countries." Panel members will be Andre N'kanza, Congo; Jozar Anwar, Indonesia; Shintaro Tozaki, Japan; Bachir Ould-Ruis, Algeria and Faraj Ardalan, Iran.

N'kuza is presently the president of the Congolese students in the U. S. and is attending Princeton University. His home is in Dolumingu.

Attending Rutgers University, Anwar is studying in the field of Economics. In 1960 he was chosen as a member of the senate of the Faculty of Economics of the University of Indonesia.

Tozaki is attending Oberlin College and is studying in the field of Sociology. Shintaro is a member of the International Section of Zengakuren.

Ould-Ruis is attending Carolina. His field of study is Public Health. Last week he was the Cultural Affairs Vice President of the National Union of Algerian Students. In that position he was responsible for finding scholarships for Algerian refugee students.

Ardalan is Secretary of the Iranian student organization in the U. S.

At noon there will be a luncheon-address by Magnus Gunther, former president of the South African National Student Association.

Dennis Shaul, president of the National Student Association (NSA) will speak in Gerrard Hall at 2:30 p.m. on "The Concept of Education in Europe and the United States". Shaul was President of the student body at Notre Dame, and is an Oxford Scholar.

Kellis Parker, a member of the International Students Board, sponsor of the symposium, outlined the goals of this first program as:

1. Creating awareness of the role of the student.

2. Familiarizing the student with the areas, organizations, and activities of students in other countries.

3. Inspiring an awareness of the challenges facing the students in the world today.

"The people who have been invited as leaders for this symposium are people who, in one sense or another, are responsibly responding to life's many challenges," said Parker. "Our task is not necessarily to adopt their actions, but to discover new and more personal responses."

MARTI NAMED TO FACULTY

Dr. Berthe Marie Marti has been appointed a professor in the UNC Department of Classics, it was announced by University Chancellor William B. Aycock with the approval of University President William C. Friday and the Board of Trustees.

Prof. Marti will teach in the Classics Department for one semester per year, beginning February 1, 1964.

Currently Dr. Marti is a professor at Bryn Mawr College where she has taught since 1930. During 1961-1963, she served as a visiting professor at the American Academy in Rome.

Veep Candidates Explain Position

DICK ELLIS, SP
Vice President

"The office of the vice-president has been handled as an executive office for the past two years, and it must be continued in that manner if it is to be as active and successful as it must be in the coming year," Dick Ellis SP candidate for vice-president reported. There are many areas in which the vice-president can work with both the legislature and the president, to promote a meaningful relationship between student government and tre student body.

There are certain specific legislative programs which should be coordinated in order to promote both short and long range programs aimed at benefiting the students at Carolina.

For example, a special legislative committee should be set up to investigate the Buildings Department and their dormitory repairs policy. Many students are unjustly charged for minor repair jobs and investigation in this area could be beneficial to dorm residents.

A legislative program to provide for a system of uniform procedures in the IDC Court is another area in which the vice-president should be active. These procedures would strengthen the present IDC court procedure. The opposition party has proposed a system of house councils to strengthen the present system. This was tried in 1958-1959 and did not work, because too many people knew the defendants and would not sit on the councils. This proposal would only serve now as it did then to weaken the IDC Court system.

An Active Resolutions Program

I would also like to promote an active resolutions program on campus issues. Since the legislature is one of the most influential avenues of student opinion, resolutions, on such matters as the plans to move all football players to Ehringhaus or on the proposed raise in student fees could stimulate action in areas outside of the students immediate jurisdiction.

Legislation is also needed in the area of coordination of the many agencies which bring speakers to the campus. For example, members from each of the several cam-

BOB SPEARMAN, UP
Vice-President

"The essential point behind the UP platform this spring is a new emphasis on the role which student government can play in the life of the Carolina student," Bob Spearman, candidate for vice-president said.

Student government must begin to take a far more active concern for the academic, the cultural and the social welfare of the student body.

In the area of academics, I strongly support:

1—The reestablishment of a reading period before exams;

2—The setting up of a Fine Arts Forum;

3—Student representation on faculty boards which consider curriculum changes and academic affairs and

4—Expansion of the National Merit Scholarship Committee.

The Fine Arts Forum would be held in alternate years with the Carolina Symposium. It would draw outstanding figures in art, music, painting, literature and drama to the Carolina campus for a series of class lectures, speeches and discussions.

I also feel that student representation on faculty curriculum boards is essential. Curriculum decisions are of utmost importance to students and should be decided in student-faculty consultation.

Expand Scholarship Group

The National Merit Scholarship Committee needs to be expanded so that its function will be to bring many more outstanding high school and prep school students to UNC to get acquainted with the University and its merits before they make their final decision as to where to go to college.

Reforms are also needed in the IDC Court, whose importance has been vastly increased. It now tries campus code cases formerly handled by the Men's Council. If it is to handle cases of this importance, it should be elected on an all-dorm basis instead of being chosen from the IDC. If the IDC can put students on probation, then students should elect its members.

The first responsibility of the Vice-President is to provide a smoothly functioning legislature

Senior Class Candidates Offer Final Statements

MICKEY BLACKWELL, UP
Treasurer

Mickey Blackwell, candidate for senior class treasurer said yesterday that the treasurer must become more than a "ledger-keeping figure-head," and to accomplish this, Blackwell said he intends "to work closely with president Charlie Shaffer to improve certain fixed programs such as Senior Class Day, and also to initiate new class projects.

"Senior Class Day could be a rewarding and memorable experience if a few new features were added to the same old ones of cutting class and running around barefooted." Blackwell added that he would push for a nationally known speaker (such as Nelson Rockefeller or Robert Kennedy, both of whom have been contacted about the possibility of a UNC visit) to come to the campus and combine their visit with several parties and dances.

"In other words, let's stretch the whole thing into a Sr. Class weekend which would benefit not only the seniors but the entire campus as well," Blackwell added.

He said that projects like this would require work, "but hard work would in turn help justify the existance of the office.

"Class officers have a great potential," Blackwell continued, "but it wasn't until I had served as co-publicity chairman of this year's junior class that I really observed what the real possibilities were — but only if the officers don't shy away from a little work.

"In next year's senior class, hard work, fresh ideas and their execution will be the determining factors concerning the social and financial success of our class."

JOAN HALEY, UP
Social Chairman

Since the fall elections, I have thoroughly enjoyed working for and with the Junior Class as Social Chairman. The months that we have been in office have been fun and busy ones. As Social Chairman I did not work solely on combo parties, but worked with the entire slate of officers on the various projects. As chairman of the Social Committee, I was in charge of the combo parties that we had this year.

From my experience of this year year I feel that I am qualified to seek the office of Social Chairman of the Senior Class. I am sincerely interested in and enthusiastic about working again for the Class of '64. This year has passed swiftly, but the months have been full with the sale at Town and Campus, the Teachers of the Month, the College Bowl, the Combo Parties, the Junior Essay, and the Faculty Variety Show. We are presently working on J-Day, to be held later on in the spring. I would like to begin next year with a late afternoon and evening Combo Party and Picnic at Hogan's Lake in the early fall. I would also like the opportunity to have more detailed themes to the combo parties, Mardi Gras for example. Also, I would like to plan varied social functions to be held during Senior Week.

I have many ideas, the time, the interest and enthusiasm, and the experience to plan social functions for the class of '64 if I am elected Social Chairman of the Senior Class. Thank you for your consideration.

BAMBI ANSLEY, SP
Social Chairman

College isn't all academics to the majority of Carolina students. A weekend spent on this campus will convince almost anyone of that! However, there is often a disturbing lack of organization, publicity, and general inclusiveness in many campus social events. Far too often, large groups of the campus population, particularly those students not in fraternities or sororities are left out of social activities. This is not the way to build the unity that we, as the next Senior Class, must develop.

The Senior Class Social Chairman, working in cooperation with the other Senior Class officers, could, I believe, do much to better this situation and further the interests of the class.

Let me tell you a few of my ideas for next year's Senior Class:

1) establish an all-campus social suggestion committee, under Senior Class leadership, to which any student could bring suggestions, gripes, or any other pertinent information about campus social events.

2) have a Junior-Senior Weekend, such as was planned this year, but didn't quite come off;

3) have more class parties: combo parties, picnics, etc.

4) have a "Senior Follies" show.

5) open rec rooms in women's dorms for dating on weekends.

6) have better publicity for all Senior Class social activities.

I feel that I am qualified for the job, and if elected, will do my best to fulfill the program previously outlined. I would also be happy to work for the realization of any feasible suggestions.

Your vote could decide this election. I would apperciate your casting it in my favor. Thank you.

Good Elected Head Of IDC, Cites Plan

Gerry Good was elected president of the Interdormitory Council for the 1963-64 school year Wednesday night. Good succeeds retiring president Ralph Mosley.

Gordon Appell was elected vice president; Clark Brewer secretary; Ed Burke treasurer; Jim Fullworth, chairman of the IDC Court and Allen Craige, clerk of court.

Good defeated his opponents for the presidency on a platform stressing more and better work next year in the IDC.

His program was divided into five sections: reorganization of IDC by-laws, increased responsibilities for IDC committees, reapportionment of representation in the IDC so that each dorm will have an equal voice in the body, increased social life for dormitory men by increased activities with the CWC, and a leadership school for new dormitory presidents.

In calling for IDC Court reformation, Good said, "There is a tendency to reform the IDC Court at the level of politics and in the Student Legislature. Why shouldn't we do this?"

He also called for a clearer separation of powers between student government and the IDC.

The head of the Elections Committee announced that dorm elections are scheduled for Tuesday, April 2. Voting will be by secret ballot.

Plans were announced for the IDC banquet which will be, held on Sunday, April 7, in the Faculty Club.

ANGEL FLIGHT SUPPER

The Angel Flight of the AFROTC will sponsor a spaghetti supper with all the trimmings at 5 p.m. today in the basement of the Nurses Dorm. Tickets are a dollar each and may be purchased at AFROTC headquarters or from any Angel member.

ROOM RESERVATIONS

Room reservation deposits of $10 for rooms for the summer and fall sessions must be made with the University Cashier in South Building not later than Monday, April 1.

Dormitory Spotlight: Whitehead

This is the twenty-first in a series of articles dealing with UNC Dorms and is sponsored jointly by the dorm presidents and the communications committee.

"We have tried to improve the dorm this year, and I think that we have succeeded.

"The girls are really interested in the dorm, and all in all it has been a good year."

These were the comments of Meredith Patton, president of Whitehead dorm, when interviewed by the Communications Committee. Assisted by Jane Smith, vice-president, and social chairman Betsy Baldwin, Meredith has unified the dorm and improved it greatly.

The dorm won the Homecoming display trophy, have placed high in intramurals, due to their victory in basketball, and have had one of the best social schedules among women's dorms.

A combo party during Orientation Week led off, followed by a Christmas dance. A mixer with Carr was held in February, and a banquet honoring the seniors will close out the year. In addition, dorm breakfasts are held every Sunday.

Responsibility Accepted By WRC In Good Faith

The Apartment Rule negotiations between students and administration seem to have come to an impasse. The students say they won't retreat and the administrators say they can't.

Students claim reality and self-government on their side; the administration claims propriety and ultimate University responsibility on its side.

No compromise seems in sight.

* * *

So, where do we go from here? And from whence have we come?

The issues in point in the Apartment Rule controversy are these:

—Is the Apartment Rule (which forbids any coed from being in a man's apartment without another woman student) necessary for the enforcement of the Campus Code? What is the relation, if any, between the rule and "morality"?

The Women's Council emphasizes it will continue to enforce the Campus Code, but the women feel the Apartment Rule involves neither honor, morality nor ladylike conduct—thus, its continued existence is a hindrance, rather than a help, to the honor and campus codes. By enforcing an unjust rule, the women feel they are bringing the entire honor setup into disrepute.

Administrators appear to feel the rule is necessary to insure ladylike conduct—the rule, in their view, does have a relation to the question of morality. And the rule's continued existence is seen as something of a preserver of the image of the Carolina coed's morals.

Both students and administrators, however, can agree on one fact—the rule is not now observed by more than a small minority of Carolina women. Its effect on morals, then, (even if we assume it could have an effect) is then minimal.

* * *

The other major point of contention between students and administrators is, "Who is responsible . . . ?" and more exactly and practically, "How responsible . . .?"

The dean of women and dean of student affairs make a major point of the administration's ultimate responsibility for student affairs, as delegated by the trustees.

No one denies this.

The students point out that the administration has delegated certain areas of governance of students to students—and decisions of these duly-delegated student groups should not be overruled.

The administration and faculty ARE ultimately responsible—BUT in areas of student self-government accepted in good faith by students, and executed intelligently and responsibly, these student decisions should not be crushed.

The WRC and women's council have accepted this area of student self-government — accepted the twin burdens of work and responsibility, in full faith that the administration would stand by the student actions which it sanctioned by ITS delegation of authority. We hope student- administration negotiations over the Apartment Rule will resolve the problem—and we hope it is resolved on the side of responsible student self-government. (JC)

It Doesn't Matter How

Well, it's finally here. Spring that is.

And with the clean, fresh, white and pink fluffs of beauty on the tip of every branch; with the pleasant soft green of uncut grass; and with the relaxed shuffle of friendly college kids—we're once again convinced that this is the way Chapel Hill really is.

The stories we tell, the cards we send, the memories we protect —they have their source here. Here in the warmth of a new day, progenitor of belief that on days such as this Tom Wolfe strode through that new door, Frank Graham spoke to his students, and the artists in surrounding valleys made Chapel Hill "the place for a man with a purpose."

Of course it will probably rain tomorrow. And your English prof will slash up that last theme, scrawl a large "C" and slam you into place; they're brutal that way. Or maybe your ride to Lauderdale will disappear, your girl will write less often, the last check will bounce, and your Weejuns will fall apart.

It doesn't matter how, it only matters when—when does the sophomoric cynicism destroy the Chapel Hill of today. When does the student become aged, the professor more clever? (CW)

Mud

As the politically ambitious and the run-of-the-mill candidates traipse from dorm to dorm expounding on their virtues and the weaknesses of their opposition, we would like to remind them that as one worldly sage once noted: "mud thrown is ground lost."

Different

For those engaged in that seasonal sport of ripping down campaign posters, a reminder—it's an honor council offense. A particular reminder to those stalwart souls who have so successfully removed so many of Mike Lawler's posters from the campus—try a different campaign trick.

Danger Of Stealing

To the Editors,

It seems tragic that one can not leave his room unlocked and feel certain that when he returns his belongings will all be there. The problem of stealing in dormitories and fraternities will always exisit to some degree on any campus and yet its existence should be minimum. People steal for many reasons but there is no rational excuse for such action. There is simply no place for it in a community like ours here in Chapel Hill.

There should and must exist on this campus a feeling of manliness, that is to say of an arrangement whereby a community of young men, who generally speaking, are assuredly not saints, but who maintain as the center of a vital organism, as the basis of a not unattractive existence, as the guiding principle of their life, the spirit of honor.

Stealing is a flagrant violation of the Honor Code and will always be dealt with in the harshest terms by the Mens Council.

Bowling Lanes Segregated

To the Editors,

For the past several weeks, the University chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has been attempting to negotiate an end to racial discrimination at the All Star Bowling Lanes and Restaurant at East Gate. Because of a complete lack of progress in these attempts, we are compelled to bring our case before the public in hopes that community opinion can help to change the bowling establishment's present practices.

As of this time, All Star's policy unofficially is to admit Negroes who are students of the University. Guests of students or faculty or residents of the community are barred if they are Negro. Or, as the All Star manager tells us, there is no policy of admitting non-student Negroes and any non-student who comes in would be refused service unless and until word was received from the owners permitting service.

The NAACP has been able to talk only with the manager. We have asked him to seek permission from the owners to initiate non-discriminatory practices at All Star. If this failed, we asked the manager to set up an appointment for us to confer with the owners. Neither of these simple steps has been taken.

Racial discrimination at the bowling lanes or anywhere else is contrary to moral beliefs in human justice and even contrary to customary racial practices now existing in Chapel Hill. And the bowling lanes are, indeed, public establishments; a sizable amount of business comes from the University and public school physical education programs, both of which use public funds.

We hope that those of the public who are concerned, as we are, about this matter will make their feelings known in such a way as to persuade the owners and management of All Star Bowling Lanes to change their policies.

Farran Has Done Good Job

To the Editors,

This year Graham Memorial has and plans to spend approximately $30,000 in student funds for free entertainment alone. As publicity chairman it is my job to keep the student body informed of all G.M. activities and the opportunities available thereby. To do this the publicity committee has a budget of $825, most of which is spent for posters, the calendar back, etc. But this alone is not enough. Full coverage by the DTH is also necessary.

The coverage of campus entertainment this year has at times been disappointing. Why? And what about next year? When these stories go to the DTH they go first to the news editor. As news editor this year Chris Farran has done everything possible to get these stories. In fact, on many occasions he has sent reporters to get more information. Then the stories are turned over to the managing editor. I have found that when Harry Lloyd has been managing editor these stories usually are relegated to page 3 or to the trash can to make room for UPI wire stories. And this brings us to Mr. Blanchard and Mr. Ethridge. Their campaign promises sound good, but they are still an unknown quantity. Therefore, I sincerely urge you to vote for Chris Farran and good campus coverage on April 2.

Legum Plugs UP Ticket

To the Editors,

With the always considerable turnover of student leaders on this campus, it is often folly to blindly stick to one particular political party. A salient example this year has been the great rejuvenation of the University Party and the relative demise of the Student Party. Only a year or two ago this situation was almost wholly reversed.

This is not to say that a political slate should be chosen along entirely individual lines. For in such a complex structure as student government, a considerable degree of political cohesion is mandatory to insure its validity and purposefulness.

Thus, in a spring election, in this spring election, it is necessary to choose the best candidates through an acknowledgement of the best party.

As a political independent on this campus in my four years here, I believe that I can state with some objectivity that the UP this year has established itself as this most dynamic and aggressive party at Carolina. This is an important consideration.

The UP got to the top through the hard and intelligent work of its membership. And this membership is no better exemplified than by the strong slate of candidates: Larry McDevitt, Pres.; Bob Spearman, Vice-Pres.; Sarah Broadhurst, Sec.; and Gerald Thornton, Treas.

Larry, Bob, Sarah, and Gerald are not campaigning on suddenly hatched campaign promises, but on the firm platform of an entire year's dedicated effort, from which they have helped to vitalize Carolina, and make its student government exemplary. No one can ask more than that from any candidate, and I urge all thoughtful voters more than ever before to vote the UP ticket.

Let's Have Co-everything

To the Editors,

Some of the boys were downgrading the idea of co-editors the other day in a bull session. They say it makes for divided responsibility, buck passing and a sloppy job. They say it gives a chance for two persons who otherwise aren't qualified to run on their own individual merits to pool their resources and share the glory.

I say their arguments are hogwash. I think we should have co-governors, co-secretaries of state, yes even co-presidents. Just think We could have Kennedy AND Nixon, Sanford AND Gavin, Rusk AND Adam Clayton Powell.

Who says the co-editor idea will not work? After all, the Holy Trinity has been working for centuries.

See. Know About SG?

To the Editors:

When Miss Bonnie Hoyle (Student Party Candidate for Secretary of the Student Body) spoke in my dormitory, she stated that if elected she would appoint the file clerk of the Legislature. At present the file clerk is elected by legislature from its own ranks.

Not only can I see no advantage to this, but I should also like to point out that this is clearly illegal according to the by-laws of legislature.

If Miss Hoyle is to be our Secretary next year, I hope she will better acquaint herself with Student Government.

More Sex On College Campus Today

By G. K. HOENDIFELD
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON — Sexual intercourse before marriage is increasing on college campuses, a group of educators reported today.

Writing in the scholarly Journal of the National Association of Women Deans and Counselors, the experts emphasized that it is not just a case of wild youth growing wilder.

Rather, they said, it is a reflection of:

Young people pursuing their educational goals against a background of international tension and social chaos.

A society which preaches strict standards of sexual morality, but does not practice what it preaches.

The arrival on campus of a late adolescent who is largely unprepared for and often incapable of managing the responsibility for biological and social maturity.

The Journal, a monthly publication, devoted its entire January issue to "Student Sex Standards and Behavior: The Educator's Responsibility."

Kate Hevner Mueller, professor of higher education at Indiana University and editor of the Journal, posed the problem this way:

"Crises are inevitable, soul-searching routine and confusion rampant, for sex behavior and sex ethics have become national problems, unacknowledged, unsavory, and unsolved."

Lester A. Kirkendall, professor of family life at Oregon State University, said "30 years' experience in working very closely with young people concerning all kinds of sexual problems and experiences" has led to him to assume that:

"1. College youth are confused and uncertain concerning sex standards.

"2 Much premarital sexual intercourse occurs among college level youth. I believe that the proportion of college youth engaging in premarital intercourse is increasing.

"3 At the late adolescent level, adult control has practically disappeared. The actual decisions as to what sexual practices shall be followed are made by the youth in their own privacy and their own way. Controls imposed by authoritative adults are a thing of the past. We may not like this, but it is a fact of life."

Kirkendall said "parental supervision at the college level is gone, chaperones serve primarily an ornamental function, and college rules can, at the most, hamper and inconvenience rather than prevent."

The Oregon State professor also said, "we are still trying to motivate and control the sexual behavior of youth by citing the traditional negative consequences of sexual experiences: premarital pregnancy, venereal infection, and community disapproval.

"The fact is that the power of these fear-evoking threats has been markedly decreased."

Prof. Kirkendall said there are two important ways in which youth may be helped.

"First, they should be helped in thinking their way through the morass of exisiting contradictions.

"Second, youth need help in developing a value framework which will have meaning for them."

The contradictions, Kirkendall said, are seen on every hand.

Society, he said, stands firmly for premarital chastity, but adults use sex as a lure to promote business enterprises.

Sex, he added, is considered a delicate subject, yet it is treated openly in books, plays and magazines, and is made to seem "an enticing, exciting pastime, in which the chief fault is getting caught."

Kirkendall said every college and university should provide its students with opportunities to establish a comprehensive system of values through classes, conferences and open discussions.

Winston W. Ehrmann, a former professor at the University of Florida and Colorado State University and now a staff associate of the American Association of University Professors, said:

"Contrary to the double standard, whose historic importance is waning, more and more couples who consider themselves either going steady or engaged experience premarital intercourse."

Edward C. Solomon of the Social Science Department at Sarah Lawrence College, and an official of the Planned Parenthood Federation, said a college program of sex education "must not be designed simply to rescue the adolescent college girl from confusion and promiscuity.

"Rather, its purpose should be to aid the student in making the distinction between social pressure and social responsibility and in developing positive personal values."

Fantastic Device For Organized Knowledge

By R. J. HEATHORN
In Punch

A new aid to rapid—almost magical—learning has made its appearance. Indications are that if it catches on all the electronic gadgets will be so much junk.

The new device is known as Built-in Orderly Organized Knowledge. The makers generally call it by its initials, BOOK.

Many advantages are claimed over the old-style learning and teaching aids on which most people are brought up nowadays. It has no wires, no electric circuit to break down. No connection is needed to an electricity power point. It is made entirely without mechanical parts to go wrong or need replacement.

Anyone can use BOOK, even children, and it fits comfortably into the hands. It can be conveniently used sitting in an armchair by the fire.

How does this revolutionary, unbelievably easy invention work? Basically BOOK consists only of a large number of paper sheets. These may run to hundreds where BOOK covers a lengthy programme of information. Each sheet bears a number in sequence, so that the sheets cannot be used in the wrong order.

To make it even easier for the user to keep the sheets in the proper order they are held firmly in place by a special locking device called a "binding."

Each sheet of paper presents the user with an information sequence in the form of symbols, which he absorbs optically for automatic registration on the brain. When one sheet has been assimilated a flick of the finger turns it over and further information is found on the other side.

By using both sides of each sheet in this way a great economy is effected, thus reducing both the size and cost of BOOK. No buttons need to be pressed to move from one sheet to another, to open or close BOOK, or to start it working.

BOOK may be taken up at any time and used by merely opening it. Instantly it is ready for use. Nothing has to be connected up or switched on. The user may turn at will to any sheet, going backwards or forwards as he pleases. A sheet is provided near the beginning as a location finder for any required information sequence.

A small accessory, available at trifling extra cost, is the BOOK-mark. This enables the user to pick up his programme where he left off on the previous learning session. BOOKmark is versatile and may be used in any BOOK.

The initial cost varies with the size and subject matter. Already a vast range of BOOKS is available, covering every conceivable subject and adjusted to different levels of aptitude. One BOOK, small enough to be held in the hands, may contain an entire learning schedule.

Once purchased, BOOK requires no further upkeep cost; no batteries or wires needed, since the motive power, thanks to an ingenious device patented by the makers, is supplied by the brain of the user.

BOOKS may be stored on handy shelves and for ease of reference the programme schedule is normally indicated on the back of the binding.

Altogether the Built-in Organized Orderly Knowledge seems to have great advantages with no drawbacks. We predict a big future for it.

Migrants' Popularity Grows

There's a folk singing quartet here that's fast becoming the most popular group of its kind in the state.

The Migrants, a quartet of UNC students that got together for the first time less than a year ago, is beginning to get more requests to perform than it can handle—a sure sign of success. Sandy Moffett, the 26-year-old "father" of the quartet, has a good explanation for the group's popularity.

"A lot of people can sing, but the way they present themselves and their show makes all the difference," Sandy said. "We've aimed at a professional, dramatically unified presentation from the very beginning. I guess my background in drama caused that. Instead of just doing a straight concert, we try to give a definite line of action—a story line—to the show. We try to get all the entertainment possible out of the material."

The nucleus of the group started last summer when three of the quartet worked with "The Lost Colony." The long-running symphonic drama on Roanoke Island. Betty Ferguson, Danny Shepherd (both sang in the "Colony" chorus) and Sandy, who was stage manager of the outdoor drama, began making appearances in beach clubs along the Outer Bank as part of a vocal group called The Sandfiddlers. When the trio returned to Chapel Hill in the fall, Bob Newlin was added.

After seven consecutive weeks of performing at Del Reno's in Raleigh and numerous appearances at Durham's Null n' Void (where the quartet had its first engagement), The Migrants will do a benefit performance for the Campus Chest at Carroll Hall here Monday, April 1. On April 20, the folk singers will go to St. Andrews College in Laurinburg for a concert. The Louisburg College Student Concert Series, on which they recently appeared, has asked them to make a return engagement.

"Out of all our work, we've tried to get a distinctive sound," Sandy pointed out. "You can't be like any other group if you want to make a go of it. It's the quality in Betty's voice—sort of warm and dark—that makes us different, I think."

All of the quartet are North Carolinians except Bob Newlin, who comes from Danville, Va. Born in Kiangyin, China, where his father was a missionary, Sandy now calls Taylorsville, N. C., home. Betty hails from LaGrange and Danny is from Goldsboro.

With over 40 songs now in their repertoire, The Migrants are trying some original numbers. Their rock n' roll parody, "Woopbedobee," is one of their most popular songs. A new one, "It's a Wild River to Cross," should be ready for the Campus Chest concert tomorrow.

The quartet will work together in "The Lost Colony" again this summer, enabling them to perfect their style even more. Present plans call for their staying together as long as possible, with an eye for a recording contract.

"But whatever the future holds for us, two of the quartet will stay together," Sandy said.

He and Miss Ferguson will be married June 9.

THE MIGRANTS, UNC's newest and most popular singing group, combine singing style and vivacity to win popular appeal. The group leans heavily on the vocal ability of Miss Betty Ferguson, left, in most of their appearances. Sandy Moffett, leader of the group, is shown next to Miss Ferguson. Danny Shepard and Bob Newlin fill out the group, providing vocal ability, instrumental backup and comic overtones.

pus organizations which present speakers could coordinate speaking engagements. This would eliminate duplication and would result in a better speaking program.

Specific legislation should be enacted to obtain certain facilities for the dorms. For example, benches, horse-shoe pits and volley ball courts should be provided for the dormitories in order to increase their lounging and recreational facilities.

On a long range basis, investigation of the possibility of putting the Yackety-Yack on a gradual subscription basis should be instigated. If this were possible, student fees could be lowered or a large sum of money could be freed for support of a student cooperative or an effective carrier current system. For a start, contact could be made with other colleges which have successful self-supporting annuals to see if their system could be applied at Carolina.

Dorm Discussion Program

In the area of educational and social concern work should be done with the dorms to organize a series of programs which would bring faculty members to talk at joint dorm meetings. For example, McIver and Mangum could meet together in the Mangum social room for an informal discussion with Dr. Sam Hill of the religion department.

The Student Party platform mentions the problems of deferred rush which the fraternities at Carolina will soon be faced with. It is my feeling that the vice-president should work closely with the President in investigating the manner in which a loan fund can be set up to aid the fraternities in getting through this period of financial crisis.

An active and practical Student Government is essential next year. These are just a few of the programs and activities with which the vice-president must concern himself if student government is going to be practical and is to benefit students in every area of the campus. It is my feeling that the Student Party in its platform and its candidates offers such an administration.

Chinese Get Their Grins Just Like Americans Do

By MAT FRIEDMAN

American humor is a myth. At least, things are funny in Chapel Hill for the same reason they are funny in Timbuktu.

Dr. G. F. Horner, UNC English professor, thinks the only thing American about American humor is the subject matter. He will speak on "Humor and America" Tuesday, April 9, in 111 Murphey Hall as part of the humanities lectures series.

Humorists like Mark Twain and Will Rogers, says Dr. Horner, joked about life in the United States and were therefore labeled as native humorists, but their techniques are used all over the world. He calls Will Rogers's method the "plain common sense" approach and Twain's the "simulated naive" approach, the two basic techniques in humor.

"The manner in which American humor is written," says Dr. Horner, "makes it seem unique. It uses common language, picturesque phrases, and a pattern of colloquial speech."

He calls Will Rogers a "crackerbox philosopher" and points out that the humorist-commentator has almost always been present in American life, from Jack Downing to Rogers. But there's no one like that today, he says, so maybe things are changing.

Humor Is Optimistic

"Generally speaking," says Dr. Horner, "American humor is optimistic. Early Mark Twain always rejected the attitude that 'something can be done.' He always saw possibilities for improvement. You can't really satirize anything unless something can be done to improve it." He sees the later Twain, however, and the humorist of today as pessimists. "The humorist of today is a different sort of person. He is sardonic, smart, as befuddled and uncertain as his audience and plays upon his and their frustrations." Dr. Horner suggests that the so-called "sick humorists" are merely products of a pessimistic society.

But he adds, "I don't know how you account for television shows like the 'Beverly Hillbillies' unless this sort of thing restores people's confidence and provides them with pure escapism. It seems to be a throwback to nineteenth century humor."

Dr. Horner decries the lack of recognition accorded some of America's more "genteel" humorists. "They don't use a lot of colorful expressions and are therefore often discounted on the American scene. But they use many of the same devices and write about the same things."

Dr. Horner is also interested in what makes something funny. Does humor lie in the thing we laugh at, in the observer himself, the manner in which it is presented, or a combination of all these things? It is a problem pondered by some of the great minds in history. Freud, for example, thought all humor resided in the observer's mind, and Aristotle, in the thing we laugh at.

But then, adds Dr. Horner, what makes humor depends on what the common man thinks about it. "There are many notions about it and some of them are very confusing."

Whatever humor is, Dr. Horner thinks it has never really changed, and "has always been concerned with human characteristics, actions and institutions." Be it slapstick, sick humor, or dry wit, it all goes to make up a universal human comedy.

which can better represent the will of the students — and implement proposals such as these.

In the past, much time has been lost because of the unfamiliarity of new legislators with basic legislative procedure. I would establish a series of short training sessions where the newly elected members would work with experienced legislators. The legislature can also be used in special instances as an investigating body to study such student problems as the possible establishment of a student cooperative.

Cooperation Needed

The vice-president also has a responsibility to represent the student body in dealing with the Administration — particularly in seeking its cooperation on problems such as student representation on faculty committees and in discussions on student discipline.

Too often in the past student autonomy has suffered not only from Administrative encroachment but also from lack of student responsibility. This is the most important duty of the student body vice-president and of all student government officials — to provide responsible student leadership — leadership which is both willing and able to take a more active role in determining the future direction of the University.

The social problems of the campus cannot be solved without a new student union. We urge continued efforts to present Carolina's needs in this area to the General Assembly and to the people of North Carolina. In the meantime we are investigating the possible use of the Monogram social room on a part-time basis.

AMONG MY KINFOLK

My favorite cousin, Mandolin Glebe, a sweet, unspoiled country boy, has just started college. Today I got a letter from him which I will reprint here because I know Mandolin's problems are so much like your own. Mandolin writes:

Dear Mandolin (he thinks my name is Mandolin too),

I see by the college paper that you are writing a column for Marlboro Cigarettes. I think Marlboros are jim-dandy cigarettes with real nice tobacco and a ginger-peachy filter, and I want to tell you why I don't smoke them.

It all started the very first day I arrived at college. I was walking across the campus, swinging my paper valise and singing traditional airs like Blue Tail Fly and Death and Transfiguration, when all of a sudden I ran into this here collegiate-looking fellow with a monogram on his breast pocket. He asked me was I a freshman. I said yes. He asked me did I want to be a BMOC and the envy of all the in crowd. I said yes. He said the only way to make these keen things happen was to join a fraternity. Fortunately he happened to have a pledge card with him, so he pricked my thumb and I signed. He didn't tell me the name of the fraternity or where it is located, but I suppose I'll find out when I go active.

Meanwhile this fellow comes around every week to collect the dues, which are $100, plus a $10 fine for missing the weekly meeting, plus a $5 assessment to buy a headstone for Spot, the late, beloved beagle who was the fraternity mascot.

I have never regretted joining the fraternity, because it is my dearest wish to be a BMOC and the envy of all the in crowd, but you can see that it is not cheap. It wouldn't be so bad if I slept at the frat house, but you must agree that I can't sleep at the house if I don't know where the house is.

I have rented a room which is not only grotesquely expensive, but it is not at all the kind of room I was looking for. I wanted someplace reasonably priced, clean, comfortable, and within easy walking distance of classes, the shopping district, and San Francisco and New York. What I found was a bedroom in the home of a local costermonger which is dingy, expensive, and uncomfortable—and I don't even get to use the bed till 7 a.m. when my landlord goes out to mong his costers.

Well anyhow, I got settled and the next thing I did, naturally, was to look for a girl. And I found her. Harriet, her name is, a beautiful creature standing just under seven feet high and weighing 385 pounds. I first spied her leaning against the statue of the Founder, dozing lightly. I talked to her for several hours without effect. Only when I mentioned dinner did she stir. Her milky little eyes opened, she raised a brawny arm, seized my nape, and carried me to a chic French restaurant called Le Clipjoint where she consumed, according to my calculations, her own weight in chateaubriand.

After dinner she lapsed into a torpor from which I could not rouse her, no matter how I tried. I banged my glass with a fork, I pinched her great pendulous jowls, I rubbed the legs of my corduroy pants together. But nothing worked, and finally I slung her over my shoulder and carried her to the girls dorm, slipping several chaps in the process.

Fortunately, medical care for students is provided free at the college infirmary. All I had to pay for were a few extras, like X-rays, anaesthesia, forceps, hemostats, scalpels, catgut, linen, towels, amortization, and nurses. They would not, however, let me keep the nurses.

So, dear cousin, it is lack of funds, not lack of enthusiasm, that is keeping me from Marlboro Cigarettes—dear, good Marlboros with their fine blend of choice tobaccos and their pure white Selectrate filter and their soft pack and their flip top box.

Well, I must close now. My pencil is worn out and I can't afford another. Keep 'em flying.

Yr. cousin Mandolin Glebe

Tar Heels Whip Red Raiders, 8-1

Bobby Cox Goes Distance, Limits Colgate To 6 Hits

By LOU ROSENTHAL

Backed by some timely hitting by his teammates, Bobby Cox hurled a six-hitter to enable the Tar Heels to defeat Colgate, 8-1, yesterday at Emerson Stadium.

Dick Fleming hit his first home run of his career, with two men aboard in the second to give Carolina all the runs it needed to send the Red Raiders down to defeat for the second time yesterday.

Earlier, Don Coleman pitched a no-hitter to let VPI top the Raiders, 2-0, in a seven-inning unofficial preliminary.

The Tar Heels will play VPI at 12:30 today and either Colgate and VPI, or UNC and Colgate will play at 3 p.m. The first game will count in NCAA standings, but not the second.

Cox struck out eight batters, and walked only two, in notching his first victory of the season. Mal Lynch, the Raider captain, received his second loss of the season.

It was the first complete game by a Tar Heel hurler this season, and the win was UNC's third in a row, after dropping the opening game to Southern Illinois. Colgate's record is now 1-2.

Fleming, a diminutive sophomore from Durham, got hold of a letter-high inside pitch, and slammed the ball over the leftfield fence, 360 feet away. It was the first official homer for the Tar Heels, although Frank Gallagher hit Lenoir Hall two weeks ago in a practice game with Duke.

Fleming played shortstop last year for the freshmen, but was moved to third yesterday, as an experiment by Coach Walter Rabb, in place of Billy Taylor.

Dick Prindle had three singles in four trips to the plate, and Gallagher had a double and a triple in four at bats to lead the Tar Heel hitting.

Jim Speight had two singles in five trips to aid Carolina's attack. The Tar Heels had 10 hits for the afternoon.

Colgate started the scoring in the second, when Jim Heilman singled and stole second. He went to third on an infield out, and came home on a wild pitch by Cox. It was the last time a Red Raider got as far as third.

In the bottom of the inning, Ken Willard and Gary Black both walked, and Fleming trod up to the plate and knocked his homer, to send Carolina in front for keeps.

In the next inning, Prindle, Speight, and Heyward Hull singled in succession to load the bases. Willard then hit a fly to left that was caught, but Prindle tagged up and scored.

Gallagher then rapped a double down the left field line, to score Speight, and when Hull slid into home, the catcher dropped the ball to give the Tar Heels their sixth run.

In the seventh, Prindle singled, and went to third when Speight knocked a hit-and-run single. Hull then hit a fly to center, and Prindle scored after the catch.

In the eighth, Gallagher tripled down the right field line, and came in to score on Bob (Hot Rod) Hundley's single.

Cox scattered the Raiders' hits in five innings, as Colgate put two runners on base only in the first and ninth inning.

Coach Rabb said it was the "best game" all year for the Tar Heels.

Lacrosse Club Wins Opener

'Baltimore Express' Wears Down Randolph Macon

Coach Connie Steele's "Baltimore Express" had little trouble running away with Randolph Macon's Lacrosse team in the UNC club's season opener Thursday.

The Tar Heels, with six starters from the Baltimore, Md., area, coasted to an easy 14-6 victory.

Steele's men built up an early 3-0 lead, and by the end of the game all 45 members of the team had participated in the contest.

Steele's strategy in the hot-weather contest was to run the Virginians down. The visitors had only half as many men as Carolina and by inserting fresh men it didn't take long for the 2-1 odds to wear down Randolph Macon.

Jeff Parker and Tom Thayer combined for the first six Carolina goals. Parker scored the first unassisted, then Thayer netted three straight—each with an assist from Parker. Parker scored again unassisted, then Thayer got another on an assist from Bud Adams.

Parker, a 6-5 freshman who was All-Maryland as a high schooler, scored five of UNC's six assists and tallied three goals. Thayer had five goals with no assists. Adams had one goal and the other assist.

The other five Carolina goals were divided among five players.

The victory over a good Randolph Macon team was a big step in the lacrosse club's hopes to gain varsity status. In 1956 the sport was changed from a varsity sport and put on a club basis, allowing freshmen and graduate students to play.

Amherst will provide next week's competition ofr the Tar Heels. The Massachusetts team is on a spring tour and will scrimmage with the UNC club Tuesday, with a regulation contest scheduled for Wednesday.

Tennis Frosh Rip Goldsboro

By BILLY HATFIELD

UNC's freshman tennis team continued its winning ways yesterday afternoon with a 9-0 win over Goldsboro. Today they meet Asheboro Men's Club at 2 p.m. on the varsity courts.

In the singles there was little competition, as Carolina's number one man Don Long topped Otwell, 6-1, 6-2. In the number two court Carl Evans disposed of Barbera, 6-1, 6-1, while number three man Andy Goddard got passed Davis, 6-0, 6-3. The last three matches went to the Baby Netmen as Ken Oettinger won over Hales, 6-2, 6-2, Jeff Ruday over Langston, 6-0, 6-2, and Allan Neeley got Starline, 6-1, 6-2.

Doubles play saw Goddard-Evans top Barbera-Davis, 6-1, 6-2. Long-Ruday win over Otwell-Starline, 6-0, 6-2, and Thomas Smith downed Hales-Langston, 6-3, 6-2.

New freshman coach Al Hunt, in his second win this season, said, "These boys are taking shape nicely and should be more than ready for the Big Four powers."

VPI's Coleman Hurls No-Hitter

Don Coleman, a VPI senior from McKenney, Va., retired the last twenty Colgate batters in order, as he pitched a no-hitter in an unofficial game yesterday at Emerson Stadium.

The Gobblers got two runs in the second, and it was all the right-hander needed as he mowed down the Red Raiders.

Only an error by the first baseman on the first Colgate batter, and a base on balls to the next hitter marred Coleman's sterling seven-inning stint.

Gerry Barudin, who reached base on the error, was cut down trying to steal second, by the Gobbler catcher.

The runs were tallied in the second frame, when Dee Dalrymple walked, and Russ Anderson doubled. Dave Blake then singled in Dalrymple, and Larry Edens drove home Anderson with another base hit.

Blake had three singles in three at bats, and Dave Cahill had a double and a single in two trips to the plate.

Losing pitcher Phil Karli allowed only eight hits, as the Raiders went down to their third defeat in four games. (One other game was unofficial, as was this one, played as a preliminary to the UNC-Colgate match.)

The Gobblers have a 1-2 record, after losing two to Alabama.

It was the first no-hitter for Coleman in his career. The dark-haired hurler played more in the outfield than he pitched last year.

The last batter stroked the hardest hit off Coleman, a liner to left that forced the left-fielder to make a running catch about ten feet from the fence.

WAA Meetings

The WAA Golf Club will meet Tuesday, April 2, at 3:30 in Women's Gym. The Tennis Club will meet Wednesday at 3:30 on the clay courts by Cobb Dorm.

Swimmers Fail To Qualify

Two NCAA records were set Thursday night in Raleigh at the National Collegiate Athletic Association swim meet, one by Southern California's Jon Konrads in the 500-yard freestyle, the other by the Minnesota medley relay team.

Only one swimmer from the Consolidated University qualified for an event. State's Ed Spencer placed fourth in the 50-yard freestyle with a 21.9 time. Minnesota's Steve Jackman won the event as expected with a time of 21.2.

Ed Townsend of meet favorite Yale won the 400-yard individual medley in 4:22.5, and Lou Vittucci of Ohio State won the 1-meter diving event with 489.7 points.

UNC's Thompson Mann just missed qualifying for the 50-yard freestyle race with a time of 22.4 seconds, and Harrison Merrill would have qualified for the 500-yard freestyle if he had been 1.7 seconds faster. His time was 5:09.4.

Other Tar Heels in the event didn't fare so well. Freestyler Thad Adams had a time of 23.3 in the 50-yard race. Qualifying time was 22.3.

Frank Lea went 500 yards freestyle in 5:35.0, but qualifying time was 5:07.7.

Southern California, with strength in the 500-yard freestyle, scored the most points for the day—29. Yale was second with 27, and Minnesota got 21. But Yale is strong in the remaining events, whereas the other two have spent much of their strength.

Yesterday, trials and finals in the 200-yard events — butterfly, backstroke, breaststroke, freestyle, and individual medley were held.

Tonight, finals will be held in the 100-yard freestyle, backstroke, breaststroke, and butterfly, 400-yard freestyle relay, 1,650-yard freestyle and 3-meter diving. Trials begin at 1 p.m., finals at 8.

A SUCCESS STORY

The Carolina basketball school, which will be conducted in June by Coach Dean Smith and Assistant Coach Ken Rosemond at Chapel Hill, was met by an enormous list of applications from youngsters.

"We normally advertise the school," said Coach Dean Smith, "but this year we filled our enrollment for both sessions, which will be of one-week length each, before we could prepare an advertisement."

Coach Smith, who has chosen Lrry Brown, Yogi Poteet, Billy Cunningham, Ray Respass, Mike Cooke and Charlie Shaffer from the varsity as counselors, said he would probably expand the cage camp next year because of the heartening number of applicants.

FROM ANOTHER ANGLE

Dr. Sam Barnes, North Carolina wrestling coach, English professor and philosopher, has noticed the term "winning at all costs" being constantly used in editorial.

"Our wrestling squad lost more matches and spent more money than at any time in history," said Dr. Barnes. "Obviously we believe in 'Losing at all costs.'"

North Carolina Cindermen Compete In Florida Relays

North Carolina's track team travels south this weekend to Gainesville, Fla., where the Tar Heels will participate in the Florida Relays. The Relays, held annually, will bring together the outstanding athletes in the south and southeast.

The Tar Heels, coached by Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton, are unbeaten in dual meet competition this spring, holding victories over North Carolina State and Clemson.

UNC's strength at Gainesville should be in the distance events and the high jump.

A big surprise in the high jump has been Joe Huffman, who has been going higher every week. Against Clemson he matched the team's ace high jumper Tommy Clark at 6-5 as the two Tar Heels dominated the event.

A whole boxcar-load of distance runners makes UNC one of the strongest in the south in that department. The distance corps is made up of Bob Bennett, Charley Little, Larry Henry, Carmine Lunetta, Jerry Stuver and Art Mailet — plus other mainstays from UNC's ACC cross country champions.

Heath Whittle in the pole vault, Bob Hart in the 440, and Bill Croom in the broad jump are other Tar Heel point-producers.

MILLER IN PEACE CORPS

Robert A. Miller, assistant professor in the UNC School of Library Science, is now serving as a special consultant to the Venezuela Peace Corps Project in Venezuela.

Professor Miller will be in Venezuela until April 8. He is visiting various installations of the Peace Corps group which received training in librarianship at UNC last fall. Professor Miller's tour will include evaluating the various programs of library service offered by the Peace Corps.

HILLEL HOUSE

The Hillel House will have a Passover Seder Dinner on April 8. Reservations are $3 a person.

Spring Football Spirit High

By DON KING

Jim Szymaitis (pronounced SaMITE-is) is a 6' 2" fullback from Canonsburg, Pa. He was at the infirmary yesterday with strep throat.

Like most patients at the infirmary, he was complaining about the slow service, "Boy, I wish those doctors would hurry up."

Several other students were waiting for the same doctor.

"Hey, what are you up here for?" he asked.

We exchanged reasons for being there. This was his fourth day with strep throat.

Then the conversation turned to football and spring practice.

"We've really been hustling down on the field," he said. "Running everywhere we go. Not too many sprints or laps, but it's rough just the same.

"We've been working mostly on defense, blocking, and offensive plays. But I haven't been in on too much of it — I hurt my shoulder the first day of practice, and then this throat bit came up. Last Friday was the last day I scrimmaged.

"Spirit seems to be running pretty high," he commented. "Everybody is fighting for places on higher teams.

"I'm just on the fourth team, and still I have to fight real hard to stay there."

"Hey, when are you going to give me your address and phone number?" Jim called. She turned and flashed a big friendly smile at him.

Our talk turnedto Jim and Carolina.

"I guess there are really two reasons why I picked Carolina," he said. "I was offered scholarships to several schools, but I wanted to go south because I don't like cold weather. And Carolina was my choice because of its high academic rating.

What about the alumni game next Saturday?

"I know we can win if we put our backs to it," he asserted.

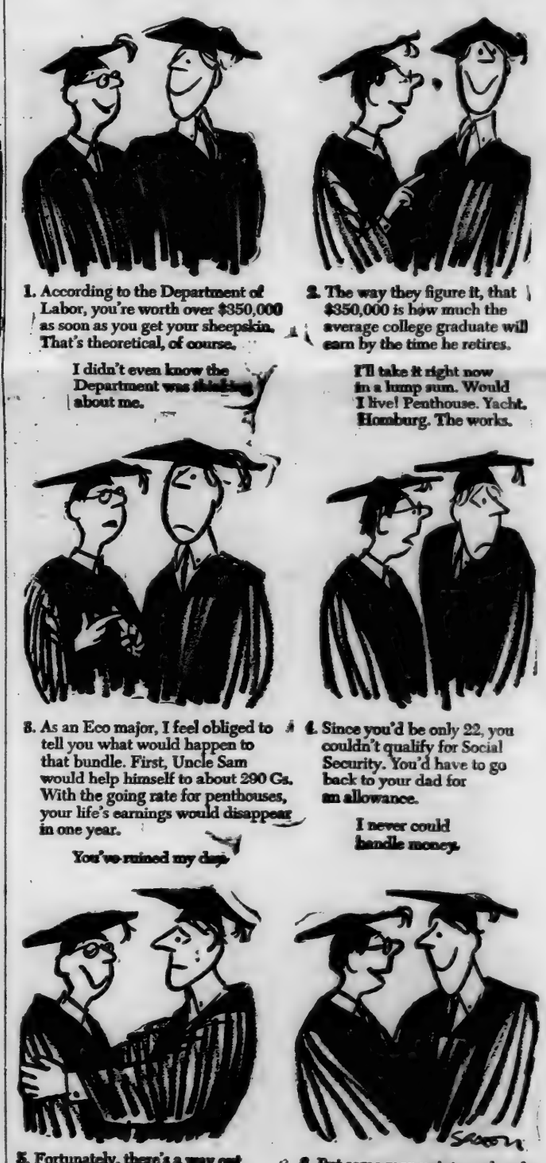
Just then the doctor called him in.

High School Baseballers Attend Clinic

More than 350 high schoolers and their coaches are expected for the 5th annual University of North Carolina baseball clinic here today.

Carolina coach Walter Rabb, clinic director, will lead off the activities at 10 a.m. with a session on hitting and bunting. Then Carolina freshman coach Bill Lovingood will demonstrate pitching techniques; N. C. State freshman coach Jim Edwards, catching; Randleman High School coach Joe Brookshire, shortstop and second base play; State assistant coach Junie Floyd, third base; Carolina grad student Len Dellolio, first base; and Carolina grad student Russ Casteen, outfield.

Floyd will also teach sliding methods and Rabb will go over various play situations.



Feature of the clinic will be a doubleheader that afternoon: Carolina vs. Virginia Tech at 1 p.m., and Virginia Tech vs. Colgate at 3.

At 12:30, the N. C. High School Baseball Coaches Association will hold their fourth annual meeting in Lenoir Hall.

Erickson Fires Friday For Insubordination

Carmichael Abolishes Sex; 'Your Impotency, Our System'

Sex was abolished yesterday by an executive decree issued by Dean of Women Katherine Kennedy Carmichael.

According to the decree, no activity having any relation to sex will be allowed "in the area north of Raleigh Road, east of Carrboro, west of the by-pass highway, or south of the Chapel Hill city limits."

The new ruling requires that at least two couples must always be present in classes, meetings with professors, and at Lenoir hall. Signs reading "Your impotency is our system" will be posted on all campus bulletin boards.

Student reaction to the decree was almost immediate. Mike Lawler, candidate for president of the student body, said, "Right now I am looking for another couple to go with me to Dean Carmichael's office so we can begin negotiations."

Larry McDevitt, also a candidate, told the DTH, "The University Party plans to run a poll on student opinion of this action."

The Dean said, "I always felt that the allowance of sex at UNC was a bit nasty. By abolishing it, I feel students will gain security in the knowledge that the Dean of Women is always with them, at least in spirit."

The no-sex decree will be enforced by a special committee of the administration's " gross board" which was instituted after the "Beat Book" parade. It is called the "Human Relations Committee," and is composed of Dean Carmichael, Dean Long, Otelia Connor, and Wade Wellman.

Miss Carmichael said, "Although some have charged that this will be hard to enforce, it has been my experience with sex that the abolishment will hardly be noticed."

She added, 'This is not intended as a restriction on the power of the Women's Residence Council (WRC) or the honor councils. I want them to feel perfectly free to enforce the new rule, assuming, of course, that at least two couples will be present at all meetings."

Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson said he supported Dean Carmichael completely in the erection of the new ruling. He said, however, "This may be a little difficult for the students in Victory Village at first, but I'm sure they will see the necessity in Miss Carmichael's decree."

The Dean of Women told the DTH that she thought "Sex was a noble experiment at UNC, but it has gotten out of hand. I feel it is my duty to see that my girls here are brought up so that they could, if they wished, be deans of women themselves some day."

TODAY'S CAMPUS BRIEFS

VEILS

Women students yesterday objected to the decree from the Office of Women that all coeds had to wear veils over their faces. "We think relations between the sexes has gotten too personal—when you get to the point where boys can see girl's faces; well, that's just too much," the dean of women said.

STUDENT AUTONOMY

Dean William C. Long and Dean Charles Henderson have been named co-chairmen of the Committee For Student Autonomy. "We think students should be completely autonomous," they said—"autonomous and completely independent — independent from any responsibility and control over their own affairs.

SPU

The Student Peace Union yesterday urged that military force be used to force Student Government to accept the peace terms recently offered by South Building. "We think it deplorable, yea dangerous, that the danger of holocaust is being increased by student government's refusal to accept peace terms," said a spokesman. In this time of grave crisis, with our children and their children threatened by the acceleration of the Classroom Cold War—force must be implemented to save peace."

CLOTFELTER

The Draft-Clotfelter-For-A-Sec-Term organization has been gaining strength in recent days. Under co-chairman Larry McDevitt and Richard Nixon the group is urging incumbent co-editor Jim Clotfelter to seek another term. McDevitt and Nixon said, "We think the Tar Heel needs more of the decent, fair-minded editorials we've had this year, and Jim is the man for that job."

It is understood that Mike Mathers is being flown in from New York to organize a write-in campaign for Clotfelter.

PRESIDENT

The Neal St. Bernard Award, given every year on a nationwide basis to whomever has found something which is the most difficult to find—the award this year goes to the two students sent out in November to locate the weheabouts of the President of the Student Body.

They were not seen again until February when they returned with reports that the President would soon return. He said later he had forgotten where his office was.

UP

The vice-chairman of the University Party yesterday charged the party with being controlled by a "power elite which is suppressing minority viewpoints." The UP chairman said the change was absurd.

The vice-chairman has been reported missing to the campus police.

MERCHANTS

The Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association yesterday elected Kemp Battle Nye president. Kemp promised to immediately begin lobbying in Raleigh for a new Blue Law. "This law would forbid merchants to do business with any persons who are not Baptists—maybe a couple of good Methodists from time to time, but no more," he said.

Y-COURT

Miss Nelda May Peachblossum, from East Mt. Airy, ws awarded the "Hi Y'All" award for 1962-63 yesterday when she said, "Hi y'all to 76 sturents beteen ber 10 and 11 o'clock classes. It is reputed the all-time record of 146 "Hiy'alls" was made by Miss Scarlett Gonewind—also famous sa the only complete illiterate to ever graduate from UNC with a B average.

Write-In TOM CRAIS For Pres. Carolina Athletic Assn.

ENDOWMENT — Joe Osagyefo, president of the campus NAACP, wave his arm in gratitude at the departing benefactor John Motley Morehead, who yesterday gave the UNC chapter a $2 million endowment. Osagyefo said the benefactor had at first offered them their own private sun dial, but the president had respectively said, "We all have our own watches."

Conspiracy Against Athletes Revealed

Athletic Director Chuck Erickson yesterday announced the firing of Consolidated University President William C. Friday for "insubordination."

Friday, according to the athletic director, has admitted conspiring to move the University's administrative offices out of the gym.

"It is clear," said Erickson, "that I had no other choice than to dismiss Mr. Friday after such activity as he has been engaged in."

Malcontents

It is rumored that the former university president had conspired with a group of malcontents to storm Woollen Gym and topple Erickson. The malcontents, including a former freshman tennis coach, several former DTH editors and student government leaders and a number of professors, have been rounded up and will be kept in solitary confinements in the basement of Woollen until further notice.

President Friday first came into disfavor with the Athletic Department when he objected to the Consolidated University seals being changed to include a football and basketball. Erickson said the objection "was contrary to University administrative discipline and a serious breach of unity. At UNC we stand united—for football, for basketball, for baseball, for . . ." (his voice trailed away.)

Class Credit

Friday became more unpopular when he registered a complaint at class credit being awarded for attendance at football games.

"This objection is definitely not forward-looking," said Erickson. We have expanded the educational levels of our state by this method —many alumni have put themselves through college again—some have even been awarded M.A.s in Athletic Participation and Contributions."

Mr. Erickson has not yet announced Friday's successor as University president. Several names, including "Bear" Bryant and Wally Butts, are being considered.

Men's Council Suspends 73 For Varied Charges

Seventy-three students were suspended from school by the men's honor council last night. The charges ranged from cheating on an alchemy quiz to public grossness.

The alchemy quiz incident arose after Prof. Vendetta Snarf returned to his class at the end of a session during which the test was being taken. Intrepid students had mimeographed a standardized answer sheet to the entire quiz.

Chairman of the men's council, Walter Dellinger, explained the mass cheating as "the inevitable result of such crip courses in which the proletariat compromize the bourgeois morality."

Snarf Refutes

Prof. Snarf refuted the charges that his course attracted "proletariat" by stating "I have always prided my classes as a prime example of free-enterprise competition."

The public grossness charges arose from several incidents in which students were accused of chasing each other nude through the Carolina theater. The scene was apparently provoked after a "provocative" animated cartoon featuring Porky Pig and Grizelda.

Other convictions were based on a number of occurences in dormitories. One student was accused of flushing an anvil down a bathroom facility in Craig Dorm. The added weight of a student who later attempted to use the facility resulted in the student and the facility plummeting down six stories into the basement laundry room. Several students in the laundry room suffered injuries, including shock.

Another dorm incident involved three students in Grimes dorm who were accused of operating a still in the basement. The device had been attached to a soft-drink vending machine which dispenced ginger ale, orange drinks, and cherry drinks. It was revealed, after eight hours of research and investigation by Asst. to the Dean of Men, William Harriss, that the machine also produced whiskey sours.

DORM HOUSING

The UNC Housing Department yesterday announced that an increase of $80 may be levied on students living in dormitories next year. The department pointed out that since an increased enrollment will men placing more students in each room, the rent hike was justified since the occupants would be enjoying more friendship, and benefiting from the experience of close living. It was noted that this would be particularly good training for NROTC students going into the submarine service.

Mot Makes Another Grant

John Motley Morehead yesterday announced a special supplementary Morehead Endowment Program to be awarded to the UNC chapter of the NAACP.

The great and glorious benefactor said the NAACP could use the $2 million endowment for any purpose they saw fit. "I've always thought highly of the plan to re-settle them in Liberia, but I won't insist the NAACP strictly follow my views . . ."

The NAACP said they planned to use the money to sponsor sit-ins at lunch counters near the main Union Carbide plant.

How?

Asked how this group managed to elicit such a contribution from Mr. Morehead, President Joe Osagvefo said, "We've learned how to humor whites for centuries. We just met him at the airport, snapping pictures with our cameras—which had no film, and frantically taking notes with pens that had no ink . . .

"In addition, we agreed to name our first six sit-ins after him and award an annual Big, Strong and Heavy award to the biggest, most wholesome, all-around lunkhead we can find," Osagyefo said.

Di-Phi Voted Out

The action came after the Di Phi voted last week to abolish student government.

The SG resolution charged that the "Di Phi has done nothing of any value this year, except to abolish us. This record of near-worthless activity forces student government to act responsibily and abolish them."

Arthur Hayes, ex-president of the Di Phi and member of student legislature, announced his resignation from student government after the vote. He resigned from the Di Phi in similar protest last week.

Sue Russell (UP) who introduced the SG resolution, said, "Now that the two major powers have destroyed themselves, I suppose the underdeveloped organizations will take over the campus."

A Careful Vote For NSA:
Two Good Candidates

Intelligent campaigns for the National Student Association on NSA Congress delegate positions are undoubtedly the most hopeless tasks on campus. It is well nigh impossible to adequately present any candidate's full views on the many and diverse issues which confront the Congress. It is inevitable that some candidates, for political or personal reasons have a decided edge over other candidates—an advantage not necessarily relevant to the qualifications of the candidates.

Virginia Carnes is, obviously, in a favored position to win—she is the only girl to run. This is a psychological advantage.

Inman Allen, as top-of-the-ballot and president of the student body, has dual advantages. He would make a fine delegate—except it is very doubtful he will go to Congress, and will undoubtedly give up his place to the UP to dispense as it wishes. Nevertheless, Allen can be expected to win.

Several other candidates have campaigned hard for the four NSA posts—with varying degrees of success.

* * *

Special attention should be brought to two of the candidates: Kellis Parker (SP) and John Ulfelder (UP).

Ulfelder has worked with the NSA committee and Student Legislature.

Parker has been active in the YMCA, is head of the "Challenge and Response" symposium this weekend, and is CCUN representative on the capus.

Both have proven their ability to assomilate and dissimilate complex ideas—taking their ideas and putting them into form, and learning and considering the ideas of others. Both have shown themselves to be close to the campus and to campus opinion—and both desire to bring NSA into closer contact with the students.

The ballot for NSA is long—eight names—and there are several competent candidates from which to choose. Outstanding among them are John Ulfelder and Kellis Parker.

We urge a careful and conscientious vote for NSA Congress delegates—these people will represent the UNC student body at the largest, most representative student meeting in the United States. Delegates must be chosen wisely, and on the basis of ideas, not party politics.

A Free Student Press

Every year a handful of censorship cases explode spectacularly upon the American campus scene. Regrettably, though the fact is often obscured by the explosions of outraged editors, a fair number of these cases are spectacularly silly. And students who are concerned with the state of student freedom are often too willing to stop at simple denunciations of deans, too reluctant to explore the causes of administrative interference, and too unclear—if not completely mistaken about what a free newspaper is and does.

I do not intend to apologize for the censors, but I am convinced that such a simple-minded approach is a positive disservice to the student press. Further, much of the blame can be laid on the excessive enthusiasm and pride of those few college papers which do, in fact, operate in nearly complete freedom.

Too many discussions of student freedoms begin and conclude with the simple recitation of absolute principles: "The student press should be free from administrative censorship," "Student organizations should be able to invite whomever they wish to speak on campus," "The doctrine of in loco parentis contradicts the basic idea of a university." Without denigrating the value of these propositions, it is obvious that mere ritualistic repetition of them is not enough.

Even the best of the student press exists in the context of pressures, and the editor's will is constantly being compromised by such factors as economics, politics (his own and his readers'), the noncooperatio nof crucial sources of information, and such mundane givens as his print-shop schedule and his advertisement pyramid. Despite this, it is reasonable to speak of such excellent college products as the Michigan Daily, the Harvard Crimson, the New Mexico Lobo, the Chicago Maroon, the Wisconsin Cardinal, and the North Carolina Tar Heel as being functionally free. The crucial fact about these papers, and done easily glossed over in the soothing rhetoric of freedom, is that they all preserve and utilize their autonomy through a dynamic process, not through the regular reiteration of platitudes.

Resolution

In Friday's editorial column we stated that Larry McDevitt had introduced a resoilution in the Student Legislature concerning the actions of the WRC, and the Apartment Rule. We were mistaken—the resolution was drawn up and printed, but previous to the Legislature meeting it was decided not to introduce the bill. (JC)

Support For Candidates...On And On

Kellis Parker Most Qualified

To the Editors,

Who is K. P.?

While passing through the kitchen (Y-Court) the other day, you probably noticed a white rhomboid (not unlike the familiar label) bearing the symbols KP-NSA. The NSA part by now had better be known—the National Student Association!

The KP part may take a little more thought. It takes someone a minute longer to brew a better cup of coffee. This someone (KP) has spent his time well in preparing himself for the position of responsibility as NSA delegate to the Indiana Conference this August: one Regional, four National, and one International Conference in Athens, Greece.

Experience of this nature makes Kellis Parker an excellent choice as a NSA delegate for the upcoming summer conference. But previous conference experience is not enough. The best candidate has not only experience and ability but also a real interest in the people of this campus. Kellis qualifies well on this point. Last Thursday was the International Student Symposium which Kellis had the responsibility to organize and lead as chairman. He has also served as chairman of the U.N. Education Committee and the International Students Committee of the YM-YWCA.

More recently Kellis was chosen as secretary of the YM-YWCA Executive Council and was tapped into the Order of the Grail. This background of experience and recognized ability with students local and foreign, this initiative and vigor qualify KP as best.

Who is K. P.? Skeets—Kellis: Kellis Parker, the best candidate for NSA delegate.

Teacher Likes Lawler-Ellis

To the Editors,

This is an unsolicited letter on behalf of Michael Lawler and Dick Ellis—indeed, I imagine both gentlemen will be rather surprised at my doing anything which would encourage them to spend their time on student government, rather than on their studies.

Like most graduate students, I take very little interest in campus politics. However, if we must have politics, I suppose it is desirable that we have good politicians. Unless these young men have changed very much since I taught them English as freshmen, they should be very well qualified for the positions they are seeking. Both of them were good students. The nature of the material which had to deal with in their themes—Mr. Lawler fought the Battle of Gettysburg with me, while Mr. Ellis went through the Somers Mutiny—made it possible for their teacher to judge several things besides their mechanical proficiency in English composition.

Both are intelligent, imaginative, and capable of honest and logical examination of evidence—that goes without saying, or I should not have given them the good grades I did. But besides that, in their very different ways, both of them showed a real concern for individual rights—a concern which was not, unfortunately, universal among the otherwise amiable young men I taught.

Mr. Lawler was, perhaps the more impulsive idealistic of the two; Mr. Ellis the more humorous and realistic—but they were both students who made you glad to be a teacher. I wish them good luck.

Business Staff Backs Co-Editors

To the Editors,

As members of the Business Staff of the DAILY TAR HEEL we are vitally concerned with the upcoming election for editor of next year's DTH. We are acutely aware of the qualifications most needed in drawing out the potential now resting in the TAR HEEL, among which are foresight, ability, experience, strength, knowledge, and a genuine desire to achieve.

We are quite familiar with the performances and abilities of all the candidates and are convinced that Dave Ethridge and Gary Blanchard come closest to possessing those necessary essentials and are far the best qualified to be editors.

We urge all students interested in a better DTH to vote for Ethridge and Blanchard as DTH co-editors in the April 2 elections.

Crais Right; Erickson Wrong

To the Editors,

Crais is absolutely correct. Take it from a former football player — class of '30. Get rid of Erickson—keep after him. Had no business ever making him Athletic Director in the first place.

Posters Mar Natural Beauty

To the Editors,

This afternoon as soon as I finished reading the scriptures, a practice I have followed for many years, I walked out into the nearby woods to meditate and pray. No sooner had I entered the forest than did I observe a scene which caused great tides of pathos to well up inside my heart. I began to beat my breast and run screaming through the woody labyrinth for there in the sight of God and mankind had some nefarious, insensitive vreature, beguiled by an over-zealous compulsion to defile and deface the handiwork of God, willfully tacked to a young, tender, tree—a campaign poster.

The maliciousness of the deed was readily apparent for seven staples were driven completely through the cork epidermis and almost through the secondary phloem. Quickly, and as gently as possible I extracted the tender plant from the oppressing instruments of evil design and continued my trek. As I plodded along I was heart broken to think that man could be so brutal and savage as to wound a young and beautiful plant. Somewhere within my heart a voice cried out, "Avenge! . . . Avenge"

No I thought to myself, man must not fight against man for the world knows too much strife. But then I came upon a wall of posters imploring the residents of Avery, Parker and Teague to elect as their Student Legislator the candidate whose picture deflowered the landscape . . . I could take no more, my righteous indignation was so stimulated that I declared that those responsible would rue this depraved deed for many years to come.

Good and kind inhabitants of Avery, Parker and Teague: do we want these heartless and undoubtedly evil men who slaughter little trees and cast blemishes over the landscape to represent us in the Legislature or for that matter, anywhere? I say, remember their names and when we go to the polls on Tuesday, cast your vote against the enemies and oppressors of nature.

Crais Was Irresponsible

To the Editors,

I read with surprise the editorial in Sunday's TAR HEEL concerning "L'affaire Crais" — surprise engendered both by the vitriolic tone and the vagueness of the criticisms leveled at Athletic Director Erickson by the writer.

I would like to say, first of all, that I know Tom Crais and consider him a friend. I do not know Mr. Erickson. My feeling is that, if Tom WAS guilty if impugning the integrity of the Honor Council and of the Athletic Department, and if a subsequent investigation revealed no evidence in support of Tom's statements, then Tom certainly deserved to be fired. Indeed, Mr. Erickson would have been derelict in his duty if he had NOT taken this action.

The editorialist seems to see all kinds of diabolical machinations coming into play in Mr. Erickson's scheduling of athletic events. It is difficult to conceive that Mr. Erickson is conspiring to prevent the student body from witnessing football and basketball games. What does the writer suggest that Mr. Erickson might gain from such a policy? I believe, however, that it would be proper and worth-while to inquire into the scheduling situation with the aim of clarifying it to the satisfaction of the student body.

I have had occasion to meet and talk with various members of the Honor Council. My impression is that they are a conscientious, dedicated group of students who are sincerely interested in fulfilling with integrity their responsibility to dispense justice with impartiality and fairness, I do not believe they would exonerate any student—athletic or not—whose guilt was conclusively established by evidence presented.

Thanks For Chest Carnival

To the Editors,

Our family would like to think the students who organized the splendid carnival Saturday. It was a delightful day for us and a welcome contribution to the recreation of Chapel Hill. The student booths were especially colorful and imaginative this year. We hope that the Chest has profited. Looking forward to another carnival next year.

Dick Akers Wins Support

Both candidates for Treasurer of the Student Body—Dick Akers, SP, and Gerald Thornton, UP—are sincere in their political efforts. The real difference is in the platforms of the two, and Akers has the better.

Akers realizes that by necessity a treasury department must be based on fiscal responsibility. He realizes a treasurer must be a bookkeeper, constantly aware of where each dollar goes.

This fiscal responsibility is of utmost importance to Akers. So is much more—namely his positive program, based on long range policy.

His program includes: 1) reactivation of carrier current which was allowed to fall by the wayside during the UP administration; 2) use of TV repair funds which nobody so much as knew about until Akers found and disclosed their presence, after having made a comprehensive examination of the present treasurer department; 3) use of existing funds for improvements of dorm social rooms, and heaven knows they need mproving; 4) investigation of the size of the general buffer fund of the Student Activity Fund Office; 5) the closing up of many loopholes which now exist in financial policy.

If Dick Akers is elected Treasurer and his proposed plans put into effect, the financial situation would be advantageous to the entire student body.

Akers has dynamic leadership abilities. I'd like to see him inn a position to use them even more than he has in the past when he led the SP and legislature on many issues.

Vance Barron (SP)

Vance Barron — NSA Statement

NSA has become "the most representative" and most important student association in the nation because it has concerned itself with problems of a much wider scope than "the parking problems of American students." Instead, NSA has been concerned with the total role of students: on the campus, in the nation and in the world.

Some critics feel that NSA has been overly concerned with political issues to the neglect of other important ones. This may be true, but NSA can never ignore its responsibility to speak out on issues that are of concern to students wherever they may be.

The House Un-American Activities Committee can not be justified by any "legislative" purpose. Very little legislation has ever arisen as a result of its investigation. Its sole function seems to be to garner publicity for its politically-minded members by playing on the anti-Communist sentiments of the general public. It is a great waste of the public money to be paying for the investigation of housewives and other such politically dangerous persons.

NSA should be concerned about HUAC because of its mandate to investigate the "propaganda activities" of un-American groups. "Propaganda" is a very loose term that is usually used in referring to the activities of the opposition by other groups that conduct "information campaigns." NSA stands for academic freedom and the right to pursue truth wherever it may lie. Any legislation that would curtail "propaganda" activities would be a violation of the First Amendment which states that "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech . . ." Let us become concerned with political beliefs only when they present a "clear and present danger." "Heretical" or unpopular ideas will clearly always be present, but will only be dangerous when they are alatated into action. When the peace is violated, then, and only then, does the government have the right or the responsibility to act.

The McCarren Act also appears to restrict the right of peaceful association that is an integral part of academic freedom. When a person is limited in the exercise of his rights by the implicit guilt of the nature of the association, he is denied the right to be assumed innocent until proven guilty. The burden of proof is on the government; that is the job of the FBI. The government should only have the right to punish criminal acts.

NSA is also concerned with the academic freedom and human freedom of students in other lands. NSA stands for the principle that students everywhere are all part of a "commonwealth of the mind."

I feel that NSA should be concerned with these national and international issues. These certainly are the most controversial ones that NSA will face. However, NSA can and must extend its more quiet efforts to strengthen student government and student welfare on its member campuses. One does not have to agree with every action or resolution that NSA may pass to believe that NSA can be of great benefit to this University.

Campus Fever — Griselda The Pig

By MARTIN KRUMING

Judging from her overwhelming reception in the upper Quad Wednesday night, the emergence of Griselda as a write-in-candidate for secretary of the student body has certainly added a bit of spice to the spring elections.

But aside from the humorous overtones, the running of a squealing pig for one of the top position in student government raises three interesting questions. First of all it challenges whether or not certain student government posts exist in name only. Could class offices be abolished and their absence be totally unnoticed?

At this point it should be noted that Tony Mason and Dennis Bowbrowske, Griselda's campaign managers and originators of the third candidate, maintain that this is not any reflection on the secretary of the student body. They realize that the office of secretary entails a great deal of responsibility and qualifications, but "It is the only way in which we get the entire student body to particpate," said Mason. If Griselda was a candidate or social secretary of the senior class only a portion of the students would have a voice.

And this brings us to the second question. Are certain political officers elected merely on looks and a non-political reputation without any regards to qualifications and platforms? If the students feel that this is the case then they have every right to question the position the of class officers.

Two slogans which have been voiced by Griselda's campaign managers are: "our candidate will not be elected on looks" and "there will be no mud slinging in the campaign." Aside from the obvious puns was any hidden significance intended? It certainly looks that way.

When Mason and Brobowske went before the elections board they were told that Griselda could not be entered on the ballot sheet simply because she was not a student. So the managers did the next best thing: endorsed Griselda as a write-in-candidate.

And this brings us to the final and perhaps most perplexing question of the three. What if this two year old pig is elected secretary of the student body on Tuesday?

'Son Of Flubber': Twice Is Enough

By LOUIS LEGUM

This is a cynical movie review designed to offend people who ordinarily like to read pleasant movie reviews. After all, what else can you do with a picture like "Son of Flubber?" If you say that you enjoyed the picture, then you obviously don't belong writing movie reviews. Which leaves only the face-saving alternative of saying that it's pretty awful. Which it is, of course. But then that makes other people angry who want to know how you have the gall to not like "Son of Flubber," and good ole' Uncle Walt who produced such a wholesome, entertaining picture.

There is no practical way out of the situation. Nothing is going to stop the relentless hordes from storming into the Varsity, proud parents of this cinematic all-week sucker. If you can't convinee a horse stampede to stop, why try with Disney - addicted movie - govers Could be it's something that's being slipped into their popcorn.

Actually, "Son of Flubber" does have its moments if you're in the mood to search for them. Disney hit on a good thing with "The Absent Minded Professor," and he has the killer instinct to move in for more. For one thing, except for some welcome additions, almost the entire cast has returned to do an encore for Disney's capital gains program. This includes such notables as Fred MacMurray, the zany professor, and his wife, Nancy Olson, as well as Keenan Wynn and Tommy Kirk. But the real star, naturally, is flubber, an all-purpose answer to mankind's problems, which also provides what little plot there is in the movie.

It so happens that a derivative of flubber, brilliantly namer flubbergas, is capable of stirring up a little trouble of its own. Under the inspired guidance of Professor Brainard, (MacMurray) it has the power to artificially create rain, unwittingly break any kind of glass pane, and even produce vegetables the A&P would be proud of.

Flubbergas' greatest virtue though, is that it gives the puny Medfield Tech football team a chance to beat bruising Rutland, and this is easily the most enjoyable part of the movie. Thanks to an admirable job with special effects, a super-inflated Medfield back is able to bound around in the air, literally sailing for touchdowns. The confounded commentary of Paul Lynde as a sports announcer, who can't believe what he's seeing, adds greatly to the scene.

There are several more amusing episodes, especially when they involve cagey Keenan Wynn as Alonzo Hawk, the owner of the Auld Lang Syne Loan Company, who's always around to collect the mortgage. Other bit parts by experienced camedians Bob Sweeney, Ken Murray, Ed Wynn, Elliott Reid, and Edward Andrews help to pick up the pace considerably.

However, too often the picture bogs down with MacMurray's hair-pulling marital problems that are further belabored by Miss Olson. "Flubber" should have made up its mind that it was going to be consistently silly, and then it really would have been a pleasant surprise. But maybe that's too much to ask from a script that should be receiving social security benefits by now.

Yet "Son of Flubber", as far as the box office is concerned, couldn't go wrong if it was a five hour documentary on needle threading, just because it's got a Disney label. In fact, before the week's over, it wouldn't be surprising to see Disney nail down an NSA appointment for good measure.

Years Ahead For Higher Education: The Picnic Is Over

An address delivered at the O. Max Gardner Award Dinner in Chapel Hill on March 22, 1963. Mr. Hechinger is Education Editor of The New York Times.

By FRED M. HECHINGER

The other day, I heard a scientist say that his grandmother used to ride in a horse-drawn carriage, but was deadly afraid of the automobile. His father drove an automobile, but was scared of airplanes. Now, he himself, was riding on planes, without fear, but was scared of space ships. But, he concluded, his little son showed no fear at all of space vehicles —and was instead scared to death of the horse-drawn carriage.

This is at once a fine description and an oversimplification of our problems. We are moving with a speed that is so fast that, in addition to the normal and comprehensible fears of each new generation about its future, we stand in danger of losing the comfort and assurance of the past. We leap ahead so fast that our own past often seems unfamiliar.

I am not for a moment trying to say that history no longer holds a lesson for us. On the contrary, the less stable our present and future become — and they are frighteningly unstable and unpredictable—the more important is it to try to learn from the past. There are great and lasting lessons to be learned — about the relationship between freedom and power or about the unreliability of human emotions as well as about the potential of the human spirit, when put to the test. But there are also great differences in the problems that confront us from those that confronted earlier generations. These are differences of such vast degree that the problems themselves appear new and not responsive to the lessons of history.

The issue of war and peace is the most powerful example. To believe that a study of the past must be based on the assumption that history repeats itself is the prologue to madness. It can only be the belief—or at least the hope—that the cycle of history can be broken that makes modern man continue his daily rounds with a certain degree of normality. I, for one, do not believe that this confidence is based on the mad military-scientific estimates that our civilization — or the Russians' or Gen. DeGaulle's, for that matter—could survive after some 80 million people had been wiped out on both sides. Since I consider man a not entirely irrational animal—if not always an intelligent one—I trust that even the proponents of the survival-by-shelter military concept really believe, out of uniform and in the bosom of their families, that man's survival is possible because history need not repeat itself.

I have selected this rather dramatic, cosmic example merely to drive home a theme which I want to apply on a much less striking but, in the long run, probably even more world-moving level: education.

As I look at the school and college scene today, I see convincing signs that changes are called for which are more than a repetition of educational history. Many of the camp-followers of the current reform movement still think that the reforms require only a minor re-arrangement of the curriculum. This is about as misleading as was the belief, in the days of progressive education, that things could be set straight by un-screwing the desks and rearranging them in an informal circle rather than in the old formal classroom setting.

It will be said—as it should be —that there are eternal constants in the education formula. The impact of great teachers on individual students will—or ought to—repeat throughout educational history. But this ought to be taken for granted—like the importance of integrity—and should not be used, as it is so often in the current debate, as an argument against reforms, new ideas and new teaching methods.

There are today signs of important educational changes which are more than a repetition of forgotten history. I should like to select two of these signs, from a reporter's point of view, and try to indicate what, I think, this may mean in the future re-arrangement of the entire venture.

The first, and in many ways the most basic upheaval, is the result of what I should like to call the new timing of education. On the extreme side of this process, you may have heard about the experiments which are being carried out by Dr. Omar K. Moore, the sociologist at Yale. With the aid of electric typewriters and some other paraphernalia, Dr. Moore has "permitted" two and three-year-old children to teach themselves how to read and write. Without selecting youngsters of exceptional intelligence, he has shown that, at age four, these children read books and even newspapers.

Now, Dr. Moore does not intend to imply that this experiment ought to prove that two-year-olds should be taught to read and write. What his experiments and those of other investigators have shown and attempted to prove is merely that human learning capacity is quite different from what has been traditionally assumed. And, in fact, the automatic teaching by the modern child's surroundings shows this to be true every day in our ordinary lives. Our own son, not yet two years old, counts among his still rather limited vocabulary the word "radio" (which may indicate how reactionary a home we really are since Dennis the Menace, at his age, was already able to cope with the word "television." I hasten to say that we are not anti-TV intellectuals but we are sufficiently ignorant of the secrets of electricity to have tried to protect our son from the danger of electrocution. I am sure that, before long, he will be able to explain to us why our fears are old-fashioned and unfounded.)

This is not a picayune example. First-grade primers today are still largely based on so-called experts' reading lists who, in turn, based their estimate on the vocabulary of children of a long-dead world. The youngsters who are being asked to read "See Spot Run," have been brought up on a heavy fare of rocketry, world travel and space exploits. One reading expert who refused to believe the experts made an actual check of the words children could recognize — even before they had learned to read — and found that among them is, for example, "detergents." Aside from being a triumph of indoctrination by Madison Avenue, it is also a hint of the need for a readjustment in the timing of education.

Examples abound. The new approach to mathematics starts with geometric concepts in kindergarten, and Mrs. Bunting, Radcliffe's president, pointed out a few weeks ago that the point at which parents find themselves incapable of helping their youngsters with their math homework is reached earlier with every succeeding child.

In foreign languages, the early start in elementary school speaks for itself. And it adds another dimension to the change in timing. For while many of the opponents to current reforms keep warning that reading and arithmetic may actually be pushed on children too soon for their own good, the case for early foreign language study can be supported psychologically even more potently than intellectually. The past tradition of introducing teenagers to their first foreign-language experience was as wrongly timed as education can be. Teen-agers are excessively self-conscious. They fear everything "strange" and different. Instead of enjoying it, they ridicule it. By contrast, small children like nothing better than the new and unknown. They are masters of imitation. They lack inhibitions.

One further aspect of the change in timing must deal with a reversal — drastic and sweeping — of one of the worst errors committed by American educators and psychologists: the excessive rushing of physical and social development of children, accompanied by excessive slowdown in intellectual growth. In its most generally visible form this lack of alignment is demonstrated by the way in which even educators have condoned exaggerated stress on, and competition in, sports while they have put the brakes on so-called academic pressures. In one of the most vicious applications of this dangerous fallacy, a sexual development — as in early dating —has been permitted practically to crowd out normal, carefree childhood. During the same period that saw remedial English become almost routine fare in colleges, social dancing moved into the elementary school. In doing extensive nationwide research for our book, Teen-Age Tyranny, my wife and I found not only that early marriage was the natural consequence of "going-steady" in junior high school but we were shocked to learn that the public schools of one major city are instituting special sections for pregnant girls between the ages of 12 and 16.

My theme today is not directly concerned with the need to retard the timing of social education. What is of immediate importance to our topic, however, is the new timing of academic and intellectual progress — a speed-up which is aided by the world in which we live and which, fortunately, has already begun.

The second major influence on education today is the place of science in the modern world, and the impact of this on the educated man. Please, keep in mind that I am speaking as an old-fashioned man, educated in the liberal arts tradition, very much like your own. And remember, too, that I am not speaking specifically about the education of the future specialist in science or technology. I might add quite honestly that I am speaking — because of my prehistoric education — as something of a Displaced Person in the modern world. I don't understand much of the current national policy debate because I am incapable of understanding the underlying scientific currents. I am sufficiently confident in my own mental capacity to believe that, since I am unable to understand much of the debate, the great majority of Senators, government executives and even White House aides are not much better off than I am. think it is intolerable for us to satisfied to send those who follow us into the world as intellectually crippled as we are.

Nor is the question just one of policy. The development of physics, computer mathematics — and, I might add, the imminent developments of similar magnitude in genetics and bio-chemistry — combined with their implications for the technology of today and automation of tomorrow — all this has given to current events a strong, all-pervading science coloration. Even though most of us don't yet realize it, the day is past when it was permissible — even desirable — for "intellectuals" to say at cocktail parties that we are scientific illiterates and proud of it.

Part of the importance of the leapfrog advance of the scientists is directly related to the problems and the future of general, rather than merely scientific, education. The physicists, for example, have managed to establish a closer link between their science — and philosophy (and in Einstein's case, even with religion) than have many highly specialized humanists. It was left to a mathematician to re-introduce logic into the school curriculum — and to do it in elementary school. And as we studied the problems of our troubled teen-agers, we found greater promise for a road back to ethics and commitment among those who have become infected with the integrity of a laboratory experiment.

Two of the leading physicists of our time — quite independent of each other — have said that the vital ingredient in scientific success is not the much-talked-about scientific method but rather the unleashing of imagination and intuition. And when we pointed to the astonishing achievement by young scientists and jokingly suggested that science, like sports, may throw its talent on the human trash pile at an early age, one of the scientists replied: "The danger is not hardening of the arteries, but hardening of the attitudes."

Here, then, is the importance of science to all education. Much of our crisis today, I believe, is caused by the inability of the humanists and the social scientists to keep their intellectual and theoretical arteries from hardening. While the scientists give free play to unlimited flights of imagination and test their resulting theories in practice, the non-scientists remain the prisoners of political, economic and social myths, without either imagnation or practical testing of new ideas. It is not surprising therefore that, driven by envy and an understandable inferiority complex, the non-scientists are asking for an artificial balancing of their own sphere of influence with that of the scientists. I suspect that they could serve the world — and education — more effectively if they tried harder to compete with the scientists in making imagination, intuition and daring experimentation in their — the non-scientists's fields — active forces in mankind's destiny.

Taking these two revolutionary forces — the new timing of education and the all-pervasive impact of science — together, what is likely to be the shape of the college of the future? I believe that the four-year college primarily as a dispenser of general education is on the way to becoming an anachronism.

This sounds dangerously like treason. I must plead for a fair hearing. It is not general education that is obsolete but the almost exclusive devotion of the four undergraduate years to its acquisition. The fact is that general education was originally introduced into the colleges because nobody else used to provide it. Several decades of non-intellectual, if not downright anti-intellectual high schools, handed on to the campuses masses of students who were barely trained and far from educated.

College moreover, in those happy and non-competitive days, was a pleasant, interlude for a small minority. Most of the members of that privileged minority itself, after graduation, hoped to use their education as the trademark of well-roundedness. The rest — a small proportion — went on to the specialization of law, medicine, science or other professions.

The new timing of learning has begun to change all this — as has the new realization that a tough, competitive world requires a solid foundation of general knowledge of a vastly greater slice of the population. With the impact of the school reforms, the high schools are increasingly takingf on responsibility for the general education plus the mechanics of learning. Admittedly, it will take a long time before this wave of the future ingulfs all, or even the majority, of the nation's schools. But the tide has been strong and swift enough to give at least to the high-quality colleges a new generation of students who are rapidly beginning to consider the traditional general education fare as an insult.

Many college educators today discuss this trend as though it were evil — when in fact it is exactly what they have been asking for during all the years of heaping scorn on the low-quality high schools. In their nostalgic attempts to stop the clock, many of them speak with contempt about the new trend toward specialization as the enemy of the liberally educated man.

A former member of an Ivy League university complained that these institutions are rapidly degenerating into waiting rooms for graduate schools.

This is, of course, true. But is it bad? If we assume that the improved high schools can offer much, if not all, of the traditional undergraduate general education and if we understand that advanced, specialized education will be required of an ever-growing number of college students, then it ought to be welcomed that undergraduates want to begin to probe deeper rather than to prolong spreading themselves thin. College teachers and university scholars have long pretended that they despised the survey courses they had to offer. Now that their students are getting ready to join those sentiments, it would be ironic if the required general education menu were suddenly to be defended as the last outpost of the liberally educated man.

I do not believe that the undergraduate college should go to the extreme of turning itself into a junior professional school, permitting students exclusively vocational specialization. But I believe that the trend — which begins with literate primers in first grade and with mastery of a foreign language before college — makes it both desirable and inevitable that college will increasingly become a place of serious scholarship. For some, it will be the transition to professional study; for all, the equally important induction to deep and lasting interests for a lifetime. I am even willing to predict that, within a relatively short time, the Bachelor's and the Master's degrees will virtually merge.

Nostalgic skeptics will ask: what about our dream of the Complete Renaissance Man? What about it? It will remain a dream as — for most men, even in the Renaissance — it always was. It is an important dream and a vision which good education must always keep alive. But in the interest of reality, the hope that college today or in the future can pretend to offer in four years of general study a pass to the exclusive Club of Renaissance Manhood must be admitted to be sheer fantasy.

All of this, I believe, holds special significance for the university which includes both the undergraduate college and the schools of advanced and professional study. The maturing of the college — as it rapidly ceases to be the remedial interim phase charged with completing the high-schools' unfinished business — will feel more comfortable in the company of the university. The trend is a natural one: as a result of school reforms and the new timing of education, the junior high school will increasingly detach itself from the elementary school and grow closer to the high school. And, in much the same fashion, the college will be able to turn its sights ahead and upwards rather than back to the schools. Advanced placement has already had the effect of letting the good academic high school hitch its wagon to the stars of the college.

I stress the upward pull of the magnet of improved learning at every level because it alone can give back to the college the full, willing and even enthusiastic teaching services of the universities' senior scholars. No amount of sermonizing could achieve this as long as much of the college curriculum had to be superficial at its best and remedial at the worst. It is not reasonable to expect senior scientists to teach required courses designed to offer freshmen basic concepts they could have grasped in junior high school. Nor is it fair to expect that literary scholars teach undergraduates the elements of grammar or to drill them in basic composition.

But as the improved high schools permit the colleges to grow up, the term "community of scholars" — from college through professional school— assumes a new meaning and promises a new sense of excitement.

To this trend, then, can safely be added the next challenge: for college and university together to offer an infinity of educational stewardship to all their graduates for a lifetime. This is important now that even the most highly educated and skilled professionals need constantly more education to keep up with the world and their own fields. It is particularly important for women graduates for whom the colleges and the universities must turn themselves into real Alma Maters — ready to do more than welcome alumnae at reunion time — ready instead to help them remain up-to-date even while they raise their families.

There are two imperatives in education today:

The first is the realization that all modern learning — general as well as specialized — humanist as well as scientific — will have to be continuing and self-feeding as never before. The old image of the liberal arts colleges' product reminds me of the ripened apple — lovely and finished. I should like to think of the college product of tomorrow more as of a tough plant, with roots sunk deep, able to continue to grow independently in a tough world.

The second imperative is that education must be taken with literally deadly seriousness. The days of college as a romantic luxury are as surely past as are the years when a child's interest in Eskimos was considered as valuable as his competence in reading. We may never know whether this is cause for grief or rejoicing.

We know it is a fact.

We know that the leisurely, comfortable all-American picnic is over.

We know that, whatever the continuing value of the well-rounded man, sharpened minds will be the cutting edge of survival.

V-P And Editor Candidates Win Support

Bob Spearman Active Leader

To the Editors,

We would like to endorse Bob Spearman for Vice-President of the Student Body because of his outstanding ability and wide experience. Bob is a sophomore from Chapel Hill, majoring in political science and history.

He came to Carolina after graduating at the top of his class and lettering in football, basketball and tennis. As President of the Freshman Class here, he proved that class offices can be significant by setting up really active class committees, instituting a class scholarship fund selecting a "Best Freshman Teacher," running a program of class dances and having a series of seminars with outstanding leaders around the state.

Elected to the Student Legislature, he has been one of its most efficient members and has served as UP Floor Leader as well as doing a fine job as chairman of the committee to investigate the possibilities of a co-op, similar to those at Harvard and Texas, which would enable Carolina students to save considerable money. He was also chairman of the Communications Committee, which sponsored the series of Dorm Spotlights in the Daily Tar Heel. Last fall in Raleigh, students from all over the state elected him Vice-President of the State Student Legislature.

Bob has proved he can be one of the most active leaders in Student Government and still do excellent academic work, as he has been on the Dean's List every semester. He is very familiar with the operation of the University, the Administration and Student Government, since he has grown up in Chapel Hill.

Bob Spearman is an efficient organizer, is a hard worker, has an intelligent approach to Student Government problems and has always worked for the welfare of his fellow students. We believe he is the best candidate for Vice-President.

Farran Has Sensible Approach

To the Editors,

After hearing the speeches of the candidates for the editorship of the DTH, I have become firmly convinced of three factors.

ONE: People have been taken by the glittering program of the five-point plan. The shining policies of the five-point program have coerced some into believing that the business of putting out a campus newspaper every day is nothing but a Camel-smoking reporter yelling "Stop the presses!" They fail to realize that the Tar Heel is not merely a bunch of scoop-happy reporters, but a lot of hard work. Some people have also been misled by the mudslinging tactics of the other candidates. Justifiable criticism is always warranted. But this criticism must not deter the voter from basing his votes on a sensible appraisal of the candidate's ability.

TWO: This ability should be based on a straight forward approach. The Tar Heel needs and deserves someone who is primarily interested in the campus and who will work to see that he has a capable staff and that his editorial policy is both realistic and comprehensive.

THREE: Chris Farran is such a person. Not only has he avoided presenting the Tar Heel as a glorified game of news-seeking but he has also presented a straight-forward policy covering all phases of campus life thoroughly and completely. This sort of realistic approach is what the Tar Heel, or any campus organization needs, and as far as the Tar Heel is concerned I think that Chris Farran is such a person. His past positions have demonstrated his ability and interest in the Tar Heel. In short, when taking a realistic view of the whole situation, one must realize that Chris Farran is the man for the job.

GM Should Reach More

To the Editors,

It has been proven in the past and also this year that Graham Memorial has done a tremendous job in its presentations of various activities and concerts. It takes a large amount of work to bring and sponsor this entertainment at Carolina. Their idea of promoting an all-campus weekend during the 26th and 27th of April seems to be a very good one and one that will be very successful.

The magnitude of this success is of concern to me and some of my friends. With the concert open to dates from other schools (great!), I am wondering where all those who will wish to see it will sit, as Memorial Hall seats only 1700, and there is only one concert. It seems that a "blanket" concert held in Woollen Gym would be much better, as it would provide adequate seating for all. If not, what about an outdoor lawn concert? I feel that these possibilities should be looked into, and that either one would be welcomed by the campus. There is still enough time to make adequate preparations.

Charles Ray Jones

Farran Wants Campus Paper

To the Editors,

Chris Farran has presented himself to the student body as a candidate for editor of the DAILY TAR HEEL. In my opinion, he possesses all the qualities a good editor should exemplify—interest, experience in several areas of journalism, a dedication to his work.

Chris has expressed his desire to see the TAR HEEL be a CAMPUS newspaper with a competent staff to report CAMPUS affairs. He would like to have an organized reporting situation with reporters covering each dorm, fraternity, sorority, club, and organization.

As for experience, Chris was editor of his high school newspaper in Winston-Salem, has been reviewer, co-feature editor, and news editor on the D.T.H. staff, and has been on the staff of the Winston-Salem Journal for three summers. His summer work has given him experience in a considerable variety of new writing situations.

Chris would like to see a complete change in the TAR HEEL. With his creative ability, he could publish an effective new newspaper. Renovation of the editorial page, more features and sports are areas he intends to concentrate on if elected.

When you go to the polls April 2, I say vote for Chris Farran, obviously the best man on the ticket.

SG Practical Aid To Students

To the Editors,

I read with some distress a letter written by Nat Dean, President of the Di-Phi, concerning the "absurdity" of Student Government at Carolina.

Let me preface my remarks by saying that Student Government is not and never could be completely autonomous. As long as ultimate responsibility for the success or failure of the University lies with the Chancellor, it is quite obvious that he and his agents (the administration) must exercise some degree of control over the functions of the University. For this reason, the students CAN NOT be given full and final authority.

I do not intend to attempt to justify Student Government on an idealistic basis; we can only hope to approach as nearly as possible the ideals of Student Government: we can never fully realize them. I shall confine my defense to a very practical and a very real approach.

In his letter, Mr. Dean posed the question, "Why then, waste the time, the talent, and the money required by our 'autonomous' student government?" I would answer that the time and the talent involved in Student Government activities is all given quite willingly by over 600 students who have been elected or appointed to Student Government positions. No-one forces them to "waste" their time or talent. As far as the waste of money is concerned, the budget would remain substantially unchanged, regardless of whether the administration or the students were in charge of campus affairs. We would still have to pay for a newspaper, entertainment, an Orientation Program, etc. What's more, the many thousands of man-hours that are now freely given by students, would have to be paid for. The new administrative positions that would have to be created would probably cost well in excess of $500,000 annually.

As Vice-Chairman of the Men's Honor Council, I too was distressed by Dean Carmichael's recent actions. But is the solution to this problem to urge students NOT TO VOTE?

Mr. Dean's argument is weak, at best. If he feels that college students are incapable of handling campus affairs, let him base his criticism on that issue, not on the lack of complete autonomy. We must face reality, and only by trying to understand the administration's viewpoint and discussing our differences of opinion with them may we eventually work out an equitable solution. Nothing is accomplished by throwing in the towel at the first setback.

Frankly, at the moment my only complaint with Student Government concerns Student Legislature's approval of a rather substantial budget for the Di-Phi.

Father Of Preventive Medicine

Dr. Rosenau To Be Honored

By TOM McHANEY

"The Father of Preventive Medicine," the first director and dean of UNC's School of Public Health, the late Dr. Milton J. Rosenau, will be honored here during dedication ceremonies for the School's new building.

Dr. John Wright, professor of public health administration, will be speaker for the occasion Sunday, April 7, at 10 a. m. A Magnolia tree, to be known as the Rosenau Memorial, will be planted on the lawn in front of the new building. A member of Dr. Rosenau's family will make the response.

"The first duty of government is to protect the health of its citizens, for without health and vigor nations perish," was the creed on which Dr. Rosenau founded the infant Division of Public Health when he came here as its first director in 1936.

He was already the "Father of Preventive Medicine," then; behind him lay a distinguished career as teacher, scientist, author. In 1913, he had organized and directed the nation's first school of public health, then called a school for health officers and conducted jointly by Harvard and MIT, but founded five years before the Johns Hopkins School of Hygiene and Public Health, the first to bear the name, was established.

A Disease Detective

He was an epidemiologist, "a disease detective," as he called it, and he championed the cause of preventive medicine in the eradication of all man's deviling diseases.

"Epidemics have been my hobby for 40 years," he said to a crowd of health authorities here in 1936. "There is more in preventing them than in stamping them out. We find monuments erected to heroes who have won wars, but we find none commemorating anyone's preventing a war. The same is true with epidemics. Preventive medicine, however, is coming into its own."

He was a teacher with a philosophy, a man who could communicate both ideas and ideals to his students. By one who was there, it has been said that "Probably, short of construction blasts, nothing has ever rocked the building as did the unaccustomed applause from the auditorium the day Rosenau closed the course in epidemiology in December, 1945."

When he died in 1946, at the age of 77, Dr. Rosenau had given the school at UNC more than just 10 fruitful years of his life. The creed he formulated was carried on and developed.

It is found in the philosophy of the man who succeeded him, Dr. Edward G. McGavran, the School of Public Health's present dean. Dr. McGavran's philosophy, that public health's duty is "the scientific diagnosis and treatment of the body politic. The community is public health's responsibility" found a healthy, fertile environment in which to grow here and it has girdled the globe.

Spirit Of Public Health

So it will not be Dr. Rosenau's spirit alone that will be honored here Sunday, April 7, with the planting of a Magnolia tree, the Rosenau Memorial; it will be, as well, the spirit of public health that has followed in many dedicated men like Dr. Rosenau, who have devoted their lives to better life for all men.

Dr. Rosenau, who said many wonderful things, expressed this larger spirit in a prayer he used to give all the students who took his classes. It reads:

"Preventive medicine dreams of a time when there shall be enough for all, and every man shall bear his share of labor in accordance with his ability, and every man shall possess sufficient for the needs of his body and the demands of health. These things he shall have as a matter of justice and not of charity.

"Preventive medicine dreams of a time when there shall be no unnecessary suffering and no premature death; when the welfare of the people shall be our highest concern; when humanity and mercy shall replace greed and selfishness; and it dreams that all these things will be accomplished through the wisdom of man.

"Preventive medicine dreams of these things, not with the hope that we, individually, may participate in them, but with the joy that we may aid in their coming to those who shall live after us.

"When young men have vision the dreams of old men come true."

Creative Writing Professor Rehder Publishes Anthology

Popular stories by the biggest names in short story fiction are gathered in a book edited by a University professor of creative writing.

Jessie Rehder, assistant professor of English, has brought together 26 stories by 26 top authors under the title "The Story at Work." The book has just come off the press. Publisher of the handy anthology is The Odyssey Press, Inc., of New York.

Authors included in the compendium are Fitzgerald, Hemingway, Sherwood, Anderson, Faulkner, E. M. Forster, Katherine Mansfield, Kipling, Turgenev, Edith Wharton, James Joyce, Henry James, and many others.

Miss Rehder describes her anthology as a reader's book. In her forward to "The Story at Work," she says "each story that appears here has the 'creating' power of good fiction."

The stories in the book are divided into three sections: "What a Story Says"; "How a Story Works"; and "What a Story Does." Each story in the first two sections of the book is followed by brief comments which "are meant only to stir up the reader's responses and provide a trigger for spontaneous discussion," according to Miss Rehder. The comments have been supplied by Miss Rehder and by students in her creative writing class on "Introduction to the Short Story."

Spencer Willard Blanks Gobblers For Carolina's Fourth Straight, 1-0

Heels Win 3-Hitter

Spencer Willard pitched Carolina to a 1-0 shutout win over VPI yesterday, and allowed only three hits.

The pitching duel was scoreless until the bottom of the fifth inning when the Tar Heels' Milford Cox scored an unearned run to give UNC the game.

Both pitchers went all the way with Tech's Lee Melear giving up five singles to the Heels.

Neither team mustered a serious threat until the Tar Heels got their lone run in the fifth. With two out, pitcher Willard got a free pass to first on balls, and Milford Cox came in to run for him. Cox stole second while third baseman Dick Prindle was up at bat. Then Prindle slapped a slow grounder to short and on the throw to first, the first baseman missed the ball, allowing Cox to come home. Prindle stole second, but the next man up flied out to end the inning.

Coach Walter Rabb's diamond men allowed only one Gobbler to get past first base. In the first inning, leadoff man Dee Dalrymple, the shortstop, got an infield hit. The next batter fanned, but rightfielder Dave Blake hit into a fielder's choice, forcing Dalrymple at second. Then he stole second. However, first baseman Larry Edens grounded out to end the inning.

In the third inning Dalrymple again got an infield hit, and the only good punch the Gobblers could muster came in the fifth inning when Melear rapped a single between center and right.

In the seventh inning Carolina threatened with a man on third, but could not bring him in. Dick Fleming, the third baseman, led off with an infield single, and advanced to second on Bernie Isgett's sacrifice bunt. Pitcher Willard grounded to first, sending Fleming to third, but Prindle popped up to the shortstop to end the threat.

Only one error was scored by each team. The Gobbler's helped Carolina win. The Heels' allowed a man to get to first safely.

UNC got the only double play of the game. In the second inning, VPI's Bobby Joe Quesinberry reached first on a late throw by Carolina's second baseman. Then Mike Cahill, the centerfielder, grounded to Jim Speight who stepped on second and rifled the ball to first for the double play.

Dalrymple was the leading hitter of the game with two singles. Melear got the other Tech single.

Willard didn't allow a hit after the fifth. He struck out 4 and walked 2. Melear, a southpaw, fanned 4 Heels and gave up 3 bases on balls.

The victory was the fourth straight for Carolina after losing their opener to Southern Illinois. The next game for the Tar Heels will be against Delaware here on Thursday.

Elis Take Over First In NCAA Swimming Meet

The Yale Elis thrashed into the lead Friday night in the NCAA swimming meet at Raleigh with a resounding victory in the 200-yard freestyle and places in other events.

The tremendous Eli freestylers captured first, second, and third places in the 200-yard race, and, as a result, replaced Southern California in first place.

Yale went into last night's finals with 52 points. SC had 47, and the others were far behind. Michigan had 27, Ohio State 24, and Minnesota 23.

Freestyle winner Steve Clark set a meet record of 1:46.3. His teammates Dave Lyons and Ed Townsend were close behind. SC's Jon Konrads and Per Ola Lindberg tied for fourth in the event with a time of 1.47.0.

Dick McDonough of Villanova won the 200-yard butterfly race in the record-tying time of 1:57.3. Mike Mealiff of SC was second in 1:59.

In the backstroke, Michigan's Ed Bartsch came in first in 1:57.8. Stanford's Martin Hull took the breaststroke in 2:17.0.

The 200-yard individual medley went to Harley Mull of Ohio State with a time of 2:01.6. Yale's Townsend took second.

No swimmers from either State or Carolina were able to qualify for any of Friday's event.

Last night, the final night of the meet, races in the 100-yard events, the 1,650 freestyle, and 3-meter diving were held.

Junior Edge

Carolina's quarterback with the active arm will lead the Tar Heels in the Varsity-Alumni clash next Saturday. The Heels will be out for revenge after last year's defeat from the grads.

Promise Of Raise Keeps CU Profs Here—Friday

Hopes To Get $5 Million In Salary Raises

By GARY BLANCHARD

Some professors are being kept on the three campuses of the Consolidated University "on promises," anticipating passage by the General Assembly of a $5 million appropriation for salary increases, President William C. Friday said Saturday.

In a luncheon address to the N. C. Editorial Writers Conference here, Friday said he has "great hopes" the appropriation will pass but this will only match similar increases at other major universities.

"We've simply got to get used to the idea of paying $18,000 to $25,000 salaries to faculty members," he said.

Friday agreed that "this is the shopping season for faculty members" but said he couldn't predict how many will leave UNC.

"Our people are sought after," he said, explaining that some of the toughest competition comes from nearby Duke University, which ranks as the fourth best-paying university in the nation.

Considering the instructional needs created by expanding enrollment, he said, another problem of "real magnitude" is "where are our instructors going to come from?"

He said the University faces two problems as it looks to the future: adjusting to the increasing demand for higher education and encouraging more children to become better-educated.

At present, he said, "there is an enormous waste of talent" because of the lack of encouragement.

Friday noted that the Senate and House Committees of the General Assembly have passed the major recommendations of the Governor's Commission on Higher Education and those of a special trustee's committee.

"I hope the General Assembly will move ahead to approve the remaining parts," he said. "No other pending legislation is as significant to North Carolina's future as this bill."

He said the action represents the "second major development" in the University's history, the first being consolidation of Woman's College, State College and UNC in 1932.

"We moved from stabilized allocation of function to greater interdepartmental cooperation," he said, "not to centralization of power in the President's office."

Friday said this reflects the development of a "doctrine of complimentary strengths" within the University, with the curricula of the three institutions complementing rather than duplicating each other.

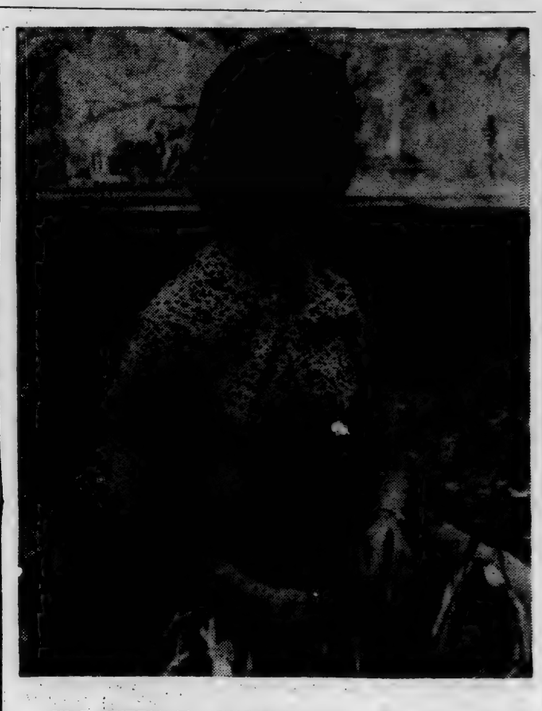
He said the state has "not been building to meet the enrollment problem" because of the failure of the 1961 bond election.

"We have reason to believe that substantial help will be provided by the General Assembly this session," he said, "but will it be enough?"

"This is why I believe so strongly in the community college system recommended by the Governor's Commission—it will help to handle the enrollment problem at low cost."

He pointed out that the location of Community colleges were not designated but only suggested by the Commission on the basis of population projections.

Senior Cited After Child Struck By Car



A 10-year-old Chapel Hill girl escaped serious injury yesterday afternoon after being struck by a car driven by a UNC senior.

Police reported that a car driven by Henry H. Ramer, 21, of Flushing, N. Y. and a resident of Parker Dormitory, struck Jean Riggsbee, at 3:15 p.m. as she was crossing Franklin St. on a crosswalk near the University Baptist Church.

Miss Riggsbee's parents reported that she had received minor cuts and bruises and that she had been released from Memorial Hospital where she had been taken for treatment.

Ramer was charged with failure to grant right of way to a pedestrian and summoned to court on April 12.

Sergeant Horne of the Chapel Hill Police Department investigated.

Negro Picked To Train For Space Flight

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The first Negro has been selected for possible participation in future U. S. manned space flights, it was disclosed Saturday.

He is Air Force Capt. Edward J. Dwight Jr. 29, of Kansas City, Kan., who is among 14 new candidates chosen for the Air Force's aerospace research pilot program at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif.

Sens. Frank Carlson and James B. Pearson made the first announcement that Dwight was in the group. The Air Force later confirmed it.

The Air Force training program parallels, but is not coordinated with the National Aeronautics & Space Administration's NASA space flight program.

Ultimately, they may be more closely related but at present the only cooperative effort between the Air Force and the civilian agency is for the Gemini program. In Gemini, two astronauts will ride the same vehicle in orbital trips. So far, however, there has been no concrete agreement that the Air Force personnel definitely might be part of the astronautic team.

Carlson said that Dwight and 13 other Air Force test pilots would begin training in mid-June for aerospace projects, primarily the Dyna-Soar program. The Dyna-Soar, or X-20, is to be a winged space vehicle.

The Air Force and NASA recently agreed to cooperate in certain phases of the Gemini program. The military's interest in this lies largely in such things as maneuvering and space rendezvous and interception techniques.

The NASA astronauts undergo their training primarily at Houston, Tex. In addition to the original seven, there are nine military and civilian test pilots now in training for gemini and the moonlanding program, Apollo.

Dwight returned to active duty in the Air Force in 1960 alter serving in the reserves. Carlson saio Dwight was overjoyed at his selection—"and so are his partners."

CAA Candidate Says Job Linkage To Athletic Dept.

"Although I am running unopposed for the office of president of the Carolina Athletic Association, I would like to take this opportunity to present my views," Bill King said yesterday.

First of all, the function of the president of the CAA is to act as a liaison between the Athletic Office and the Student Body. In this capacity he can do a terrific amount of good work. As an example, the current controversy is something in which the President of the Athletic Association should take an integral part.

Also, there is a great deal that the holder of this office can do to give sports such as lacrosse and fencing recognition in the athletic budget. These two sports are becoming more popular each year and deserve the recognition that other minor sports enjoy.

My main qualification for this office is a sincere interest in athletics at the University of North Carolina. I hope that through my endeavors each and every student will have an opportunity to become better acquainted with this most important part of our University.

U. S. Forces Seek To End Cuban Raids

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The government took intensive steps Saturday to prevent anti-Castro refugees from conducting hit-and-run raids against Cuba from U. S. territory lest they provoke armed conflict.

The State and Justice Departments announced the tougher new moves that will involve the Coast Guard, the FBI, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and the Customs Bureau.

Officials said this meant more men, ships and planes would be used to insure that attacks such as the recent ones that blasted or strafed Soviet ships in Cuban ports do not stem from U. S. territory, including Puerto Rico.

The joint State-Justice department statement said the United States sympathized with the desire of Cubans to see their country freed from Castro's Communist control.

But the agencies said this country could not allow violations of U. S. laws or "tolerate activities which might provoke armed reprisals, the brunt of which would be borne by the armed services of the United States."

Officials said the following actions would be taken immediately to make certain that none of the attacks was "launched, manned or equipped from U. S. territory":

The Coast Guard, which carries out both sea and air patrols, will step up operations checking all suspect vessels putting out from Florida or nearby U. S. territory for Cuban forays.

The FBI will increase its investigations among Cuban refugee groups in the Miami area, particularly the more militant elements, to see who may be supplying money or other assistance for the raiders.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service will add more manpower to check the movements of Cuban refugees who might become involved in military assaults against their homeland.

Valkyries Plan Sing As Eighteen Enter

Preparations are now under way for the annual Valkyrie Sing which will be held Monday night, April 8 in Memorial Hall. Prior to the Sing, The Golden Fleece, UNC's highest men's honorary organization, will conduct its yearly tapping of new members.

Each year the Valkeries sponsor this competition among campus groups in order to encourage group participation and all-campus entertainment. There will be competition in two areas this year—singing and skit performing.

This year a total of 18 groups have entered the Sing. They include: Alpha Delta Pi; Alpha Gamma Delta; ATO; Chi Omega; Chi Psi; Delta Delta Delta; Delta Upsilon; Everett Dormitory; Kappa Delta; Kappa, Kappa Gamma; Nurses Dormitory; Pi Beta Phi; Phi Delta Theta; Phi Mu Alpha; Ruffin Dormitory; St. Anthony Hall;Sigma Nu; and the Spanish Club.

The groups will perform in one of the five divisions: men's sing; women's sing; men's skits; women's skits; and special groups.

Preceding the Sing itself, two hooded giants will stalk Memorial Hall, snatching from the audience those men students in the junior and senior class who are considered to "possess the highest qualifications in character ability, achievement, and leadership" for membership in the Fleece. The dramatic tapping will begin at 7:00 with the Sing following at about 8:00

Between divisions of the Sing, the annual Irene F. Lee award will be presented by a representative from the Dean of Women's office to the senior girl judged to be most outstanding in scholarship, leadership, and character.

All winners in the Sing will be awarded engraved trophies which they will keep for a year.

The Fleece tapping and the Valkyrie Sing are open to all students.

Medical Colleges Urge Early Registration

The Association of American Medical Colleges urges students who will be seeking admission to a medical school in September, 1964, to register now for the Medical College Admission Test, which will be given Saturday morning, May 4, in Chapel Hill.

Information booklets, which include sample questions and application form, are available at the University Testing Service, Room 019 Peabody Hall and in the Dean's Office of the Medical School, Room 126 MacNider Building.

This test, required by almost every medical school in the United States, consists of (1) a test of verbal ability; (2) a test of quantitative ability; (3) a test of general information; and (4) an achievement test in science. No special preparation is necessary, but a review of basic science courses would be helpful. A fee of $15 must accompany the application to take the test. Applications for the May test should be sent directly to the Psychological Corporation in New York City before April 19.

The MCAT will be given also on October 4. However, candidates taking the test in May will be able to furnish scores to institutions in the early fall of 1963. when most medical colleges begin selecting their 1964 class.

Town Ordered To Halt Acts Of Intimidation

GREENWOOD, Miss (UPI)—The federal government Saturday issued an order demanding officials of this North Mississippi town to halt alleged acts of "intimidation" directed at Negro voter applicants.

The suit also requests the release o feight Negroes jailed last week when they and about 100 others marched on city hall to protest acts of violence aimed at persons taking part in a local Negro voter registration drive.

One registration worker was wounded recently by gunfire from a moving automobile, and two shotgun blasts were fired into the home of another worker last week.

The suit, first announced by Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy in Washington, was filed with Judge Claude F. Clayton at Oxford. Clayton agreed to hear the action Monday at Aberdeen.

The suit specifically seeks a temporary restraining order against interference with voter registration, and names a long list of local authorities as defendants.

One of those named, Mayor Charles E. Sampson said he was not surprised by the government's action.

"This is the government's usual policy in supporting the agitators," he said. "We'll continue on as we have until after the hearing."

City officials have said they would not interfere with Negroes attempting to register so long as they did not attempt mass marches on the courthouse.

Openings Still On Y Summer Europe Trip

YMCA Secretary C. C. Shotts announced today that there are still two vacancies left in the YMCA's Seminars Abroad Program. "We would like to fill our quota as soon as possible," said Shotts, "so that the later students will not miss any of the preparatory seminars held here at UNC and at Washington."

Three seminars have already been held, and another on Bonn, Cologne, Goettingen, Berlin, and Prague is scheduled for April 2. On April 25 the group will go to Washington and for three days visit the State Department and the embassies of France, Italy, Germany, England, and Czechoslovakia.

Shotts pointed out that the program is within the structure of the University and is developed by students who have been abroad before. "We get the benefit of interested students who know what it is like," he said. "We put the interest of the student first. We manage it so that those students with special interests, such as art, architecture, and history, will have free time to explore, and may cut regular programs if necessary."

The group leaves New York on June 10, and starts for home from Dublin on August 16, totaling 67 days. The trip includes 12 countries and the total cost is $1310. "This is the first year the program has included Madrid and Prague," Shotts said. Shotts added that, "the average cost per day was $19.17 and that the cost of other programs offered on campus average from $33.15 to $61.85 for 38 to 49 days."

Panty Raid Attempt Draws Warning Against Repetition

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

From 200 to 300 men students marched on Cobb dorm, then on Spencer and McIver dormitories Sunday night in UNC's first panty raid of the year.

"This was definitely a panty raid," Dean of Men William Long said, "and it's not a little thing . . . The men don't realize what they're setting off when they act as irresponsibly as they did Sunday night."

Long said he didn't think that the students "realize the seriousness of this thing." He indicated that part of the trouble came from some of the women in Cobb dormitory who encouraged the men.

Mrs. Margaret Alexander, assistant to the Dean of Women said that her office considered the incident very serious and women's actions in Cobb were "unthinking."

"We certainly will not ignore the the fact that some of the women participated . . . and they will be dealt with by their respective house councils or the Women's Council."

During the early stages of the raid, several of the women at Cobb shouted out the windows and the men moved a little closer to the dormitory yelling, "p-a-n-t-i-e-s, We want panties, we want panties . . ."

Later when the group moved to the south side of the dorm next to the Circus Room, one of the women threw a pair of panties out of a window and several of the girls yelled, "We want Griselda." The boys replied, "We want Griselda, but we want panties, too."

A flashing red light from one of the Cobb resident's windows caused the men to yell even louder.

Potentially Dangerous

Both Dean Long and Mrs. Alexander agreed that the potential of such a raid was one of the most dangerous parts of it.

"It's a miracle that someone didn't get hurt," Long said. "Somebody started shooting off firecrackers right in the middle of the crowd, but somehow there was no personal or property damage that we know of."

Mrs. Alexander said that any type of mob act does have the potential of being very serious—"such as damaging property and hurting people."

The raid started around 8:30 Sunday night. According to Long and his assistant, Bill Harriss, it originated in the lower quad, "particularly in Lewis dorm," they said.

Around 25 or 30 men from the lower quad marched to the upper quad, yelling, "Let's go to Cobb . . . let's march on Cobb . . . We want panties . . ."

After receiving a rather negative reception in the upper quad, they marched toward Cobb. But the noise and especially that of a spirited bugle player attracted students not only from the upper quad but from the other dorms located near Cobb.

The men gathered in mass at the Cobb parking lot around 8:40 and remained there until 9:15 when they moved on to Spencer and McIver. The group lost part of their momentum here because many of them decided not to pursue the matter any further since several campus policemen were present.

At Spencer, one man tried to climb in a window, but he was detained by University officials.

"The boy broke away . . . and disappeared in the crowd," Long said.

Last Move At Cobb

At 9:30 p.m. some of the men decided to try one last move toward Cobb. But enthusiasm was dying out and the group dispersed shortly after 9:30 and they did not go back to Cobb.

Dean Long said that there was a student council rule not only against panty raids but against anyone who just stood around and said another.

The raid then turned toward Spencer, where a coed termed it "celestial."

"First we thought it was elections again," said one. "We looked out the windows to see the pig (Griselda, who is running for secretary of the student body). I guess I mean we looked to see the boys. It was funny and exciting."

"I just wish they'd gotten in," said another. "It was over too soon."

"We were real sorry it wasn't more than it was, but we didn't want to get anybody in trouble," was another comment.

The boys passed Alderman, but didn't stop. Attitudes were mixed. "We thought it was silly and immature," said three proper coeds.

Another was indignant. "What's wrong with Alderman's panties?" she asked. "I thought it was pretty cowardly of them not to come over here." Another thought the raid "wasn't organized well enough."

"Oh shucks!" said a girl who was out at the time of the raid, after she learned the boys hadn't attacked her dorm.

"I think it would have been fun, but they didn't come over here," said another.

In a letter to the student body, dated April 4, 1960, president David Grigg said that "without attendance of by-standers, panty raids could not take place.

"The Student Council has ruled—in past decisions—that by-standers are participants and violators of the Campus Code. The by-standers, even though not actively taking part, shield violators and provide moral backing for them. From a shield of by-standers, bottles, fireworks, and other objects have been thrown at cars and individuals. This cannot be taken lightly," his letter read.

Dean Long said that he hoped an incident like this would not

Officers Say Three Facing Council Trials

Sunday night's panty raid brought comment from both administration and student government officials.

Attorney General Buzzy Stubbs said:

"Student government, as well as the University Administration has constantly taken a dim view of participation in panty raids.

"In the past, definite probation has been given to any person participating in such 'mob action.' In light of recent events, the student body should be reminded that panty raids constitute a flagrant breach of the campus code and will be considered as such by student government."

Student body president Inman Allen and IDC president Gerry Good issued a joint statement:

"Participation in, or verbal contribution to, what has been termed a proposed 'panty raid' is a Campus Code offense. At present there are three cases, resulting from the demonstration of March 31, before the Men's Council. There are also several other cases pending investigation.

"Indeed, there is at present an appropriations bill before the State Legislature which, if passed, will help the University to construct a new student union and expand Woollen Gym, to mention a few things. Demonstrations of this type create an unfavorable impression on the legislators and may well encourage them to defeat the bill.

"We would like all students to carefully consider these things before starting or taking part in a demonstration of any type."

Girls Enjoyed Night Despite Frustration

By DICK ROTH And BOB SAMSOT

In the Spring, a young man's fancy turns to . . . panty raids.

At least at Carolina, and the "boys" were at it again Sunday night.

Most of the girls liked it.

"Most of us," said a coed at Cobb where the raid started, "were looking for something to happen. Maybe it's just the weather." Her attitude of excitement and enthusiasm was typical.

However, one was critical: "I think the boys should have been more aggressive," she said. "I mean they should have at least made some noise and been tougher about it."

Ineligible Pig Still Refuses To Quit Race

The platform of Griselda, the 8-week-old pig who is running for secretary of the student body, was announced yesterday by Tony Mason and Dennis Bobrowske, her campaign managers.

Mason and Bobrowske said they believed in true democratic government in which parties compete with platforms that present distinct alternatives to the voters. They feel that Griselda is a very unusual candidate with very distinct ideas about campus politics.

Griselda is distressed about many of the personal attacks that have been voiced during the campaign, said Mason. "If our opponents want to bring the campaign down to the level of the barnyard, we can engage in 'mud-slinging' tactics with the best of them."

Some people have voiced reservations about Griselda's qualifications because of her inability to type. Bobrowske said, however, that she was very capable, and that he was sure that she could learn the "hunt and peck" method.

Griselda feels that campaigns should be more than just popularity contests. For that reason her picture has not been printed on her posters. "She didn't want to put the other candidates at a disadvantage," said Mason. Griselda wants to get to the bottom of the "mess over at Graham Memorial." She feels that Student Government has been run by a select few and says that there "should be room enough at the trough for everyone."

Her campaign managers feel that

Prexy Candidates Give Final Pleas

LARRY McDEVITT

"Student government must essentially be viewed as a learning process," UP Presidential candidate Larry McDevitt noted yesterday in a summary discussion of his philosophy and plans.

"Throughout the campaign we have been discussing the ways in which Student Government must meet the needs of student growth in this growing university," McDevitt said, "and in a sense, the process can be termed one of educating for responsibility."

"By responsibility," McDevitt stressed, "I mean the obligation to think creatively, to work vigorously to present student needs and ideas before the administration and the public, and to act with conviction and integrity."

"This University is not yet so big that there is no need for student participation in planning and action. This University is large enough, however, to demand that student self-government be forthright and responsible," he said.

"Participation in Student Government activity is more essential than ever," McDevitt said, "but growing needs mean that the day of the fraternity and sorority pledge signing up for an activity in name only is over, and the day of tolerating weak committees and ceremonial committee chairman has passed. We must learn to be responsible ourselves."

McDevitt pointed out that one of the goals of his proposed communications staff would be to bring interested people into Student Government and "to keep all segments of the campus informed and sensitive to student problems and student rights."

In discussing the concept of student autonomy, McDevitt stressed that "we must realize that Student Government is conceived within a framework of delegated responsibility, and thus our power is by no means ultimate. However, during the development of Student Government, a most workable relationship has been established with the administration. It is in this relationship that our problems of student autonomy have arisen and presently reached a focal point."

"If, in view of this delegated framework in which we exist, students are to maintain a self-governing system which is more than a mere toy, we must have student leaders who will direct student initiative toward acceptance of responsibility on OUR part as well as leaders who can forcefully stand and fight when certain student rights are infringed upon. My hope for the presidency," McDevitt concluded, "is to provide such leadership."

MIKE LAWLER

"Today our vote is an affirmation of the tradition of student self-government," SP Presidential candidate Mike Lawler reported yesterday. For two weeks the campus has heard both candidates debate their personal and party differences, including the issues of "coed" dorms, house councils in men's dorms, a bi-cammeral legislature, and the means of resolving the present impasse on the apartment rule. Rather than debate these issues further, I would like to comment on the importance of our vote today.

We have been delegated the privilege of extensive rights and responsibilities. However, it is a fact that this autonomy has been weakened in the past by inadequate executive leadership and other factors. Next year the president must come to terms with this critical state of campus affairs. His personal activity must exemplify the tempered idealism necessary to resolve the problems we now contend with. It is he who must lead an assessment of the relationship between student government and the individual in the educational process.

He must convey his conviction that student government is a vital part of student activity outside of the classroom and that it is directly related to the individual. Student government is based essentially on an individualistic philosophy of education. It has been and will always be the individual who meets the crisis. THE CHALLENGE IS TO ME AND TO YOU!

The president must utilize comprehensive experience and careful thought to co-ordinate the strengthening of the four living-unit governments, WRC, IDC, IFC, and Panhel. It is these agencies of student government that are closest to us in our day-to-day living, and it is these with which we most identify.

We must begin the difficult process of self-strengthening, and this process must apply both to ourselves and to the agencies which represent us. From this process will come the solution to the fraternities' present fight for the right to self-determine the new direction of their system and the solutions to the complex problems that this new direction may create. The strengthening of the IDC will be continued by efforts to establish recreational facilities in the lower quad, faculty forums in the dorms, and uniform procedures in the IDC court.

We must re-affirm the dual role of our tradition: first as independent self-government and second as a partner who participates in the decisions of the University which effect us as students, i.e.,

Editor Hopefuls Give Views

ETHRIDGE-BLANCHARD

DTH Co-editor candidates Dave Ethridge and Gary Blanchard yesterday announced that their primary aims if elected include:

1) Enlargement of the Tar Heel to six pages in size on a regular basis;

2) Assignment of one well-qualified reporter to specialize in researching and reporting on campus problems, such as the much-discussed coop. and the academic advisor system and

3) Institution of a regular weekly or bi-weekly Presidential Press Conference to compare the President's performance with his platform.

Ethridge and Blanchard, both juniors in the Political Science Honors Program, said these are three examples of the changes they intend to make if elected.

"Basically," they explained, "we want to make the Tar Heel become what any good newspaper should be — a spotlight and a stage.

"A spotlight in that its basic purpose is to illuminate people, events, problems and solutions.

"A stage in that its editorial page should be a platform for informed comment about pertinent issues preferably close to home, and a vehicle for the regular presentation of diverse opinions and

CHRIS FARRAN

"Today is an important day for the Daily Tar Heel and its relationship to the campus as a whole and to the students individually," Chris Farran, candidate for the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel, said yesterday.

"As voters, there are three things we must remember in picking a Daily Tar Heel editor. We must:

"Pick an editor who has been close to all aspects of student life for 2½ years;

"Pick an editor who has had newspaper experience on this campus and who understands the unique problems of student life and student publications;

"Pick an editor who can attract an experienced and imaginative staff who will bring a new responsibility to the DTH editorial page, to DTH news, sports, and to the variety of feature coverage."

Farran said, "At Carolina I've lived in two dormitories, an off-campus apartment, and in a fraternity. I believe I know what students want from the Tar Heel, from the Administration, and from Student Government. I know the functions of student government, the frustrations and rewards of dorm life, the variety of student opinion and campus organizations,

HAROLD LLOYD

"My feelings about the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel have undergone some very great changes during the past few days," Harry Lloyd said yesterday. "I have always felt that the job should go to the most qualified, most experienced person, and the one who could do the most for UNC students in the way of putting out a good newspaper."

"I felt that it was unfortunate that the position had to be a political one. I am not a politician and I never was one, and campaigning for the editorship was very difficult for me. Sunday afternoon I decided to pull out of the race. I did not feel that my support was enough to elect me, and I wanted to see the job go to the most qualified of the remaining candidates.

"I said in an earlier statement that the decision to withdraw was a very difficult one for me to make. The decision to re-enter is even more so.

"I feel that I would not be fair to the UNC student, and to my supporters, if I were to withdraw. I think the students should have the right to accept or reject a candidate of their own choosing, and I am not one to deny them of that right.

"I respect my opponents in this

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Cuba Raiders Captured

MIAMI (UPI)—British police Monday surprised and captured a party of Cuban raiders trying to use Key Norman in the Bahamas as a springboard for an attack on Cuba. A second exile warship escaped capture and was reported scouring the Caribbean for a Soviet tanker.

Authorities in Nassau, 80 miles from Key Norman, said Bahamian police had been tipped to the exiles' plans and were lying in wait for them. The London Admiralty said 17 Cubans had been captured and their 35-foot ship taken in tow by the British frigate Londonderry and sailed to Nassau.

Although exile sources said a U. S. Navy patrol plane had "spotted" the raiders for the British, the State Department said there was "no U. S. involvement" in the episode.

Free Birth Control

CHICAGO (UPI)—Illinois began offering free birth control to mothers on relief Monday and the hotly debated program immediately was challenged in the courts.

Illinois Public Aid Commission IPAC case workers began handing out forms to mothers—married and unmarried alike—who indicated they want free birth control devices and information.

Benjamin S. Adamowski, Republican candidate for mayor in Tuesday's Chicago election, filed suit in superior court asking a temporary injunction against the plan.

Recognition Withheld

WASHINGTON (UPI)—The United States withheld recognition of the new military regime in Guatemala Monday while it consulted with its Western Hemispheric neighbors on the implications of the weekend revolt.

The State Department said reports from the U. S. Embassy in Guatemala confirmed that the military clique headed by former Defense Minister Col. Enrique Peralta Azurdia appeared to be in firm control.

Privately, U. S. officials were looking for signs that Peralta intends to fulfill his pledge to restore order and prepare the way for peaceful elections in November. They noted that his new cabinet contained moderates from the armed forces and qualified civilians.

Papers Publish Again

NEW YORK (UPI)—The last of New York's blacked-out newspapers returned to the stands Monday calling Mayor Robert F. Wagner the hero of the settlement which ended the 114-day labor dispute.

The Long Island Star-Journal and Long Island Press, part of the Newhouse group, also resumed operations in Manhattan. The Press had continued publishing outside of Manhattan during the strike.

The four morning papers—The Daily News, Times, Herald Tribune and Mirror—all got editions on the streets Sunday night within a few hours after the last holdout union in the dispute—the photoengravers—ratified a contract.

Tar Heel Editorship Is A Full-Time Job

The campaign for DTH editorship has been heated, often petty and sometimes mud-splattered. The choice is between Harry Lloyd, Dave Ethridge-Gary Blanchard and Chris Farran.

The choice is not as easy as we once thought it would be.

* * *

When the campaign began, Ethridge and Blanchard had the support of most persons connected with the Tar Heel—including the present DTH editors.

We hoped they could be successful, if elected, in solving some of the newspaper's chronic problems. Gary and Dave had more experience on professional newspapers than their opponents. Gary is known, justly, as a first-rate reporter. The organizational and editorial abilities of both he and Dave are untested—but those who supported them assumed they were capable in these areas.

Their campaign has not solidified this support. By their petty swiping at opponents and exaggerated claims of what they can do, Blanchard-Ethridge have given rise to a number of unanswered questions.

Their campaign has been petty —will this carry over to a petty editorship?

How much time are they able, or willing, to devote to the Tar Heel next year? Both will be writing for honors; Blanchard has not completely severed his workings with state radio stations.

* * *

They have made many promises, many proposals. Some proposals, in the area of improving campus news, are possible. Others, such as writing all editorials 24 hours ahead of time, are frivolous and reveal a disturbing lack or understanding of the real workings of the paper.

They have promised to bring the Tar Heel more "organization," resulting in no need for the editor to spend long hours at the job. But the DTH editorship will never become a PART-TIME job—a point which we doubt the candidates fully understand.

* * *

Chris Farran and Harry Lloyd both have experience on the Tar Heel—experience we feel is virtually necessary for a good editor.

Lloyd has put in more hours on the paper in the past three years than any other staff member. We feel his interest in the Tar Heel is more genuine than any of the other candidates. His knowledge of the paper's operations exceeds the other contenders. His primary defect is his difficulty in working with other people, a grave fault in an editor.

* * *

Farran also has a great interest in the good of the Tar Heel as a newspaper by and for the students.

He has organizational skill and is a proven news and editorial writer. Farran has professional experience with the Winston-Salem Journal, as well as two years with the DTH, work on the Publications Board, and with the Journalism School.

He has no political obligations to anyone, as do the co-editors.

We have supported Ethridge and Blanchard throughout most of the campaign—we cannot do so now.

Many things have happened during the campaign to indicate serious fallacies in their candidacy, in their interest in the DTH editorship.

Until the campaign began, Ethridge-Blanchard's interest in the Tar Heel was NIL—we cannot believe they now will give it full-time attention.

* * *

The choice is complex and difficult. We respect Ethridge and Blanchard but believe the best interests of the Daily Tar Heel would NOT be served by their election.

We urge a vote for an editor whose first interest is the Daily Tar Heel, a vote for Chris Farran.

Vote For The Man

The past two years have seen an increasing number of infringements upon the spirit, as well as the substance of student autonomy. Student government may face a "crisis year" in this and other areas — and its leadership must be the best, to make student government rational and responsible, as well as autonomous.

Choices between candidates are complicated by the strong similarity in the platforms of the two parties. Choices must be made on a less concrete and more sophisticated basis — the candidates' personalities as they relate to the presidency; the methods used by them and their priorities of values — what they feel to be most important.

* * *

Bob Spearman (UP) and Dick Ellis (SP) are the candidates for vice-president. Spearman has been a heavy favorite from the beginning of the campaign.

* * *

This spring has seen less difference between the ideals advocated by the SP and UP than in recent years past. For this reason we advocate a careful selection of candidates on the basis of individual capabilities, rather than on party politics.

To repeat, this might prove a grave and serious year for the affairs of student government, and it is no time to entrust it to the unproven and less capable. It is a time for the best leaders to be chosen. (JC)

"What Are You, Some Kind Of A Fresh Air Nut?"

Legislature . . .

Look Very Long Before Leaping

The Raleigh Times

How far should the legislature wish to go in its job of running higher education in North Carolina?

This legislature is going to have to answer that question in its consideration of the higher education program. The way it answers that question could have much to do with how the state's program of higher education will develop during the years ahead.

Yesterday, the House Higher Education Committee adopted an amendment to the bill which would provide that the legislature itself shall have final say on bringing new branches into the Consolidated University system, and on establishing new four-year colleges. Under the bill as originally written, the University Trustees and the State Board of Higher Education would have such final approval. The amendment would have the trustees and the board recommend to the legislature for final action.

Maybe the legislature should have that final say. Actually, it would have a final say of real sorts anyway since it does hold the purse strings. But, if the legislature takes to itself the power to say what shall be brought into the University system and what shall not, it is opening that tremendously vital question to all kinds of political overtones, logrolling, horse trading and campus trading.

It would be possible, for example, for proponents of Podunk College to logroll that institution right into the Consolidated University. It would be possible for adherents of a group of smaller colleges to get together and campus trade their institutions into the University system. Maybe such things wouldn't happen. But maybe they would — if they did we'd have a watered down University whose diploma wouldn't be worth the parchment it was printed on.

Emotionalism has its rightful place in higher education. But right now, North Carolina must approach its higher education future with more caution and careful planning than emotionalism. North Carolina has just so many tax dollars, and every one of those higher education tax dollars must be used in such a way as to get more than full value for it. Careful planning is the only way to get that done, and campus trading or politics or logrolling wouldn't do anything to help careful planning.

The Trustees of the University are creatures of the legislature, since they are appointed by the legislature. The Trustees are in good position to avoid logrolling and campus trading and home-town pride and political pressure in the expansion of the University. They are in position to do the careful planning we must have. So are the members of the State Board of Higher Education.

The University must remain the capstone of the whole system of education in North Carolina. To be the capstone, it must be strong.

There have been overtones of opposition, too, to the proposal in the higher education bill that the awarding of the doctoral degrees be limited to the University system. It is vital that that provision be retained, or there could be indiscriminate awarding of doctor's degrees, dispersion of educational effort, use of scarce higher education dollars to support graduate programs of undistinguished standing.

The whole matter of planning for the future of higher education in North Carolina is one in which this legislature should look long before it leaps.

Crais Pro & Con; Council Answer

Firing Was Unjustified

To the Editors,

The proportions to which the Chuck Erickson vs. Tom Crais is expanding is getting much too big. But, perhaps this is what Chuck Erickson and Co. want, for in this way they can evade the issue. Chancellor Aycock has brought up the Doug Moe case (another point to be argued), and by doing this is just complicating everything. There are two aspects to this problem which should be looked at:

1) Should Tom Crais have been fired?

2) Is Chuck Erickson a capable Athletic Director?

The firing of Tom Crais was completely unjustifiable. Everyone, even a coach, has the right to express his opinion, and this is all Tom Crais did. Anyone who knows him can attest to the fact that Tom is a fine person and quite an ardent sport's fan. He enjoys athletics as much as anyone. He is, however, against the "win, win, win, and all costs be damned" policy. This does not mean that he doesn't believe in Chuck Erickson's "scoreboard." He always likes to win, but he feels that there are other things that should be learned also. This is all he said. His term "subterranean murmurs" implies that these are possible rumors, the truth of which he is not positively certain. He never did anything wrong; he merely expressed an opinion. And for this Tom Crais was fired.

That Chuck Erickson has acted like a big-time athletic Tsar is not trhe. He acted like a small-time athletic Tsar. Firing Crais is just another reason why Erickson is not a capable Athletic Director. Carolina is wavering between being a big-time athletic institution and a small-time one. Whichever way we are to go, I feel it is time for a change. We need a man in that position who can do the job, not one who is run over and stepped on by Eddie Cameron of Duke. If Erickson can't schedule the biggest football game of the year so that students can see it, how is he doing what students want? We realize scheduling is not easy, but I'm sure something could have been done. Erickson has always made the small-time moves, and I feel it is the right time for a big-time man to step into his position. It is too bad Tom Crais had to sacrifice his job, but if it leads to another Athletic Director, I'm sure he will feel somewhat appeased.

P.S. — Where did those Duke basketball tickets (Feb. 5) go to, Mr. Erickson?

—Richard Leslie

Coach Was Irresponsible

Academic freedom. Sounds wonderful. But what is it?

Tom Crais, it is held, exercised his academic freedom in recklessly charging violations of the honor system by athletes.

Maybe someone ought to consider that Chuck Erickson as Crais' employer also used a comparable right in firin gCrais for making the statements.

Contrary to some popular opinion, Chapel Hill is not the floor of Congress. Merely because we are inhabitants of a relatively liberal university community, we are not given comprehensive immunity to make unfound and incriminating accusations without fear of reprisal.

Tom Crais was hired because he wanted to be. He was hired as a freshman tennis coach. He was not hired to sound off irresponsibly about our honor sysstem, although no one told him not to. He was neither hired nor fired because of his views on big-time college athletics and a "win-at-all-costs" philosophy, whatever that may be. He had a right to express his opinions, however, and he did so.

It sometimes happens that a climate of freedom clashes irrevocably with a climate of responsibility and decency. It was the opinion of the Athletic Department that such an instance was precipitated by Crais, not because of his views on college athletics, but because as a responsible member of the Department, he callously violated the integrity of this University.

The Athetic Department as represented by Mr. Erickson acted. It acted in the manner it thought best for the Department, for the University, and for Crais. The Athletic Department should not be condemned for this.

Tom Crais was not discharged through an abrupt termination of his academic freedom. He was discharged because he acted irresponsibly in his capacity as a coach. There is a difference.

An employer ought to have the right to discharge an irresponsible employee. Just because this is the University of North Carolina, Chuck Erickson should not be denied this right. If the student body does deny him this right except at its personal whim, then we are guilty of the same breach of freedom that we are so ready to charge him with.

Durand: No Undue Secrecy

To the Editors,

In the March 2th issue of the Tar Heel, twenty-three students signed a letter which complained that there was a lack of information concerning the last three cases in the Archaeology 5 procedings. They asked, "When is the Honor Council otd/or administration going to make public its up to now secret machinations as regards the remaining trials, and when is the student body going to become regularly and reliably informed as regards the actions of thethe Honor Council and the reasoning behind these actions."

Although evidently well-meaning the twenty-three seem to be misinformed in regard to the publication of trials before the Men's Council. In the first place, a summory of the final three Archaeology 85 cases was published in the Saturday, February 16th edition of the Tar Heel, and secondly upon four four other occasions since the beginning of the semester front page stories have been printed. Due to an error in the print shop, the February 16th issue was labeled February 17 but this should not have been cause for one to miss a three column headline story. Three paragraphs in particulor were devoted to a resume of the cases (in which all three defendants were found not guilty), and the story would have been more complete but for the fact that the Judicial Procedures Bill forbids publication of more than" the verdict, the sentence, and the nature of the violation."

Only one implication of the letter of the twenty-three remains to be answered. From the way in which the letter was phrased it appears that the writers would linke the Freshman Tennis Coach's dismissal (because of the charge of Honor Council concessions for one thing) to the supposedly-unpublicized Archaeology cases. While it is true that a varsity athlete was tried and acquitted at that time, there is no basis for the suspicion that he received a concession. Subterranean murmurings to the contrary, there was not a rash of athletes brought before the men's Council, and in this particular case the only indication of cheating was the similarity of answers upon the multiple-choice section of the final exam. Nothing else indicated misconduct and the similarities were inconclsive proof.

In some respects the letter of the twenty-three is an encouraging sign of a student interest. Members of the Men's Council were beginning to wonder if the newspaper accounts were read by the student body, for there seemed to have been little or no reaction. Admittedly the stories must oftimes appear dull for the lack of specific information; but it may be that at some future time the Tar Heel will be oble to print thorough but interesting presentations of the proceedings, traditions, and enalties of the Men's and Women's Councils. Relatively few students knof, for instance, that alleged sexual violations are handled by the odministration and that five students have been suspended or expelled for sexual misconduct this year. With renewed interest on the part of the student body, faculty, honor councils, administration, and the Tar Heel a cooperative effort can be undertaken to clarify the Honor System here at the University. It is a task which will require the patience, understanding, and disciplined effort of all segments of the UNC community.

At the present time the members of the honor councils are visiting with department heads in order to understand the faculty's position, and it may be possible next year to undertake a series of open discussions in dormitories, fraternities, and sororities. Just such a program was begun a year ago, and its initial results were encouraging. Further steps to explain both the formol and informal nature of our Honor and Campus Codes will probably depend upon the manifested interest of students, faculty members, and administrative personnel alike.

U.P. Co—ord. Curtis Says Forget Rumors

To the Editors,

Both political parties have an obligation to this campus to endorse candidates for the various student government elected positions, and with this obligation goes the duty to give support and campaign for these candidaes. Naturally, there is a desire to win . . . this is healthy politics . . . occasionally, this desire becomes too strong, and the results of this are rather unpleasant.

As University Party Co-Ordinator, I, personally and officially, regret that rumors of varying degrees of untruth have been circulating around the campus concerning various members of the opposition party.

I know that these rumors did not originate from among the campaign co-ordinators of either party nor from the two parties big four candidates.

I would like to urge all voters to totally disregard the presence of the rumors, to stop them when possible, and above all, not to consider the subject matter of them when you vote. Vote on qualification, platforms, and personalities . . . and by all means, do vote.

SPU Hits Segregation

To the Editors,

The following resolution was passed unanimously at the March 1 meeting of the Student Peace Union

The problems of world peace and the problems of civil rights and human freedom are not separate. They are both a part of our concern for the human community as a whole, a part of an effort toward reconciliation and understanding between men of different backgrounds and views, so as to create a better environment in which we can live out the natural length of our days. The Statement of Purpose of the Student Peace Union reads: "The SPU works toward a society which will ensure both peace and freedom, and which will suffer no individual or group to be exploited by another." It is in this spirit that we pledge ourselves to work toward the elimination of racial discrimination in Chapel Hill.

Much progress has already been made in reaching this objective through the persistent efforts of students and other members of the community, who have seen fit to devote their time and energies in the active pursuit of principles to which they adhere. We feel that all students have a moral and intellectual obligation to join their ranks. The continuation of racial discrimination in this community is an intolerable insult to the spirit of a free university and to the fundamental precepts of freedom and human dignity.

We therefore resolve:

1. That we will not patronize the following establishments where discriminatory practices are maintained:

All Star Bowling Lanes
Brady's Restaurant
Carlton's The Rock Pile
Carolina Grill
Clarence's Bar & Grill
College Cafe
Howard Johnson's Michael's
Oh Boy Drive-In The Patio
The Pines
Tar Heel Sandwich Shop
Ye Olde Tavern

2. That we will attempt negotiation with the above in order to end such practices.

3. That where negotiation fails to achieve this objective we shall take whatever action we deem necessary and within our power, including picketing.

4. We invite all students to join with us.

Senior Candidate Ask For Support

MAL LESAVOY — TREASURER

"Most people think that the office of treasurer is merely a job of accounting or keeping the books. This is true to only a slight degree," Mal Lesavoy, SP candidate said yesterday. The office of the treasurer of the senior class should not only consist of the menial task of keeping the financial books — which is an important job in itself —, but also the advising and initiating financial policy. I think that the main responsibility of the treasurer should be to work closely with all financial committees, to bring up ideas on money-making projects, and to advise and have a final word on all financial transactions. The treasurer should also know and understand all functions of the class.

I feel that I am well qualified for the position of Treasurer of the senior class. My experience in class functions proves my aptitude fo rfinancial affairs. In my sophomore year, I was chairman of the projects committee which sponsored and carried out a car wash and sales at the Town and Campus. These projects brought the sophomore class from a large debt to a financially sound basis. This year I was co-chairman of the Faculty-Variety show which was a great success to the tune of around $190. This brought the Junior class out of a debt of around $60. I was also on the original committee that met with Dean Henderson on drawing up an inter-class constitution.

As my past experience shows, I do have a knowledge of class functions and am very interested in furthering class participation. In my opinion, keeping the class books is secondary to the actual policy making function of an officer. If I am elected I will do my very best to make every senior proud to be a senior, and I will appreciate every rising senior's consideration.

and the shortcomings and potentials of classroom instruction.

"I've worked as a reporter with the Winston-Salem Journal for three summers and I've worked with the UNC News Bureau. I'm a member of the Publications Board, president of Sigma Delta Chi professional journalism fraternity, and I've indicated my interest in the Tar Heel by serving as News Editor, reviewer, reporter and feature writer. The great part of my experience has been on this campus, working with UNC students and their problems.

"I've had sixteen people not on the present staff indicate an interest in reporting, sports, feature and editing positions. A staff increased in size and variety of interest will guarantee us news coverage of greater scope, accurate reporting of all sports, imaginative features and editorial comment of greater variety and responsibility.

"All any candidate can do is to promise he will do his best," Farran said. "I promise that, because I want to be editor of the Daily Tar Heel and I care about its responsibilities to each student."

Griselda has stirred the interest of students on campus, and showing that student elections need not induce apathy. Griselda is running on a platform of complete reform. She feels that Student Legislature has spent too much time on "pork-barrel" legislation and not enough time on more important issues.

When Bobrowske was asked where Griselda stood in the spectrum of politics, he replied that "she doesn't lean either to the right or the left; she likes to lie in the middle of the road."

Griselda is for the independence of Student Government. "She protests loudly against being led around on a leash by anyone," said Mason, "as many voters may have noticed."

When Griselda was asked for comments, she said, "Oh, ink my name on the ballot, of course."

regular reviews of new books, plays and movies.

"Our basic concern is that the Tar Heel has not grown with the University.

"Over the past several years UNC has multiplied in size, scope and diversity, but the Tar Heel has remained essentially the same — a four-page paper which covers the campus in a hit-or-miss fashion.

"We think our three-beat system of reporting, our solicitation of other points of views in regular columns, and expansion of the Tar Heel to six pages can make worlds of difference.

"The business staff has assured us that there is sufficient advertising to justify making the Tar Heel a six-page paper. The problem is to get more news and features. We think this can be done."

HEALTH SPEECH

Dr. A. L. Chapman, director of the Bureau of Planning Evaluation, and Research of the Penn. Dept. of Health, Harrisburg, Pa., will speak on "The Merging Interests of Health Sciences and Community Safety" tonight at eight o'clock in the School of Public Health Auditorium.

This is the first of a series of discussions concerned with aspects of safety and accident prevention of interest to those in the health field. It is made possible by a grant awarded by the U. S. Public Health Service to the department to prepare public health safety specialists as well as promote greater interest in safety on the part of all health practitioners.

Dr. Chapman until November 1963 was a career officer in the U. S. Public Health Service, having retired with the rank of Assistant Surgeon General after a variety of assignments including Chief, Division of Accident Prevention; Chief, Division of Special Health Services; Chief, Division of Chronic Disease and as Regional Medical Director in P. race. I admire their sincerity just as much as my own. But I will fight to be elected editor with as much energy as I can.

"We have heard a lot in the past three weeks of campaigning about experience and platforms and intent. If I were a John Doe voter, I am sure that even I would be confused. I can only state what I can do and what I want to do.

"My first concern over all has been the DAILY TAR HEEL. If it had not, then I would never have entered the race in the first place. I know what the other candidates have said on the issue, but I know the thoughts of only myself.

"I know the job for which I am running is a difficult one. I never said that it would be easy for me. But I am hungry for the chance to do what I can for the Daily Tar Heel and its readers.

"I want to edit a real student newspaper. I never claimed to be a professional journalist like some of the other candidates in the race. But I know I can put out a better student paper than they can. I know the problems of the paper. Having worked as sports editor, managing editor, and various other jobs, I am still awed by the responsibilities but inspired by the challenge.

"I have gone over my platform before. It is very simple—what it boils down to is putting out the best paper I know how for the readers that deserve nothing less. The Daily Tar Heel should be responsible and industrious and respected, but it must also be lively and fresh and directed to the interests of its readers. That is the kind of paper that I would put out if elected.

"I have tried to be honest with everyone involved—honest with my opponents, honest with the students, and honest with myself. I can only say now that I need and welcome all the support I can get. If I am elected, I will do everything I can in the service of the Daily Tar Heel and UNC.

UNC Meets Deacs In ACC Contest

By DON KING

Carolina's golfers clubbed Princeton into submission yesterday by a 16 to 8 score. The win was UNC's third after placing third in a dual meet with Duke and Wake Forest.

The Heels play Wake today at 1:30 in Winston-Salem.

The victor in an earlier meet with South Carolina will depend on the ACC commissioner's decision.

Skip Tucker was medalist yesterday with a 3-under-par 69. His victim was Mike Sanger.

The Tar Heels won six matches, lost two, and tied one.

UNC's Abe Andes defeated Art Schwartz, 2½-½; George Reams whipped Doug Barden, 2-1; Tom Arnold beat Frank Tetito, 3-0; and Ed Hoopes blasted Bing Powell, 3-0.

Reams and Arnold, with 72 and 73, respectively, were second and third high scorers.

Wake Forest will have a strong team in today's match. The Deacons have Ken Folkes back from last year's team, which finished eighth in the NCAA tournament. Folkes will be accompanied by three other lettermen and Jay Sigel, a sophomore expected to give any opposition several headaches.

Last year the Demon Deacons finished with a 12-5 record and placed third behind Duke and Carolina in the ACC tournament.

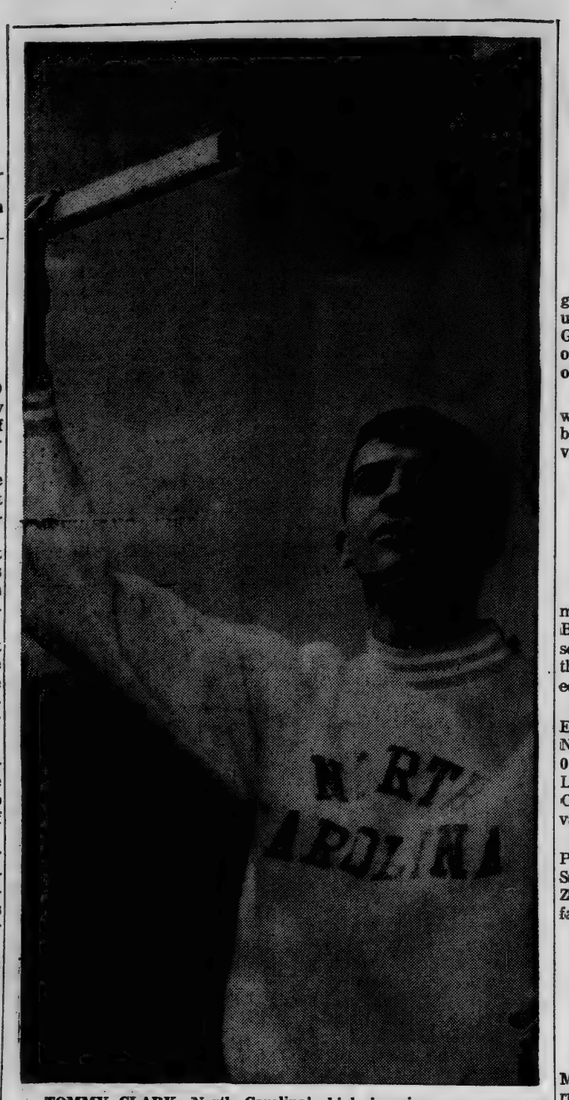
Tomorrow Carolina will entertain Ohio State at Finley Golf Course.

Duke Snider Goes To Mets

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla (UPI)—The New York Mets Monday night announced the purchase of veteran outfielder Duke Snider from the Los Angeles Dodgers.

President George Weiss of the Mets said that Snider would report to the club Thursday, after visiting his family in California.

The terms of the deal were not revealed immediately but it was believed to be a straight cash transaction for approximately $40,000.



It had been long-rumored that the Dodgers were willing to give up the 38-year-old Snider to the Mets, but the deal was not expected to be announced officially until next weekend.

However, so many "leaks" developed in the transaction that the Mets apparently were forced to make the announcement ahead of time.

Snider, one of the most popular heroes of the old Brooklyn Dodgers, gives the Mets their only left-handed hitting outfielder and is expected to draw many old Dodger fans to the Polo Grouns.

Snider, now silver-haired and reduced to a part-time status with the talent-rich Dodgers, said Monday night that being sold to the Mets would be "a favor."

"If I am sold to the Mets, they (the Dodgers) will be doing me a favor," Snider said. "I know I won't play much for the Dodgers, and it's tough to sit on the bench when you feel you can play in at least 110 games."

TOMMY CLARK, North Carolina's high jumping ace, won one of his team's two first places last weekend in the Florida Relays at Gainesville. Clark jumped 6' 6¾" as the Tar Heels finished second behind Furman in the unofficial standings.

Cindermen Take Two Firsts, Place 2nd In Florida Meet

By DON KING

Carolina's thinclad cindermen gained unofficial second place Saturday in the Florida Relays in Gainesville, Fla., on the strength of two firsts, a second, and four other places.

Since no official team scores were kept, Furman, whose members gained 39 points in the university division of the meet, was the unofficial winner. UNC had 29 points.

Bob Bennett, Charlie Little, Arthur Maillet and Jerry Stuver made up the winning 2-mile relay team to give the Tar Heels one first. They raced home in 7:47.2.

The other first place was Tommy Clark 6' 6¾" in the high jump. Tar Heel Joe Huffman also placed in the high jump—his 6'3" was good enough for fourth.

Carmine Lunetta was second in the 2-mile individual race with a time of 9:37.2. Tommy Henley placed fifth in the discus with a throw of 137' 9".

In the 330 hurdles, Jim Brown placed third with a time of 37.5. The distance medley relay team was fourth in 10:23.4. In that event, Bob Hart ran the 440, Bennett, the 880, Maillet, the three-quarters, and Stuver, the mile.

In the freshman division of the meet, the sprint medley team came in fourth. Robert Hicks ran the 440, Al Dobritch, the 220, Dale White, the 220, and Bill Janowitz, the 880.

Coach Dale Ranson said he was satisfied with the results of the meet, but he "thought we could do better."

"The performances were good and I think we are capable of vastly improved performances in the future."

He said the next test for the thinclads will come this Saturday at South Carolina in the South Carolina Relays.

After that the cindermen will take on Wake Forest in Chapel Hill on April 9.

The next freshman contest will be here tomorrow with Chowan. Starting time is 3 p.m. at Fetzer Field.

Maris Injured In Yank Win

LAKELAND, Fla. (UPI)—Roger Maris and Joe Pepitone hit home runs off Jim Bunning Monday and carried the New York Yankees to a 3-2 victory over the Detroit Tigers before the biggest crowd of the year at Henley Field — 3,853.

But it may have been a costly victory for the Yankees.

Maris suffered a severely pulled muscle while making a spectacular catch and a Yankee spokesman said that the slugging outfielder might not be in the lineup on opening day.

Bill Stafford worked the first seven innings for the Yankees. He blanked the Tigers until Gus Triandos nicked him for a run - scoring double in the seventh.

Hal Reniff finished up. The Tigers got a run off him in the eighth on two walks, a single by Billy Bruton and Rocky Colavito's sacrifice fly.

* * *

VERO BEACH, Fla. (UPI)—Robin Roberts ended a four-game Los Angeles Dodger winning streak Monday by pitching the Baltimore Orioles to a 6-1 victory.

Roberts, second Baltimore pitcher to go nine innings this spring, held the Dodgers to four hits in their Florida finale. Steve Barber also has a route-going victory to his credit.

The Orioles, meanwhile, collected 11 hits off loser Larry Sherry. Dick Scott and Ron Perranoski. Brooks Robinson hit a two-run homer in the first inning, his first of the spring.

The Dodgers left Florida with a 12-11 exhibition record. The Orioles have won 15 and lost 7.

Oversight Disqualifies Tankers

By ED DUPREE

North Carolina's swimming season was cut short by a day at the NCAA Swimming Championships in Raleigh last weekend when Coach Pat Earey failed to meet the entry deadline for Saturday's events.

The Tar Heel coach, disappointed that his men didn't get the chance to qualify, missed the entry deadline on a technicality.

For the first time this year the NCAA introduced a card system of entering swimmers in the next day's events. The deadline was 10:30 p.m.

After Friday's events were completed, Earey started talking to high school prospects, parents and other coaches. He got in his car and drove to the outskirts of Raleigh before he realized that he hadn't entered his swimmers for the next day. It was 11 p.m. before he found members of the meet committee, thus too late to enter his men.

Earey entered his swimmers early the first two days, but said he waited Friday night "because I wasn't sure whether I'd enter Merrill in the 100-freestyle or save him for the relay."

Thompson Mann and Harrison Merrill, the aces of the ACC co-champions, didn't get the chance to qualify in the 100-yard backstroke and freestyle races, respectively.

Carolina's 400-yard freestyle relay team of Mann, Merrill, Davis Roberts and Thad Adams was also ineligible. Earey had high hopes for the foursome, but they would have had to better their best time of the year (3:17.9) to qualify. The last qualifying time was 3:16.

Earey was glad that his disqualified swimmers would all get another chance in the finals next year. "If this were the last year of any of my boys, I would feel much worse, but all of our top boys are underclassmen. They'll get another chance."

Carolina wasn't the only team hit by the technicality. Southern Methodist's coach also failed to enter his men for Saturday's events and earlier in the meet the same thing happened to Nebraska.

Earey was glad that his disqualiswimming strength in comparison with the rest of the nation. "We don't have the strength you find in other conferences," he said. He pointed out that the bulk of the nation's swimming strength lies in the Big Ten, Ivy League and Southern California.

The schools in these areas have big swimming programs and have little trouble getting large numbers of excellent swimmers. Concerning large scale swimming, Earey said, "I don't think we'll ever reach that stage, at least not in the foreseeable future."

North Carolina State was the only ACC team that placed any men in the finals. Ed Spencer took fourth in the 50-yard freestyle and Pete Fogarasy placed third in the 100-yard backstroke.

The ACC teams "were not as strong as in other years in the finals" according to the Tar Heel coach.

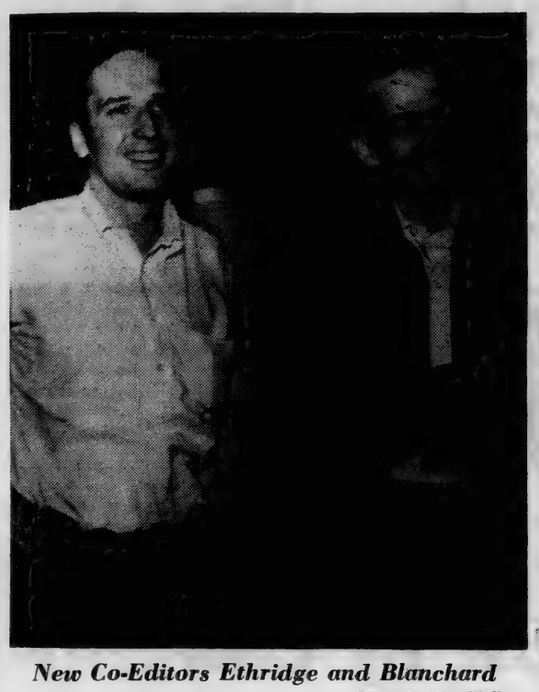
Blanchard And Ethridge Are Elected DTH Co-Editors

Co-Editors Defeat Two Opponents



Dave Ethridge and Gary Blanchard, running as co-editors, scored a clear-cut majority win over candidates Chris Farran and Harry Lloyd in yesterday's election for the editorship of the Daily ar Heel. The co-editor candidates tallied 2497 votes as compared to 1220 for Farran and 410 for Lloyd in unofficial returns.

Ethridge, a junior from Chapel Hill and Blanchard, a junior from St. Petersburg, Fla. will assume the editorship of the paper after the Easter holidays.

In a joint statement released last night they said: "We are tremendously grateful for this opportunity to try and make the Tar Heel grow to its capacity and become the outstanding campus newspaper we believe it is capable of becoming. If we do not succeed, it will not be because we haven't tried as hard as we can."

The co-editor candidates built up a large majority in dormitories and coasted to an easy victory.

Bonnie Hoyle Wins; Akers Is Treasurer

By JOEL BULKLEY

Split-ticket voting paved the way to victory for Student Party candidate Mike Lawler and University Party nominee Bob Spearman in Tuesday's campus-wide elections.

Lawler polled 2,496 votes to gain the position of president of the student body by 752 votes over UP candidate Larry McDevitt in unofficial returns, in what may have been a record turnout for a campus election.

Lawler defeated McDevitt by 280 votes in last year's runoff for the vice-presidency of the student body.

Hoyle topped Sara Broadhurst (UP) 1,849-1,522 while Akers edged Gerald Thornton (UP) by 173 votes, 2,078-1,905.

Polly Hastings Elections Board chairman announced yesterday that the Elections Board would not count any of the votes cast Tuesday for Griselda, the 2-week old pig who was candidate for secretary of the student body.

Recount Called

University Party chairman Mike Chanin last night called for a recount in the treasurer's race. Chanin said, "Considering the total number of votes cast and the difference of only 173, I feel that it is necessary to have a recount for this position."

Lawler, a junior from Hollywood Calif. brought out a heavy dormitory vote as he carried Ehringhaus, Craige, Joyner and West Cobb.

He received the largest number of votes (56) a Student Party nominee for president has netted in Town Men's H, (a UP stronghold), since Bill Harris collected 40 in the 1961 campaign. Lawler lost the district, 132-56.

Larry McDevitt issued a statement after conceding defeat at 10:15 p.m. He said, "I would like to extend my congratulations to Mike Lawler. I know with all certainty that he will lead a student government of which we will all be proud."

Bill King and Karen Nelson, unopposed candidates for the presidency of the Carolina and Women's Athletic Associations, respectively, also were elected.

Butts Revealed Game Secrets, Cook Says

ATLANTA (UPI)—Attorney General Eugene Cook said Tuesday that former University of Georgia Athletic Director Wallace Butts divulged vital team secrets and was in contact with known gamblers prior to the 1962 Georgia-Alabama football game.

In a report on a two-week investigation to Gov. Carl Sanders into an alleged Southeastern Conference football scandal, Cook disclosed that the one-time famous football mentor had amassed a net fortune of approximately $206,000. His salary was $16,000 a year.

Butts' resignation from Georgia, where he had coached or directed athletics for 25 years, was summarily accepted Feb. 28, less than a month before a magazine article accused him of telephoning football information to Alabama Coach Paul (Bear) Bryant just before the two teams clashed in Birmingham last September 22.

Bryant and Butts have denied exchanging information that could affect the outcome of the game. But Cook produced signed statements from six Georgia athletic staff members that the conversation, as reported, "conveyed vital and important information that could have affected the outcome" of the Georgia-Alabama game.

No Players Involved

Alabama, favored by 17 points, beat Georgia 35-0 before a crowd of 54,000 in Birmingham, Ala. Cook emphasized that no player on either team was involved in any way.

Sanders told a news conference following his public release of Cook's report that there was in the investigation so far "nothing to indicate the violation of any criminal statute" by Butts. William H. Schroder, attorney for Butts, issued a blistering denunciation of Cook's report which he said was inaccurate in several places.

"I am not leveling the severe criticism upon Cook which his investigation deserves," Schroder told reporters. "I honestly feel we are dealing with a different Eugene Cook than the Eugene Cook I have known for many years. I honestly feel sorry for him."

Schroder said it had become "quite obvious" to him that Cook was "determined to find coach Butts guilty as charged and that is the manner in which his investigation proceeded."

Cook said that during a closed-door conference he had with Butts during his investigation, he was shown telephone company records of calls made by Butts "to persons known to be interested in gambling."

A rundown of Butts' long distance calls, as released by Cook, showed he made 16 calls to Frank Scrobey in Chicago, nine of them during September, 1962, and one from Birmingham—site of the Georgia-Alabama game—on the day of the game.

Gambling Trial Witness

Scobey was a federal government witness in a 1959 gambling ring trial in Terre Haute, Ind. He testified he made "several" telephone calls to a Terre Haute based syndicate to place bets on football games and the horse races. He said he never made a bet of less than $1,000.

Cook said Butts "continued to deny" that he had information as to the gambling operations of the individuals and insisted that his calls to them were on a personal basis and "had to do with business enterprises in which he was engaged, such as a small loan business in Florida and other projects and that they had nothing to do with football."

Sanders ordered the report filed as an official document of the executive department and sent a copy to Southeastern Conference Commissioner Bernie Moore, who is conducting his own investigation of the affair.

Cook also conceded that Butts had not broken any criminal laws but he asked Sanders to permit him to remain in the case so he could "cooperate and collaborate" with the Senate rackets subcommittee which is studying the case for violation of federal gambling laws.

The attoney general included a detailed statement of Butts' financial affairs showing that he had an annual salary of less than $16,000 but that his total assets were $349,287, his liabilities were $143,299 and his net worth was $205,988.

Overhears Phone Call

The full-scale investigation into Butts' alleged outside activities while he was a trusted and famous coach and athletic director for the Georgia Bulldogs was touched off by the story of an Atlanta insurance salesman, George P. Burnett.

Burnett said he was hooked up by accident to a telephone conversation between Butts and Bryant. He said he heard Butts give the other coach information on Georgia football secrets.

After an investigation that brought in members of Butts' coaching staff and records of approximately 5,000 telephone calls, letters, and bank statements, Cook concluded that Butts and Bryant had a 16-minute telephone conversation Sept. 13, 1962.

During their talk, Cook concluded, "there was an exchange of conversation regarding football plays, formations and techniques which might be employed by coach Johnny Griffith of Georgia in the game" between Georgia and Alabama.

He said the conversation, as recorded by Burnett in notes, "dealt with specific offensive and defensive formations, patterns, plays and information with respect to players of the University of Georgia."

Crais, Chancellor Discuss Athletics

By VANCE BARRON, JR.

A meeting between Tom Crais and Chancellor Aycock recently failed to resolve any outstanding differences in the original positions of either.

Crais said yesterday that he would "stand on my original statement. I heard rumors and reported them as rumors. I had a good meeting with Aycock, and he convinced me of his sincerity. However, I do not feel my position has changed." Crais said earlier that he felt that he was fired because his views were in conflict with those of the other coaches.

Aycock said in an interview yesterday that Crais' dismissal was not an issue of "academic freedom." "The confusion is," he said, "that no one disagrees with his right to express his opinion about 'big-time' athletics. The point is that when he says that there are 'blatant violations of UNC principles' involved, he should have some support for his statement. If he has any information, I think he ought to say what it is."

Aycock said that Crais mentioned two alleged incidents of special favortism to athletes to him. Crais gave him the name of a person who supposedly knew of a case before the Honor Council in which an athlete received special consideration. Aycock said, however, that the person mentioned was no longer in school and could not be located.

A second incident was one in which a professor was approached by someone to change the grade of an athlete. The professor refused, however, said Aycock. The basis for suspicion in this case was the fact that the athlete involved returned to school the following fall. The Chancellor said the athlete returned not because the grade was changed, but because he came to summer school and made up his deficiency. This fact was overlooked, according to Aycock.

Aycock said that it was "all right to criticize 'big-time' athletics, but when you start making specific charges that is a 'horse of a different color.'" The Chancellor said that the Director of Athletics, Mr. Erickson, felt that anyone in such a position as that of Mr. Crais should not make such "unfounded statements." He pointed out that Mr. Crais still held his position with the University, that of a part-time instructor in the Physical Education department.

"I would be happy to pursue any information that he could give me concerning this matter," said Aycock. "The encouraging thing is that he has not been able to produce any. I agree with his general statement about 'big-time' athletics. Wherever you have 'big-time' athletics there is a temptation to cut corners. We are constantly trying to avoid this temptation; our policy is to forestall it. It is very clear that if Crais has any definite information about abuses, it won't be anything he knew on Friday."

There has been a movement on campus to write in Crais as a candidate for president of the Carolina Athletic Association. Crais said yesterday that he would accept if elected, but that he didn't think he was eligible. Polly Hastings, chairman of the Elections Board, affirmed this yesterday. According to Miss Hastings, he would be uneligible because of his failure to turn in an expense account statement before the noon deadline yesterday.

Carolinas-Virginia NSA Confab Slated

The newly-elected president and vice-president of the student body and the delegates to the NSA National Student ongress will represent UNC at the spring assembly of the Carolinas-Virginia region of the National Student Association this week-end.

The regional will be held at Greensboro College. Delegates from over 30 colleges and universities in North and South Carolina and Virginia are expected.

Carey McWilliams, Jr., professor of government at Oberlin College, will speak Friday night at a banquet. His topic is student autonomy and relations between student governments and the university administration.

Al Lowenstein, professor at State College and past NSA president, will speak Friday on international student relations.

Next year's officers for the region will be elected Saturday. Harry DeLung, UNC NSA Coordinator, has announced his candidacy for president.

Positions Open

In addition to the six delegates who will attend from UNC, there are six alternate positions. According to student body president Inman Allen, students will be appointed this week to fill the alternate positions. Those interested should sign up in the student government offices. Expenses will be paid by student government.

Tim Manring, national affairs vice president of NSA, will be at the assembly. He is expected to speak about the functions of NSA, and suggest programming to new student government officers. Manring was president of the student body at Washington State University last year.

Seminars will be held Saturday morning and afternoon on: (1) international student relations, (2) student government-administration-faculty relations, (3) Campus political organizations, and (4) orientation for the National Student Congress and NSA reforms.

First Orientation

According to DeLung, this will be the first time the region has undertaken an orientation for the Congress. He said, "Because most delegates to a Congress have never attended one before, we have found that there is a tendancy to feel lost and confused during many of the functions. It is hoped that by preparing the delegates in this manner, we will be able to have one of the strongest regions present."

Students attending the Greensboro assembly from UNC will leave Chapel Hill late Friday afternoon. Those who plan to attend who can take cars should contact DeLung.

The Student Peace Union: A Remarkable Organization

This campus is virtually choked with innumerable student organizations. There are groups to socialize, revolutionize, and mesmerize the student body. And any college kid worth his weight in salt has managed to become involved in the workings of at least one of these many movements.

If an individual cannot see the way clear to an involvement in the machinations of student government, he may still offer his ideas and services to one of the various "clubs" which add to the local color of a university community, and which constantly cry for new members.

The temptation is to pitch all of these swell organizations into one amorphous lump and to disregard the lot of them. However, occasionally a group of individuals will band together for some particular purpose and manage to pursue an end or set of ideals with such enthusiasm that their action, their organization, merits public commendation. The Student Peace Union is such an organization.

* * *

Whether or not one believes in the stands or goals of the SPU, he would be a fool to deny that they are a remarkable organization. Since its conception in December 1962, the local chapter of the Student Peace Union has conscientiously and enthusiastically undertaken a number of projects which merit praise as instances of successful planning and participation to a degree uncommon on this campus.

During its brief existence, the Chapel Hill SPU has: sponsored weekly (Wed. night) open seminars, with book reviews and discussions; sponsored a delegation to the United Nations Model Assembly; opened and supplied, in conjunction with the International Relations Committee, a library in the "Y" building containing books and periodicals concerning international relations and the arms race; brought the renowned film "Power Among Men" to the campus; worked continually to eliminate racial discrimination in Chapel Hill; distributed innumerable leaflets; and endeavored to set up new chapters on the campuses of Women's College, A&T, Guilford, and North Carolina College in Durham.

The project of immediate concern to the SPU is a proposed picketing of the College Cafe, in protest to that establishment's segregation policies.

Surely, in light of the many and varied activities undertaken by the local chapter, it is quite obvious that they do not feel limited to concern only over the cold war and related arms issues. Although the basic concern of the organization is for the problems of increased global tensions.

The "statement of purpose" drawn up by the national organization makes clear the objections and aspirations of Peace Union members: "The Student Peace Union is an organization of young people who believe that neither war nor the threat of war can any longer be successfully used to settle international disputes and that neither human freedom nor the human race can long survive in a world committed to militarism . . . Without committing any member to a precise statement of policy, the SPU draws young people together for a survey of alternatives to war. . . ."

* * *

One member of the Peace Union succinctly stated the aims and intentions of the local chapter with; "We feel it necessary to devote a great deal of time to making people aware that there is an alternative to being either Red or dead. . . . We hope to maintain a running dialogue with persons interested in the problems and hopes of alternatives to war."

We find it indeed remarkable that with members not even committed to "a precise statement of policy," the local Student Peace Union has managed to get more things done than any number of student groups that commit their members to virtual extinction of personality. (CW)

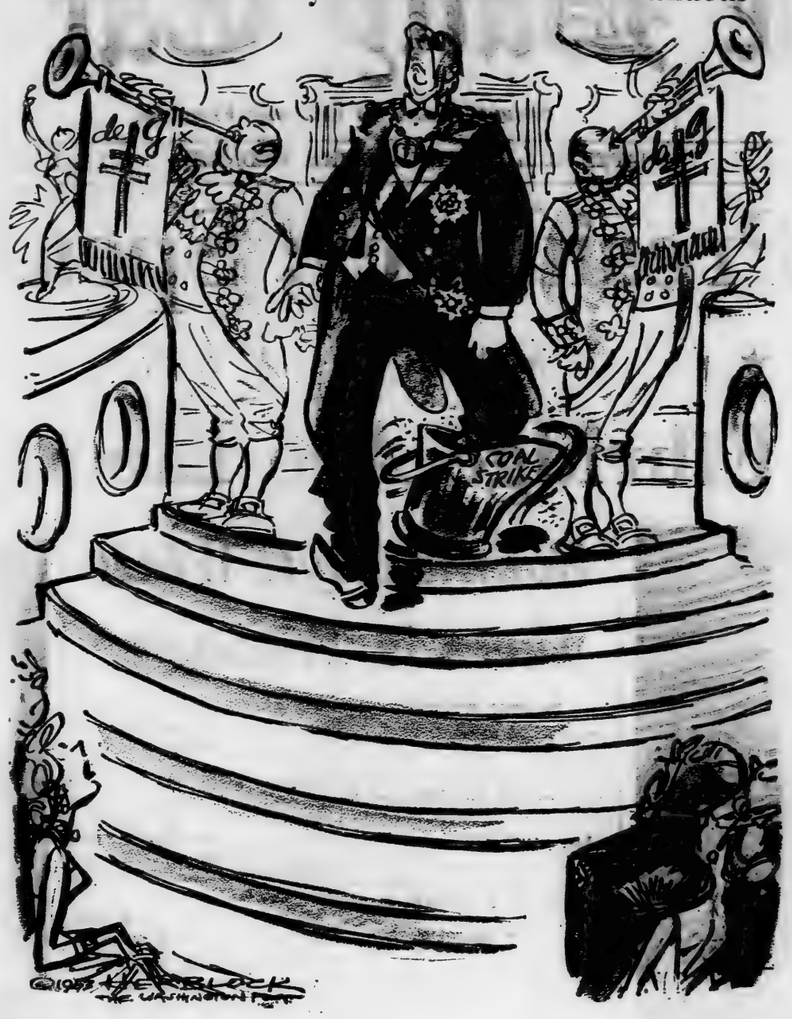
Guatemalan Democracy

Guatemala was the scene of another military coup Sunday. President Ydigoras, who had another year to serve on his six-year term was deposed and sent into exile.

To quote from the AP story: "Congress was dissolved. The constitution was suspended. All political activity was ordered halted. The people were urged to remain calm."

What was the comment of the new military head of government? Elections would be held "at an unspecified date", in "an effective, democratic climate."



Democracy certainly takes some strange forms . . . (JC)

THE REPORTER

The United States Information Agency has been at it again. Insistent Republican prodding has produced the admission that those polls to measure what foreigners think of us which were referred to so frequently in the 1960 campaign are still with us, although in slightly different form. The old, classical query — "Who's tougher? We or they?"—is no longer part of the routine. Here's the sort of questions foreigners get asked these days. Quickly now, what are the informational interests and general media habits of urban Cambodian radio owners? Stumped? Well, it seems they aren't interested in a damned thing outside Cambodia. What is the impact of a U. S. visit on the attitudes of the Burmese grantees toward various aspects of American life? (A Burmese grantee, friend, is a student from Burma who receives a grant to study in the United States.) The impact, among other things, is that juvenile delinquency here is worse than the grantee thought.

Two polls of particular interest were "world-wide reactions to the election of President Kennedy," taken just after the election, and the "impact of Castro upon Latin-American public opinion." In the first, the USIA found knowledge of the American election was "remarkably high" and opinion of Mr. Kennedy favorable. In the second, we are told that eighty-six per cent of Brazilian rural inhabitants had never heard of Castro. A net plus, we'd say.

Who is the "most admired person living today in any part of the world"? Why, John F. Kennedy, that's who. Who says so? Canadians say so—or did in January, 1962. (They may feel a little differently these days.) The President scored a full eighteen percentage points ahead of a Quebec politician and eight ahead of Winston Churchill his nearest rival. Nineteen per cent of the West Germans feel that U.S.-Bonn relations have improved; fifteen per cent feel they have deteriorated; fifty per cent see no change; the rest had no opinion (June, 1962). Two out of three adult Frenchmen think that JFK was "right to act as he did" in the Cuban crisis. Can two out of three Frenchmen be wrong?

We had just finished lifting a toe of rum to this heartening evidence of the unrivaled success of the New Frontier when the USIA informed us that confidence in U. S. leadership had dropped a bit by February this year, while the Russians were gaining. Two out of three Frenchmen, it turns out, can change their minds: appreciation of the Russians in France moved from minus 35 per cent to plus 21 per cent, the highest rate of approval in Europe. Nonetheless, we're still at a record high—and so we were surprised when USIA Director Edward R. Murrow let it be known that some polls are still classified as "confidential." We had thought declassification of such polls was a central plank in Mr. Kennedy's campaign platform. They will be declassified after two years. Mr. Murrow said, unless "the interests of national security" interfere. Well, that settled that—the most interesting polls are still locked in the USIA valuts. Meanwhile, we must content ourselves with the polls that have been released. We'll start with "communications habits of the Chinese minority in Bangkok and Southern Thailand" and move along to a "survey of post utilization and assessment of IPS materials and services." It's rather dull reading, but apparently there's always a happy ending.

Reapportionment

Georgia Unit Decision By Court Welcomed

GREESBORO DAILY NEWS

There are no wails of sorrow here for the infamous Georgia "unit system" of voting, which the Supreme Court outlawed in an 8-1 ruling this week. The Georgia system was an outrageous device of rural supremacy over the cities. Significantly the Georgia legislature had already lowered it into an unlamented grave; the Supreme Court merely tossed on a few shovels of dirt.

So the end of the unit voting system in Georgia is welcome; what is less welcome is the way Justice Douglas disposed of it in his majority opinion for the court. Justice Douglas did not say, as he might have, that it is grossly irrational for one voter in a rural county to have 99 times the voting power of a voter in Atlanta; he did not, that is, make the offense a matter of degree.

Here, as we understand it, is how Justice Douglas did argue: The question before the court had nothing to do with apportionment — (though as we shall protest in a moment, there may be an intricate relationship between voting and apportionment that is inescapable). What the court had to decide, reasoned Justice Douglas, was only this: Shall each voter's vote, once electoral boundaries are drawn, count the same as every other vote within that district? The answer, he says, is yes: "The conception of political equality from the Declaration of Independence to Lincoln's Gettysbury Address, to the 15th, 17th and 19th amendments can only mean one thing — one person, one vote." So saying, the majority then discussed as "inapposite" in a string of caustic footnotes the defense arguments that the "one person, one vote" rule applies to federal electoral districts if it applies to state electoral districts — and thus casts doubt upon the electoral college and the U. S. Senate, among other institutions. "The inclusion of the electoral college in the Constitution," Justice Douglas held, "implied nothing about the use of an analogous system by a state in a statewide election."

We dwell at this length on the justice's majority opinion because, however right its effect, in our view it opens huge questions as to implications without setting down an intelligible guideline to the task of dealing with malapportionment. After all, the Georgia unit system did not discriminate against voters within their voting districts when it came to electing state legislators! It was not a device for weighing votes; it was a device for assuring rural ascendancy — that is, a device of malapportionment.

* * *

First of all, moving to the body of the argument, we are at a loss to understand how the question of vote-weighing may be so neatly separated from the question of apportionment. The North Carolina Constitution, for instance, says that the State Senate must represent "as near as may be" the same number of voters — but it says "near"; it lays down no absolute requirement. It makes the question one of degree. By the yardstick of the Douglas holding, must the North Carolina Constitution now be amended to institute absolute head-count democracy; Must every man's vote be weighted exactly as the next man's, down to .9999 purity? If there may be a mathematical discrepancy, how large will Justice Douglas permit it to be? Is .8888 enough to satisfy the "one person, one vote" rule; or must it come closer? In asking these questions we do not imply any brief for malapportionment; but neither do we believe that all inequities of voting by their very nature) are intolerable under a system of representative democracy. Pure democracy is a chimera.

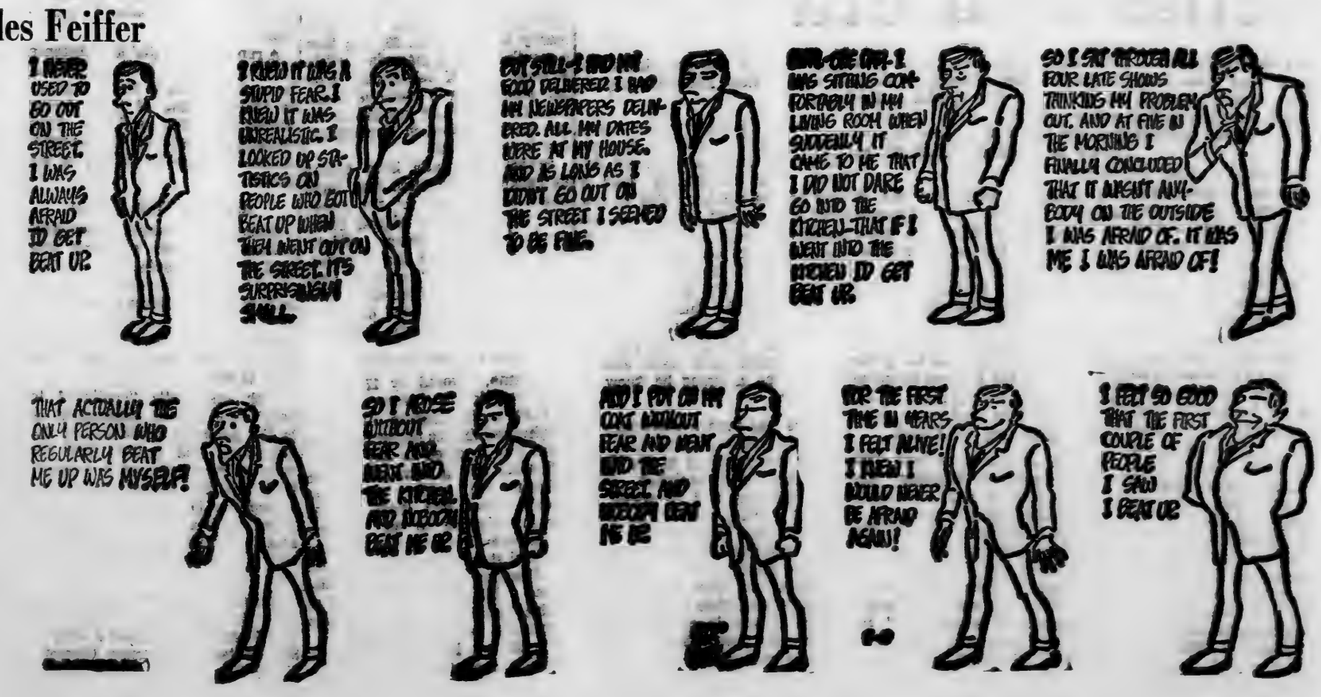
"Once the geographical unit . . . is designated," writes Justice Douglas, "all who participate in the election are to have an equal vote. . . ." At one level this is a mere truism: Everyone who votes in a North Carolina senatorial district (leaving aside the mischief played by absentee ballots or other forms of fraud) counts the same. But Justice Douglas, surely, is aiming at more than a truism; and the key to the matter lies in that phrase, "once the geographical unit . . . is designated." For one cannot have an equal in number per official to every other district; and those districts cannot be "designated" without some rule of thumb. So it strikes us that one cannot have a meaningful pronouncement on the "one person, one vote" issue until one has a meaningful pronouncement on the issue of apportionment.

On the one hand, Justice Douglas speaks as if this decision had only statewide, or intrastate, implications. But then, forgetting this restriction, he calls to his support the moral sanctions (they can hardly be called constitutional) of "the Declaration of Independence" and "Lincoln's Gettysburg Address," not to speak of three constitutional amendments. Is there not a contradiction here? If these documents are binding on the states, if their demand is "one person, one vote" for the voters of Georgia, why is it not for "one person, one vote" for the voters of every state when they cast ballots for President? They are, after all, national documents; may their effect on national elections be escaped?

Our view of last year's decision in the Tennessee case, which we welcomed, rested on two features: One was that the court presumed to lay down no rules as to how votes might or might not be weighted in state elections. The other was that the court's decision, in its general effect, would be a "gun behind the door," reminding state legislators of their solemn obligation to establish reasonable representative democracy within state borders. Georgia, for that matter, scrapped its county-unit voting system without a judicial shot being fired — it was a classic case of the force of the Tennessee decision. But we had not supposed that the Tennessee decision would lead on to a writ for Jacobin-style democracy which seems the gist of Justice Douglas' majority opinion in the Georgia case. The Georgia decision, whose end result is wholly appropriate, reaches that result by dubious argument; and that argument may well cause trouble.

Who Is Offside?

Raleigh News & Observer



Athletic Director Chuck Erickson may not have gotten his backfield in motion before the ball was snapped when he fired Freshman Tennis Coach Tom Crais but he certainly invited a good, sharp look at his play.

This month Crais in a letter to The Daily Tar Heel charged that the University's honor council had made concessions to athletes brought before it for judicial hearings. Now Erickson has fired the tennis coach for making these "unfitting remarks." Crais may be guilty of unfitting action, as Erickson says. But by firing him he has made the question as to whether Crais is guilty a small matter. Erickson has blown up the tennis ball into volley ball proportions.

Maybe all employees of the athletic department at the University are under a duty to keep their mouths shut about anything which seems derogatory to athletics in the views of their superiors. Maybe as a man on the inside Crais should not have expressed opinions about the petting of athletes which many on the outside suspect. Still Crais raised a point about which the public has a proper interest. And, in firing him for it, Erickson has sharpened suspicions and not merely gotten rid of a man.

Short shrift was accorded Crais. But it will take longer, clearer investigation to determine whether Crais' charge was true. The public should have the benefit of it. By firing his tennis coach Erickson has put the whole business of undue tenderness and special privilege to athletes as Chapel Hill on trial.

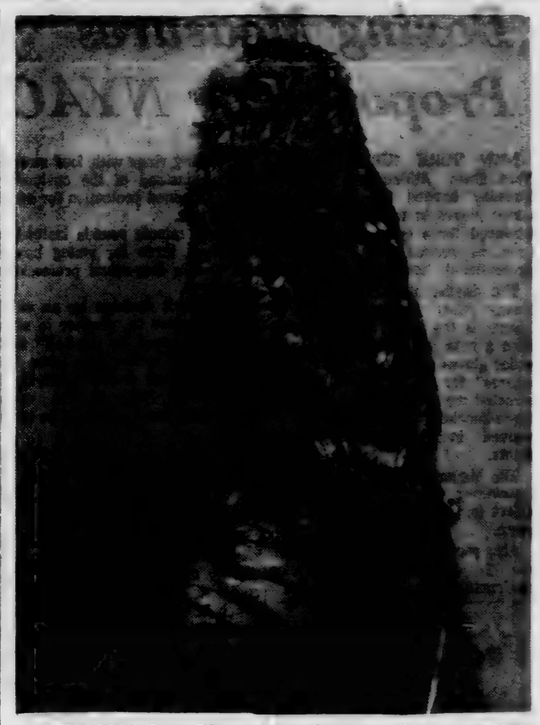
Police Squelch Panty Raid; Student Charged With Lie

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Plans for another panty raid on Cobb dormitory were squelched Monday night by University officials, campus police, IDC representatives and resident advisors from various dorms in the upper and lower quads.



The second panty raid attempt in as many days began around 10 o'clock when about 15 firecrackers, set off periodically by a time fuse set-up exploded in Emerson Stadium. This noise brought several men out of their dorms and they in turn encouraged others to join them in their march.

The small crowd achieved very little organizational success due to the presence of the police and other campus officials, who had heard rumors of the proposed panty raid.

Dean of Men William Long said yesterday that one male student was reported to the Men's Council on a charge of lying to administration officials. Long said that one official asked the "rowdy" student his name and address, and the student told them a false name and a false address. Long said that after checking information, they found out the student's real name and address.

Long stressed the point again that many students don't realize what they are getting into when they participate in a demonstration of this type.

Long and Campus Safety Officer Arthur Beaumont said that if a student failed to produce his registration card if asked (according to federal law the registration card is supposed to be carried at all times) the student would be subject to arrest by an officer of the law.

Boxing Measures Proposed By NYAC

NEW YORK (UPI)—The New York State Athletic Commission Tuesday banned the use of six-ounce gloves in title fights and introduced three other safety measures to reduce the hazards of professional boxing.

The deaths of world champions Benny (Kid) Paret and Davey Moore in the space of little more than a year led the commission to order gloves of "not less than eight ounces" for all bouts and further directed the mandatory eight count, three-knockdown rule may not be waived in future championship fights.

The bigger glove and mandatory knockdown rules already were in effect for all but title bouts in the state.

Also recommended by Gen. Melvin L. Krulewitch, commission chairman:

1. Boxing rings with four strands of rope instead of the customary three as added protection for smaller boxers.

2. Two minute rounds instead of the usual three for young boxers engaged in four-round professional bouts.

3. A quick decision by an existing committee on whether to eliminate the "saved by the bell" factor in boxing by having referee continue his count over a fallen fighter after the bell. If the count reached 10, the bout would be terminated.

4. Further study by an existing committee on the advisability of eliminating, reducing or altering the method of taping a boxer's hands.

Most of those measures were recommended in a report last weekend by the state's joint legislative committee on professional boxing which began an investigation after Paret's death in 1962.

Frosh Golfers Finish Second

UNC's freshman golf team finished second in a Big Four meet at Raleigh Monday with Guy Smith's 3-over-par 75 leading the Tar Babies.

Duke's Blue Imps won the meet with a four-man score of 299, 14 strokes ahead of UNC's 313.

Wake Forest finished third with 323 and home-standing N. C. State was four at 328.

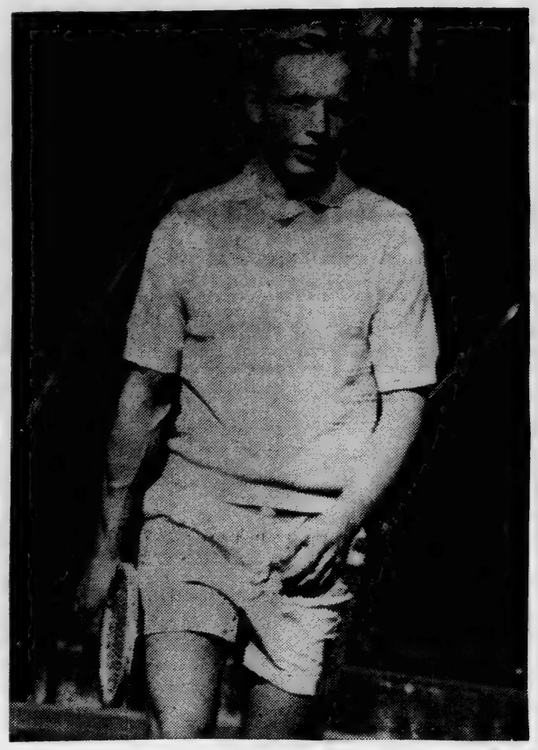
Duke's Tommy Danluck was medalist with a one-over-par 73.

Amherst Team Plays Carolina Lacrosse Club

North Carolina's Lacrosse Club will go after its second straight victory of the season this afternoon at 3 against Amherst.

The Tar Heels were impressive last week in a 14-6 victory over Randolph-Macon, but the Massachusetts team may be a tougher hurdle.

The offensive punch is led by Jeff Parker, a 6-5 freshman who scored three goals and five assists in the opener. Tom Thayer scored five goals, and Bud Adams scored one goal and one assist.



The Tar Heels scrimmaged Amherst in an exhibition yesterday and will play a regulation contest today. The northerners are on a spring tour through the south.

Wake Golfers Wallop Heels At Winston

The top-ranked tennis player for North Carolina's powerful Tar Heels this spring is also the shortest man on the squad. George Sokol, junior from Bryn Mawr, Pa., stands only 5-9, but has a lot of tennis packed into that frame. Playing in the No. 1 spot last year as a sophomore, Sokol cut down 22 straight opponents before losing the first match in team competition of his career to Miami's Ron Mandelstam.

Netters To Play Williams: No Ted

By LOUIS LEGUM

It's been a long, hot week now since Coach Don Skakle's tennis team took the courts against an opponent, and then it was business as usual with a rather callous butchering of Michigan State.

But this is another week, and while it may be even more warmer than the last, the Tar Heels suddenly find themselves with three consecutive matches, the first being against Williams this afternoon at 2 p.m. Tomorrow they will do an encore with Williams, and then face tough Harvard on Friday.

To no one's surprise, Carolina has been playing so far this season just as everyone has expected them to. Dartmouth twice and Michigan State once found it a hopelessly impossible task to dent the Carolina armor. Williams, which has had the misfortune to lose several of its lettermen from a competent 1962 squad, should find the going equally frustrating.

In an unusual sense, the only setback for the Tar Heels has been the unexpected loss of number two man Ted Hoehn because of an appendectomy. Although he is out of the hospital and walking around, he will not be able to start playing again for a while yet.

So Carolina's "solid six" has been temporarily reduced to five. But it is an indication of Skakle's strong bench that he was able to put untried Pete Myers into the number sixth slot with admirable success. The same is true with the doubles where Kirby Jones and Stan Cocke have emerged from the "pit crew" to make a formidable doubles combination.

Except for these changes brought on by Hoehn's illness, the line-up against Williams will remain the same: George Sokol—1, Charlie Shaffer—2, Bitsy Harrison—3, O. H. Parrish—4, Keith Stoneman—5, and Myers—6. In the doubles it will probably be: Shaffer and Parrish—1, Harrison and Stoneman—2, and Jones and Cocke—3.

Skakle feels that the week-long lay-off has made his team ready to face Williams. He commented that, "they're really anxious to play another match, and I think they'll play pretty well."

Last season Williams was a 9-0 victim of the Tar Heels, but the individual matches were a lot closer than the scores indicate. As a rule, Williams fields a team representative of the strong tennis found in the East. This year their number one man is Brooks Goddard, who ironically enough, happens to be the elder brother of Carolina freshman player Andy Goddard.

By DON KING

Carolina's golf team traveled to Winston-Salem yesterday and came away unmercifully clubbed by Wake Forest, 17½-3½.

The Heels were unable to stop the relentless Deacons who won every match but one, and that was a tie.

Three Demon Deacons shutout their Chapel Hill visitors. Sensational sophomore Jay Sigel blanked Abe Andes, 3-0, and Ken Folkes and Ed Honeycutt did the same to Les Fleisher and Mike Dore.

Letterman Bobby Edgerton slashed Carolina's George Reams, 2½-1½, and Wakeman Don Hedrick whipped Ed Hoopes by the same score.

UNC's Tommy Arnold lost his match to Jimmy Thompson by a 2-1 score.

The only Tar Heel able to stem the tide was Skip Tucker who gained a tie with Frank Merchant. The final tally was 1½-1½.

Medalist for the afternoon was Deacon Ken Folkes. He shot a 2-under-par 69.

The loss gave Carolina a 3-1 dual match record with a match with South Carolina pending ACC commissioner Jim Weaver's decision. The Tar Heels hold wins over Princeton, Davidson, and Clemson.

In a tri-meet with Wake and Duke, the Heels placed third.

Today the Tar Heels will play Ohio State on Finley Golf Course.

Heels Play Delaware Tomorrow

The UNC baseball team will play Delaware tomorrow at Emerson Stadium. The following day the Heels will play Duke here.

After an opening game defeat at the hands of Southern Illinois, the Tar Heels have remained undefeated for four games.

Following the Friday game, the next home game will be April 22.

Masters: Everyone Gripes Except Gary

AUGUSTA, Ga. (UPI) — Most of the favorites except little Gary Player complained about personal ailments of their game Tuesday as they went through another practice round for the Masters golf tournadent starting Thursday.

Defending champion Arnold Palmer, the tourney favorite, still was not satisfied with his driving but recalled the situation was the same just before the Masters last year.

"I'll work on it hard again tomorrow," said Palmer. The betting was he would straighten out his tee shots before the bell rings.

U. S. Open champion Jack Nicklaus said the bursitis in his right hip "still bothers me and I just can't tell how I will do."

Another favorite, Dow Finsterwald complained that he couldn't put his game together.

"If I'm driving and approaching well, my putting is off," he said. "And when my putts are dropping, I'm not driving or approaching."

Bothered By Cyst

Big George Bayer, who admits he should play the Masters course well "but I never do," said he was being bothered by a cyst on his right knee.

And Slammin' Sam Snead wasn't happy over the pain at the bottom of his left foot.

"It's all right for nine holes and then starts paining," he said.

Doug Sanders had blisters on two fingers of his right hand and hoped they would be all right by Thursday.

Jay Hebert, the former PGA champion, disclosed that the bursitis in his right arm still had not cleared up completely.

Apart From Others

Player appeared to be the only one of the leading contenders who seemed to be satisfied with everything.

"I'm playing well and feeling fine," said Player, the only foreign golfer ever to win the Masters. He picked Palmer as the man to beat.

"Don't worry, he'll be ready on Thursday," Player predicted.

Most of the golfers complained about the hard greens.

"You can't make the ball stick," explained Mike Souchak, who said he hadn't played enough this season and as a result "my game is rusty."

He recalled that the Masters course was playing now as it did in 1956 when Jackie Burke won.

"But it can change by Thursday if they start watering the greens or if it rains," Souchak continued. "They have been watering the fairways to such an extent that you hardly get any roll at all on your drives."

Have Putting Woes

Burke wasn't satisfied with his putting.

"I'm putting just fair," he said, "and to win here you have to putt well. There are so many in the field who can win here, if they get hot with their putter."

Art Wall, who won the Masters in 1959, said he was hitting the ball the best he has since a back injury forced him to the sidelines, but "I'm not putting nearly as well as I did four years ago."

And so it went with all the contenders except Player complaining about one thing or another.

Lawler Calls On Students To Stop Demonstrations

By MIKE PUTZEL

Student Body President-Elect Mike Lawler called a meeting of twenty student leaders last night to try to stop a predicted "unauthorized demonstration," and called for "students, rather than administrative action" in student affairs.

Lawler, said that the planned demonstration against the new three-man room policy threatened to turn into a mass "panty raid."

Such action he said might seriously damage UNC's hopes for a new stude union and other appropriation bills now being considered by the General Assembly.

Lawler also told the students that student autonomy is at stake and that they must take responsiblity for their own actions or the administration will not look favorably on the students in the present negotiations regarding the apartment rule and the Beat Dook Parade.

"Do not participate in any demonstration tonight," said Lawler. "It's not worth sacrificing the union for a panty raid."

William Long, dean of Men sent orders yesterday aiternoon to all dorm aavisors to try and stop the demonstrat.on. He told them to have dorm meetings called by the dorm presidents and to take action to see that the raids were stopped.

Long stated in his memorandum that students are required to carry draft cards at all times and that advisors could apprehend demonstrators by calling for identification cards or getting a police officer to do so.

Lawler, who went to see eDan Long immediately after his meeting with student leaders, told the dean that he felt that the conduct of students outside the classroom should handle the impending riot.

Long agreed and said that he would call off the dorm meetings and let students handle the situation in their own way. Lawler said that he had already sent several students down to the lower and upper quads to talk to dorm officers and other students who might be able to stop any demonstration.

IDC MEETING

The IDC will hold an important meeting of all old and new dorm presidents and representatives tonight at 7 in 104 Gardner Hall.

IDC president Jerry Good yesterday urged all members to be present at the meeting as the duties and responsibilities of dorm presidents and representatives in cases of student demonstrations will be discussed.

Pi Kappa Phi Chapter Here Nation's Best

The UNC chapter of Pi Kappa Phi fraternity has received notice that it has been rated number one in the latest of the national fraternities' ratings.

Carolina's Kappa chapter has had a perfect 400 rating for the 62-63 school year. The national rating is based on membership, scholarship, financial policies, chapter newspapers and reports to the national fraternity.

Fraternity president Bill Ramsey attributed the national rating to had work by the local chapter and the planning and guidance given by the chapter advisor, the late J. Boyd Flynn, stricken by a heart attack March 2.

The local chapter has in three years grown from a house of seven brothers to its present brotherhood of thirty-one. In the fall of 1962, the Carolina chapter was presented with the Theron A. Houser Award for being the "most improved" chapter in the nation.

Dean Carmichael returned from Viet Nam in August after spending a year there as Smith-Mundt Visiting Professor in the University of Saigon's Faculty of Letters.

Previous grants awaded to Dean Carmichael include a Fulbright Lectureship in English and American Literature at the Philippine Normal College in Manila in 1952.

Dean Carmichael is a M.A. and Ph.D. graduate of Vanderbilt University and became UNC's Dean of Women in 1946.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFS

Kennedy Wants Russians Out

...WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy said Wednesday there are roughly 12,000 to 13,000 Russian troops still in Cuba and he wants more of them pulled out.

He said about 1,000 have left since last reported on the touchy situation two weeks ago.

At the same time he told anti-Castro refugees who want to liberate their homeland they would de better to join the U. S. Army for training than conduct internationally dangerous hit-and-run raids on Cuba.

The President said that budget cuts proposed by former President Dwight D. Eisenhower would plunge the country into an economic decline and thwart efforts to overtake Russia in space.

Firing back at his White House predecessor, the President said he did not want to duplicate the recession-ridden final years of the Eisenhower administration. He also regarded cooly Eisenhower's long-time attitude toward space programs.

Gregory Arrested In Mississippi

GREENWOOD, Miss. (UPI)—Police broke up a voter registration march led by Dick Gregory Wednesday and arrested all 20 of the Negro participants—but not the nationally known comic.

Gregory immediately announced he was cancelling all of his night club engagements and would remain in this delta community to "fight this thing until the government sends in troops."

Coach Sensed Tip To Alabama

ATLANTA (UPI) — Georgia football coach Johnny Griffith said he saw nothing during the controversial 1962 Georgia-Alabama game to indicate Alabama had learned Georgia's secrets, documents in an investigation of the game showed Wednesday.

But Griffith said after looking at films of the game he did "have a feeling" the Alabama team had prior knowledge of Georgia's operations.

The Georgia coach's recollections of the game were included in testimony given to Attorney General Eugene Cook who was investigating a published report that former Georgia Athletic Director Wallace Butts gave secrets to Alabama coach Paul Bear Bryant.

Chest Misses Goal But Gets $4000 In Gifts

"Even though we didn't reach our goal of $6,000, we consider this year's Campus Chest Drive an over-all success."

This was the word yesterday from Jack Sechler, Campus Chest co-chairman, on the event's total of over $4,000.

"The Campus Chest Carnival lost about 20 rides because of the rain," he said. "The organizations that sponsored them had other things planned for the weekend following the original date set for the Carnival and couldn't come down to set them up."

The booths took in about 85% of the $650 cleared by the Carnival. Atttendance was set at about 3,000 by co-chairman Jim Riley.

The Chest cleared a total of about $4,400: $650 was made at the auction, $650 at the Carnival and about $3,100 came from solicitations.

Sechler, speaking for the Campus Chest, extended his thanks to "all the organizations that participated in any of the three phases of the Campus Chest Drive."

Co-chairmen for next year's Campus Chest are Betty Ward and Henry Morgan.

Sales Start Today On New Quarterly

The Spring issue of "The Carolina Quarterly," the University literary magazine, will go on sale today at Lenoir Hall and the bookstores around town. Editor Louis Bourne describes the magazine as "one of the largest issues we have published and one of the best.

"The fiction in this issue is stronger than that of the Winter issue, in some measure due to a long story by Leon Rooke whose work has appeared in The Noble Savage, Reflections, and elsewhere," Bourne said.

"We haven't always had an easy time getting good short stories for the magazine, for although we receive a good deal of material from around the country, much of it turns out to be offal since we haven't got a lot of money to pay out and most writers who think they've got a masterpiece on their hands will send it to The New Yorker and the like, in hopes of a nice pecuniary cut.

"What they don't know is that such magazines are shoveling the manuscripts back into the mailbox as fast as they can."

Bourne said The Quarterly has fared much better with fiction this time, however. "All of the stories," he said, "are entertaining, all of them show literary talent, and some of them are wholly successful like Ian T. MacMillan's story about two brothers' reactions to their mother's reaction to their father's funeral. Not as difficult as it sounds — just very clever with nice touches of fraternal, lambent humor."

Bourne described the poetry in this issue as "exquisite. There is no other word to describe it.

"We feel comfortable in saying we're publishing verse which is about as good as that of any literary magazine in the country. Take for example the March 30, 1963 issue of Saturday Review. There are two poems in that issue: George Cuomo's and David Cornel DeJong's. Both Cuomo and DeJong have appeared previously in The Carolina Quarterly, and in the latest issue we have three poems by DeJong and a review of his latest book of verse." Bourne said The Quarterly has "always had a potentially fine poetry market, but past editors have made hasty judgment, placing work of true merit next to stuff that would really seem embarrassing to us.

"The standard of editors in the past is not always those of present editors," Bourne added, and we feel we've been more careful this year, not selecting anything for publication until it's been thoroughly read and explicated.

"The good poets are in it for art anyway, and since they don't get paid much around the country, they publish in magazines they think have fine taste and will publish other quality poems with theirs.

"We're getting marvelous returns. And every once in a while a miracle occurs: some sensitive soul that we've never heard of sends us the one piece about which there can be no doubt. Witness Lucien Stryk's "Persian Suite" in the Spring issue — an eloquent Yeatsian evocation and affirmation of a past culture and much more besides."

Trio One Highlight Of Coming 'Jubilee'

The week of April 26, 27, and 28 has been set for JUBILEE, the Graham Memorial-sponsored spring week-end. Featured attractions will be The Four Preps, and the Chad Mitchell Trio.

The schedule for JUBILEE is as follows: Friday at 6:30, 8:30 and 10:30 p.m. the free flick will be "Butterfield 8." Friday at 8 p.m. on the lawn at Graham Memorial there will be a concert by the "FOUR PREPS," followed by a combo party with the "Jades."

Saturday there will be a lawn concert from 2 to 5 p.m. with the Migrants, the Duke Ambassadors and the Harlequins, and the UNC Men's Glee Club.

Five combo parties playing from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Graham Memorial, Steele Hall parking lot, the Planetarium parking lot, Ackland parking lot, and Y-Court will highlight Saturday night. Some of the combos are the Delmonicos," "Catalinas," "Trojans," and the "Checkmates." "The Buccaneer," starring Yul Brynner, will be Saturday's free flick.

Sunday afternoon there will be a carillon concert by Jack Hill at 1:30, then at 2:30 the "CHAD MITCHELL TRIO" will perform in a lawn concert.

The JUBILEE week-end will end with the Sunday Cinema, "Two Women," starring Sophia Loren. Sunday night there will also be a Petit Musicale production in the GM Lounge with Iain Hamilton.

"The Four Preps" began recording for Capitol Records in 1957, and their recording of "26 Miles" sold over a million copies in 1958. "Big Man" almost overtook "26 Miles" and helped The Preps snag recognition as "Most Promising Vocal Group" of 1958 in the Cash Box Magazine poll.

Other hits by The Four Preps include "Down by the Station," "Big Surprise," "Lazy Summer Night," "Got a Girl," and "Cinderella," which they sang in the movie "Gidget." By mid-summer of 1961, when their smash album, THE FOUR PREPS ON CAMPUS, became a national best-seller, it was apparent that the Preps had matriculated to college and adult audiences. Their college appearances have taken them to every state of the union.

Sunday afternoon's lawn concert with the CHAD MITCHELL TRIO will feature folk music as well as popular music. The trio draws its material from virtually every possible source—other folksingers, the Library of Congress, field recording, Manhattan night club revues, etc. They have appeared on television on the Pat Boone, the Bell Telephone Hour, Bob Newhart, Today, and Peggy Lee shows. Their nightclub engagements include the Blue Angel, Palmer House, Edgewater Beach Hotel, Padded Cell, the Crescendo, and many others. Their record albums include THE CHAD MITCHELL TRIO AT THE BITTER END, and MIGHTY DAY ON CAMPUS, both on KAPP records, and THE CHAD MITCHELL TRIO ARRIVES, on the Colpix label.

The entire week-end will be free to all students and their dates.

S.P. Holds Majority In Legislature

By JOEL BULKEY

The Elections Board yesterday began recounting ballots for representatives to the National Student Association (NSA), Summeh Congress and treasurer of the student body.

Also being recounted are votes for seats in Student Legislature from Dorm Men's 3 and a position on the Men's Council from Judicial District 1.

Unofficial returns now show the Student Party leading with 25 seats in the race for control of Student Legislature. The University Party controls 23 seats, with one seat being held by an independent and one seat still undecided.

At press time last night no new figures were available.

Unofficial results from Tuesday's campus elections show Inman Allen (UP), Kellis Parker (SP), Pete Wales (UP) and Phil Baddour (SP) as winners in the NSA race.

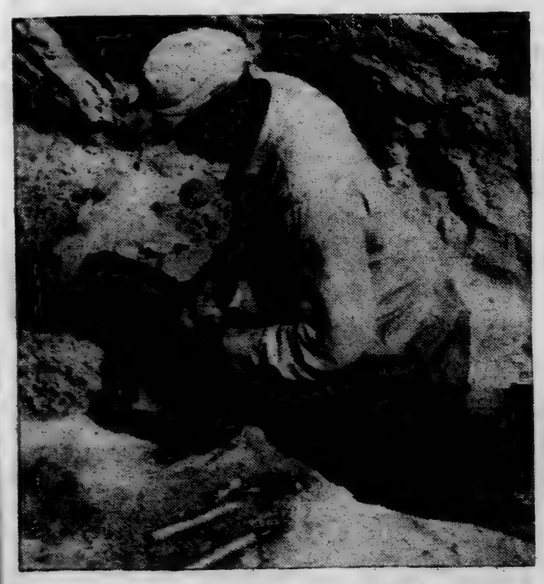
Baddour received 1,823 votes, only 15 more than John Uifelder (UP) for the fourth position. Vote totals show Allen with 2,444; Parker with 2,172; Wales 1,930; Virginia Carnes (UP) with 1,696, Vance Barron (SP) with 1,625; and Neal Jackson (SP) with 1,416.

Student Party candidate Dick Akers leads UP nominee Gerald Thornton by 79 votes, 2-066-1,907 for the treasurer's spot.

Final Results

In official results announced yesterday Mike Lawler (SP) polled 2,502 votes to 1,748 for Larry McDevitt (UP) in the presidential race; Bob Spearman (UP) collected 2,811 and Dick Ellis (SP) 1,361 for the vice-presidency; while Bonnie Hoyle (SP) netted 1,856 to Sara Broadhurst's (UP) total of 1,524.

Nancy Culler defeated Sherry Rottman, 467-412, for the position of chairman of the Women's Residence Council.



In the race for the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel, winners Dave Ethridge and Gary Blanchard, running as co-editors, totaled 2,502 votes. Opponents Chris Farran and Harry Lloyd amassed 1,222 and 411 votes, respectively according to the official results.

Senior Class Officers

Charlie Shaffer, unopposed candidate for president of the senior class, heads the slate of officers for next year. Woody Harrison (SP) defeated Richard Barrett (UP), 577-532(for the vice-presidency; Sue Drennan (UP) was unopposed for secretary; Mal Lesavoy (SP) topped Mickey Blackwell (UP), 572-519, for treasurer; and Joan Haley (UP) edged Bambi Ansley (SP), 576-526, for social chairman.

STUDENT LEGISLATURE

All new student legislature representatives should attend tonight's SL session at 7 p.m. on the fourth floor of New East.

About A Candidate Who Didn't Win

This is an editorial about a candidate who didn't win.

This is about a Tar Heel staff member most people had never heard of before the elections.

This is about a candidate for the DTH editorship who was soundly defeated by the workings of campus politics.

This is about Harry Lloyd.

* * *

Three years ago, as a freshman, Harry came up to the Tar Heel and began writing sports. Within several months he was asst. sports editor, and that spring became sports editor — one of the best in recent DTH history.

The next year he became managing editor and continued in that position during the present editorship.

For three years, if you wanted work done — work that no one else would take the time to do — Harry would do it. If there was a page that had to be laid out, headlines that had to be written, a story that had to be covered . . . Harry would do it. If a night editor was needed, if there was a hole in the paper — if the Daily Tar Heel needed anything done for it, Harry was the man to do it. When there was no one else—which was often—there was Harry.

He gained a greater knowledge of the paper's workings than some editors have had. He had, and maintained, a high regard for the newspaper as a living institution.

We disagreed with Harry on some issues affecting the paper — but we never ceased to respect him.

Last month Harry entered the race for editor. It was clear he had little chance of being elected — his opponents were sharper talkers and much better campaigners than he. Harry had no political orginization upon which to base his campaign.

Two days before the election Harry was urged to withdraw his name from the ballot, because his chances of election were so slim. He decided not to withdraw, however — in full knowledge he could not win — because he honestly and sincerely wanted to be editor and thought he could do the best job . . . and thus could not, with honesty, withdraw his name.

* * *

An election is a haphazard way to select a competent editor. Elections are strange creatures — they often pass over qualified individuals; they have been known to take worthy candidates and cruelly crush them.

Harry refused to be crushed by his defeat. The night of the election, after his race was decided, he was at the print shop writing headlines for the next day's DTH. No one asked him to do it — it wasn't his responsibility — he did it because it had to be done.

* * *

The election is over and Harry lost. But Harry will not disappear from the DTH office in bitterness, as some defeated candidates have in the past. Harry will continue to be there when the Tar Heel needs him. And the Tar Heel always will need a sincere and devoted craftsman. (JC)

Watch Another Western

About this time every year . . . a young man's fancy starts to wander. No longer is the object of spring's aroused desire merely a lady friend; but rather, a symbolic object of her apparel—panties.

All the frustrated kids who have not managed normal relationships with co-eds, for various and sundry reasons, find that the restlessness of a warm spring stirs their emotions anew and goads them into a mob action which can lead but to further frustration and embarrassment.

Tired of the television re-runs, and apparently charged with a bit of new hope, the kids in certain dorms slither out onto the campus in search of some excitement . . . to shout a lot, to say very little, they look to the super-fools for experienced and clever guidance.

Hooray, they're off. "This way, gang. Hey, you, come on!"

* * *

It seems a shame. It always is. Kids who need every moment they have to pour into introductory Math and English courses throw down their pencils, pick up the cry, and move off into the mob of thoughtless fools. They go in search of fun, excitement, relief, or trouble. They usually find a bit of each, and deserve a good deal of the last.

No, we cannot support the good-old-fashioned panty raid. We cannot even support the abortive attempt made last night to protest against crowded dormitory conditions.

There might be a time and a place for student demonstrations; indeed, we believe there is. But these ridiculous collections of firecracker throwing idiots would do well to go on back into the TV room and watch another western.

How about it, kids? (CW)

During the campaign we questioned certain aspects of their campaign, but never doubted they were capable journalists and sincere aspirants for the editorship.

We wish them the best of luck in their editorship.

'Big-Time' Athletics At Carolina

The Chuck Erickson-Tom Crais controversy seems to have brought up again the time-worn dilemma of whether the means justify the end. In this particular instance it is equally important to evaluate and define what these means and ends are.

First of all, what exactly is the role of athletics in a university community? There are many interpretations of this role ranging from the corpulent, affluent, "they better win, dammit," alumni, to the introspective student who frankly coudn't care whether Carolina fielded a football team, much less a winning one. Both types are extreme and probably out of touch with the realities of the situation.

It cannot be denied that athletic competition has always been a major part of the American tradition. Participation in sports extends to organized competition for eight-year old children to professional folf tournaments for past retirement citizens. Everyone knows about the New York Yankees; their winning tradition and spirit has virtually become a symbolization of our culture. Anyone who enjoys sports, which are innately competitive, almost always plays to win. And what's wrong with playing to win? Is it such a base, foul desire? If so, we might as well do away with our entire political system while we're at it.

* * *

THE PROBLEM, then, is not so much of organizing a campaign to eliminate the desire to win in athletics at Carolina; we already have enough of a problem in some of our sports that the campaign is hardly needed. What many people are against, and they ought to be against it, is the so-called "win-at-all-costs" philosophy. In actuality, no one has ever come up with any explicit definition of this philosophy, except for a few nebulous allusions to the barbarities of a Bear Bryant or the now famous Leo Durocher quote, "nice guys finish last." Who knows, maybe they do.

Assuming, however, that some interpretation of this doctrine does exist and is actively supported and practiced, how much does this happen to do with athletics at Carolina

Such an evaluation cannot be intelligently rendered without first considering that it is almost impossible to differentiate the athletic policies of one school from another. They have all interacted upon one another to establish a veritable more of college life that teams should win. Alumni and the students as well don't enjoy filing out to Kenan Stadium every Saturday in the fall to watch their beloved Tar Heels take a 50-0 pasting; the same can probably be said for every other university in the country, including the "de-emphasized" schools.

So what do we have at Carolina? As at most colleges across the land of a considerable size, football followed closely by basketball are the sports by which Carolina's athletic prowess is judged. The simple reason is that they are the most popular. Because of these standards our athletic department has no other choice but to commit itself to this mainstream and try to field outstanding teams in the two sports; to a considerable extent they have been successful, although there is certainly room for improvement.

* * *

IF OUR athletic department were to adopt the view that it is not so important to try to win at football or basketball then it would ultimately be jeopardizing the whole athletic program at Carolina. For the hard fact is that football almost by itself financially supports the other sports; without a football team that could not attract crowds there would be no money for the swimmers and the golfers.

Why is this so? To many people it seems unfair and even unethical to piusly consecrate a hierarchy of college athletics. Working the kinks out of an erratic backstroke of a tennis player is just as important to that tennis player as it is to a football player to learn how to deliver an effective crossblock.

But the irreparable facts of life are that what the quarterback does means much more to the spectator than what the broadstroke specialist does. This is not something that is found only in college athletics, it is reflected on every sports page across the nation. Like it or not, as far as a sports fan is concerned there is a differentiation between major and minor sports. It's a matter of preference and environment, just like people are Republicans and Democrats, and just like Americans are enthusiasts of hot dogs and french fried potatoes.

So merely because the sports fan in the United States is oriented towards what the score was on the Green Bay Packer-Detroit Lion game, are we to assume that the athletic department at Carolina is wrong in following a similar path?

Most of the students in that era have long departed, but many of the townspeople of Chapel Hill remember with considerable nostalgia the midnight dancing in the streets after the famous Carolina "miracle team" of 1956-57 won the national basketball championship from a favored Kansas team in triple overtime. Looking even further, many of the residents can point with pride to the great Charlie Justice era when we had some nationally prominent football teams. The feeling was carried so far that an edition of the Yackety Yack actually featured a picture of him on the cover.

* * *

CAN ANYONE at this University honestly say that a national soccer championship would have resulted in comparable displays of enthusiasm? Again the reason simply goes back to the fact that this community is more interested in football than soccer.

Is it such a reprehensible crime, then, that the athletic department reflects these obvious opinions in its policies? There wouldn't be much sense in erecting a 50,000-seat stadium for the lacrosse team, although participators and followers of lacrosse might think otherwise.

Thus, because most people are more interested in football and basketball, it is necessary that the bulk of our sports program be concentrated on these two fields. Since every other school follows essentially the same path, the competition in these areas is extremely intense. Football scouts comb the nation looking under every rock and in every corner for talent. If a school sits back and waits for the best players to come to them, then it will be in relative etrms priced out of the market. It's hard to ascertain what college initially instituted athletic scholarships, but it happened, and it's a fundamental part of every college athletic program.

In this sense these major sports do approach becoming businesses. Everyone is aware of the alumni clubs that channel thousands and thousands of dollars to their alma maters; Carolina has one, too, the Educational Foundation, either a very naive or callous name.

Why not take all this money and distribute it among the other starving sports, according to need? In the first place, this could never occur, because alumni quite probably wouldn't bother to contribute money to keep the wrestling or the cross country team going. Thus, if they didn't give to the Educational Foundation to support the major sports, then there wouldn't be football teams good enough to attract the crowds that bring in the money that goes to support the other sports. In short, it's a vicious circle.

This situation can be deplored and maybe it should be. But it is not the explicit fault of the University of North Carolina athletic department. It is the fault of every college athletic department, it is the fault of every daily newspaper, it is the fault of every midget league coach. Anyone with a grain of common sense knows that if Chuck Erickson got up at a meeting tomorrow and demanded that Carolina cease to award scholarships for football players he would be fired on the spot. Why would he be fired? It would be because he was going against the grain of what the majority of people wish, and they wish to have a good football team.

* * *

CRITICS of this system tend to go off on abstract tangents that it just doesn't seem right to give so much money to football. Maybe our federal government ought to stop appropriating annually $50 billion a year, for defense because it seems like such a waste. But to whom does it seem like a waste? If it were the conviction and will of the American people that we should stop spending so much on defense, then we would. We, as a whole, don't want to, however, and why should we do what we don't want to do?

If the student body and the alumni are interested in fielding football and basketball teams they can be proud of, then they should get what they want. Achieving teams that draw large crowds and even more money helps to insure that there is enough consideration given to the other sports.

With rare exceptions Carolina athletic teams are neither the best nor the worst in their respective areas. No one can convincingly argue that any sport is even anywhere near neglected to the point of dissolution and disorganization. Our tennis and swimming teams annually rank with the best in the nation, and in periodic spurts our soccer, golf, and baseball teams also do as well.

So what is there to complain about? Would critics affirm that it is better to lead the nation in every minor sport, and have the most deplorable football and basketball teams to the point of doing away with them? After all, maybe if we try hard enough, the students will learn to appreciate the skills of a pin in wrestling as much as they do a last minute touchdown pass for a victory. But why should the sports fans be forced to do what they don't want to do, just because it sounds better, at least on the surface?

Those who decry in anguish that college athletics has become big-time business ought to remember why it became so. It is WE who did it, every student, every alumnus, every sports enthusiast; it is what we wanted and apparently still want, and will almost certainly be wanting fifty years from now. Don't blame Chuck Erickson for this.

New Look At Campus Problem

THE CHARLOTTE NEWS

The House Committee on Higher Education has acted hastily and unwisely in denying UNC trustees requested when-and-where authority over expansion of the University system.

We suspect this has come about because the question was put to the committee in the context of protecting legislative prerogatives. If so, the vote was understandable for it goes without saying that the Assembly has not alone the right but the responsibility as well to exercise a check on the creation and growth of institutions that consume tax money in carrying out public obligations.

The real question, however, was not that simple. Instead of voting down a power grab by University trustees, the committee actually was cutting the heart out of a thoughtfully conceived program to create a true state university system and extend its benefits to many thousands of Tar Heel youth now beyond the reach and enrichment of higher education.

This program is the product of deliberation by the Commission on Education Beyond the High School, the Pearsall Committee of University trustees and of the governor of North Carolina.

Obviously there never was any intention of promoting a proliferation of UNC campuses at every sweetwater junction in the state. The intention was to take the question of University expansion out of the realm of politics and place it in the realm of education.

UNC trustees, judging on the basis of statutory criteria including such factors as population density, would propose a new campus. The trustees decision would be subject to the approval of the Board of Higher Education. And the board's decision, of course, would be subject to two checks by the General Assembly: (1) The Assembly's pursestring power; (2) Its appointive power over University trustees.

We hope the House committee will back up and take a second look. The matter before it is of major import to the future effectiveness of the University system. The real question is whether the University should add campuses on the basis of objective criteria or on the basis of trading and logrolling in the legislature.

A sure way of reaching the wise conclusion is for legislators to ask themselves whether they truly would wish to be embroiled in deciding between any number of areas that might be encouraged to compete for a University campus, and to ask whether the result of such a snarl of area jealousies and ambitions could possibly reflect credit on the legislature or on the cause of higher education in North Carolina.

The governor and the various study commissions have charted a prudent forward course. We earnestly hope the Assembly will have the good sense to follow it.

World Is In Bad Shape

To the Editors,

It seems that the world is in worse shape than man at first suspected; at least, the earth is. But then shapes have always been deceiving; they were so even when hoop skirts were worn by the ladies.

Yes, and we may as well face it bravely: the Bible, which speaks of the "ends of the earth," was right all along. An oblong object, such as a pear, can surely be said to have "ends."

I believe our own country is in worse shape than we suspect, no matter what we Democrats say. And the worse part of it is that we don't seem to care, not even enough to discuss it as freely and as frequently as we ought. Oh, I know that Billy says we are going to the devil; and the John B. Society, that we are going Communistic; not to mention the Republicans, who say we are going bankrupt. But, except for some disgruntled Freedom Riders, you don't see a sizable chunk of the population united in a really worthwhile cause any more.

I think that is bad.

A very few years ago, if preachers had been arrested for praying on the streets—no matter who their prayers were aimed at, or in favor of—"We, the People" would have set up a howl that could have been heard in heaven WITHOUT going through prayer channels! But the consensus of opinion seems to be today: "They were trouble-makers; they should have been minding their own business."

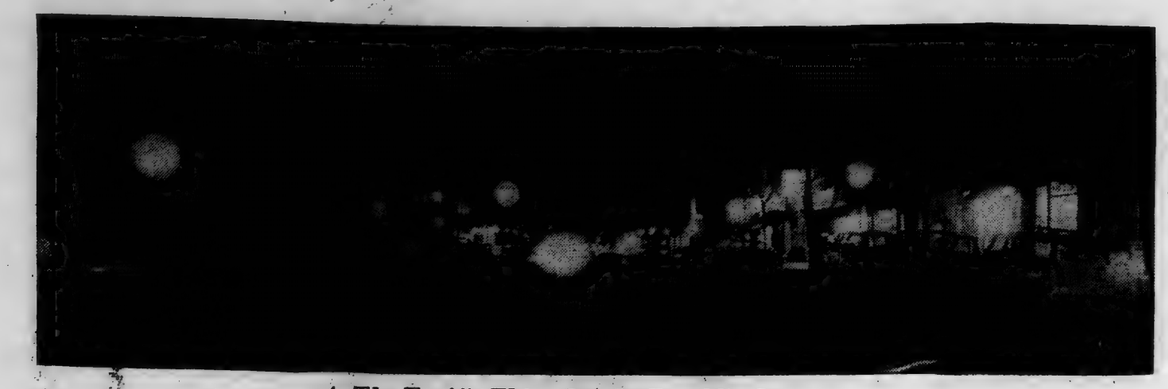
And here is just the point I want to make: The protection of our basic rights IS everybody's business. While I am just an innocent bystander, insofar as the CAUSE of those preachers is concerned, there is not a neutral atom in my body when American freedom is threatened.

What has happened to our sense of values within recent years? It is almost as if someone had gone into a store and had secretly changed all the price tags.

Defeatism ill befits mankind, in general; it iscertainly ill-befitting to Americans who, after all, are the most fortunate people in world history. If democracy cannot flower in America, then where can it fulfill itself? Certainly not in the overpopulated, hunger-ridden countries where it is better to be Communistic than hungry!

I am not saying that we should play nurse-maid to the world. But all the free world succeeds only as we succeed. Our first job, it seems to me, is to MAKE democracy work for US—at HOME. Three cheers for the Peace Corps, but let us not forget that our own people need indoctrination.

Let us have some more flag waving, by all means. Let us make the communications media of this nation so saturated with patrotism that the message of a free people will be inescapable and irrestible, even at home.



I think we have already begun to move back into the right path. For instance, the first article in the April issue of "Reader's Digest" displays a "teaser" which reads as follows:

"This country was built by men who, in the hipster's derisive term, were 'squares'—who believed in such things as pride, patriotism, loyalty and even hard work. Can we afford NOT to emulate them?"

It is an article well worth reading.

Fate Motivates Man To Up Achievements

Who's more likely to achieve great things in the world—the strong, self-reliant type, or the man who believes his life is controlled by a force greater than himself?

Surprisingly, it's the second man who does the most, according to a recent study of motivation by a University of North Carolina psychologist. In "The Motivational Effects of Social Dependency on a Powerful Agency of Control," a project sponsored by the Institute for Research, Dr. John Thibaut shows that the fatalist, whether he knows it or not, often helps fate by trying harder than his independent friend.

The idea for the project came when it was observed that many military heroes, religious and political figures, and other leaders possess "a curious combination of activism and fatalism"—a faith in some external source of support, such as religion, the army, the state or the corporation—together with great motivation to achieve. In this study Dr. Thibaut probes into the reasons behind this puzzling combination.

"Coalition Sense"

Dr. Thibaut found that if a man has a sense of "coalition" between himself and some external agency—if he belives, for example, that the directors of his company have his own interests at heart and that he can rely upon the company to take care of him—he gets a sense of confidence and strength that the more independent type might not have.

A key concept used by Dr. Thibaut in explaining his theory is "CL"—"comparison level." We all compare ourselves and our achievements with others. A man's "CL" is just what it says—the level by which he compares himself with othes. Anything above our CL we are happy about; anything below it is disappointing.

Thibaut claims that the more power over his fate an individual attributes to an external agency, the lower his CL. That means that the deeply religious person or the intensely patriotic one will get a lot more satisfaction out of his achievements than the self-reliant person.

Fate

And it's just this characteristic, says Dr. Thibaut, that gives the fate-dependent person the motivation to keep making more achievements. It works both ways—his belief in his coalition with the powerful outside force gives him more pleasure in his achievements, and his pleasure in these achievements strengthens his belief in the power and benevolence of the outside force.

But what happens when bad things happen to such a person? Does it shake his belief in the outside force? Far from it, according to Thibaut. It just makes him try harder to make good things happen again, so that he won't have to lose faith in this source of support. Disappointment and failures that come to a person with a low CL serve another function. Dr. Thibaut points out: they act as "negative end anchors." In other words, a few failures make all the middling and good things seem that much better by comparison, and thus provide even more motivation.

Carolina Gets 10 Grants For Space Studies

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has awarded UNC a grant which will provide for the training of 10 full-time pre-doctoral students in space-related sciences and technology.

The students will receive fellowships of $4,400 each for a full year of study beginning in September, 1963. The fellowships will be renewable up to a period of three years upon maintenance of academic qualifications in accordance with the University.

The fellowships will be awarded to students in the physical sciences, mathematics, or the biological sciences.

Candidates for the fellowships have been nominated by their university departments of study and have been screened by a committee established by the administrative board of the Graduate School. The candidates were nominated from beginning graduate students.

Winners of the fellowships will be announced in mid April.

UNC is one of 88 colleges and Universities throughout the nation to receive these graduate training grants for the academic year 1963-64.

The purpose of the grants is to help achieve the long range objectives of the national space program and to meet the nation's future needs for trained engineers and scientists.

Prof Writes Military History

"Armed Forces in Peacetime" is the title of a new book authored by UNC Assistant Professor of history Robin Higham.

Dr. Higham's book is a study of Britain's armed forces during the period from 1918 to 1939. For several years, Dr. Higham had been concerned that histories of Britain between the First and the Second World Wars included little about the armed forces.

A major purpose of Dr. Higham's study is to show that the study of armed forces in peacetime could be fruitful and that it was a far more encompassing affair than military history is generally thought to be.

Dr. Higham's book studies the peacetime problems of the military, its financial and equipment problems, its policies and the men who made them. The book indicates that civilian control of the armed services may not be as complete and secure as is generally imagined.

Dr. Higham's book is the result of a year of study during 1960-1961 when he had a National Security Policy Research Fellowship from the Social Science Research Council of New York City.

In the last four years Dr. Higham has published two books in addition to "Armed Forces in Peacetime," which was published by G. T. Foulis & Co., Ltd. of London. His other books are "Britain's Imperial Air Routes," and "The British Rigid Airship." Dr. Higham has also published 16 articles as well as numerous book reviews. He is currently on leave from the University doing a history of the British Overseas Airways Corporation and its associates.

UNC Lead Nation In Medicine

EDITOR'S NOTE: Sunday, April 7, the UNC School of Public Health dedicates a spacious new building. This brief account of how the school came into being and of its work, is taken from a yet unpublished history of the school, "This Moment Between the Past and Future," by Dr. Rosemary M. Kent, associate professor of public health education.

* * *

Sagacity and capacity, toil and thought, adventuring, daring, questing and questioning, the prepared mind—these, not fortuity, explain the "accidental bluaders" —the great discoveries — of science.

That thought was expressed by Dr. Milton J. Rosenau, first Dean of the University of North Carolina School of Public Health, two years before he "retired" from Harvard to help start a program at UNC which has sent helping hands into every corner of the State, onto every continent of the earth, save one.

The School of Public Health, celebrating the opening of its new $2,000,000 building on April 6 and 7, came to be because of the qualities of mind cited by Dr. Rosenau.

It may come as a surprise to some, because of the more recent memories of the Good Health Program following World War II, that North Carolina led the way in two very important aspects of public health.

In 1912, the Rockefeller Sanitation Commission was past the mid-point of it 1909-1914 North Carolina demonstration of hookworm control. And in the wake of the demonstrations across the state, local health departments were beginning to appear.

In this respect, North Carolina was leading the nation and the state had its first full-time state health officer—Dr. W. S. Rankin.

Dr. Rankin initiated, in 1916, a program of continuation education for doctors in the state. Concened with pediatric instruction, the program, said Dr. Rankin, "had definite public health significance."

Harry Woodburn Chase headed UNC in 1919 when Dr. Rankin proposed a program of postgraduate education for health officers and public health nurses.

Though the proposal did not advocate anything so ambiticus as a school of public health, still no tax-supported University appears to have given thought to the future, regarding public health, as early as did UNC.

The idea of the program came as North Carolina was going through a minor social revolution; in addition to the hookworm control program and the establishment of county and city health offices, the State Board of Health had provided tonsillectomies and dental treatment for thousands of school children and had obtained ar sizeable annual appopriation for its work.

It was not until 1933 that education in public health really flexed its muscles at the University. In that year came the special announcement of a short course in Public Administration, saying, in part:

"Public Health is an increasingly important function of government . . . The University of North Carolina is offering courses of study to supplement the basic work in this field, in order that immediate and practical needs of this state and region be adequately met."

To meet "the needs of this state and region" there have always been a number of dedicated men at UNC. One of them, as is well known, is Frank Porter Graham.

Dr. Graham On Presidential Council

Dr. Graham, then Consolidated University President, was chairman of Pres. Roosevelt's Advisory Council on Economic Security. In the committee's report was included a clear indication of the need for a school of public health in the southeastern region.

And in the case of its first director, the prepared minds were those of Carl V. Reynolds, state health officer, and Dr. Charles S. Mangum, Dean of the University's School of Medicine in 1936.

Dr. Reynolds read in the paper that Dr. Milton J. Rosenau, the "Father of Preventive Medicine," and founder of the Harvard-MIT school for health officers, was retiring. Immediately, he hastened from Raleigh to Chapel Hill, without even notifying his office, to see his friend, Dr. Mangum.

He felt, he has said, that if they could persuade Dr. Rosenau to come to UNC, it would be the "fulfillment of a fond dream come true." And together, he and Dr. Mangum brought the great man here, where he headed the new facility, then a division of the School of Medicine.

Given Autonomy In 1940

In 1940, on June 7, unanimous action of the Board of Trustees gave the division its autonomy, creating the School of Public Health, with Dr. Rosenau as its first Dean. Since that time, through August of 1962, the school has awarded 1998 degrees and certificates, 1370 of them graduate degrees.

Present Dean of the School is Dr. Edward Grafton McGavran, like Dr. Rosenau before him an epidemiologist — "disease detective," Rosenau liked to call it. He became Dean near the opening of the fall quarter of 1947, bringing with him a broad experience in the health profession and a philosophy that has since girdled the globe.

Theologian To Deliver 3 Lectures Today & Friday

He will conclude his visit with a lecture at 4:00 at the clinic auditorium of Memorial Hospital on the controversial issue of "The Right To Die: An Ethical Frontier".

Dr. Fletcher is the author of "The Church and Industry," "Christianity and Property" and Morals and Medicine.

Chess Champs Feel Lucky After Win

By BILL STROUPE

Fred Fornoff must be eagerly awaiting his next chess match after what happened in Raleigh over the weekend, and Vernon Robinson says he feels lucky.

Fornoff, a wavy-blond graduate Spanish instructor, entered the annual invitational chess tournament with Vernon Robinson and Ron Simpson from UNC.

His prospects looked good. Last year's state champ, Jerry Fink from Duke, didn't enter. And Fornoff had recently won a playoff for first place among UNC players.

But he tied Simpson for third place with two defeats—one to Simpson and one to Robinson, who took first place.

How did Robinson feel about winning?

"Very lucky, very lucky. I had a real rough game with Ron (Simpson). It was one of my most exciting ones."

Simpson, president of the UNC Chess Club, summarized it this way—"In a tournament like this it's pretty hard for one player to run away with it." But he didn't agree with Robinson about their game. "Vernon beat me pretty decisively," he said.

Fornoff can take consolation in that this tournament could be considered tougher than the state championship since all six players had to meet each other.

"I was proud of our showing," said Simpson.

Turning to future plans, Simpson said the Chess Club dropped plans for a match with State at that school's request. After a tie with Greensboro High School, State doesn't want to tackle Carolina.

Simpson hopes to have a match with Duke. If not, there is always the State Championship Tournament in May.

Heels Net Williams, 9-0

UNC's 5th Straight; Rematch Today At 2

By LOUIS LEGUM

The North Carolina tennis team gave another one of its patented demonstrations on complete annihilation yesterday afternoon as they obliterated Williams, 9-0. But UNC hardly had to resort to H-bombs, IBMs or Polaris missiles. Instead they used their racquets with an aplomb and forcefulness that proved too much for their visitors.

Spectators alternately took turns at sun-bathing and clapping in the unfamiliar 80-plus degree weather that obviously seemed even more foreign to the Williams team. Except for brief, feverish spurts, they were in total retreat the whole afternoon before the overwhelming Tar Heel artillery.

The win was the fourth in a row of the infant season for Skakle's team, and the third shutout. So far, the only opposition point recorded against Carolina has been a default of Ted Hoehn because of sickness in the second Dartmouth match.

This time the Tar Heels were even more frugal in their play as they refused to permit Williams the dubious consolation of just one set. In effect, the closest match of the afternoon took place on the number one court where George Sokol was subjected to a determined effort by Brooks Goddard before Sokol won, 6-4, 6-4.

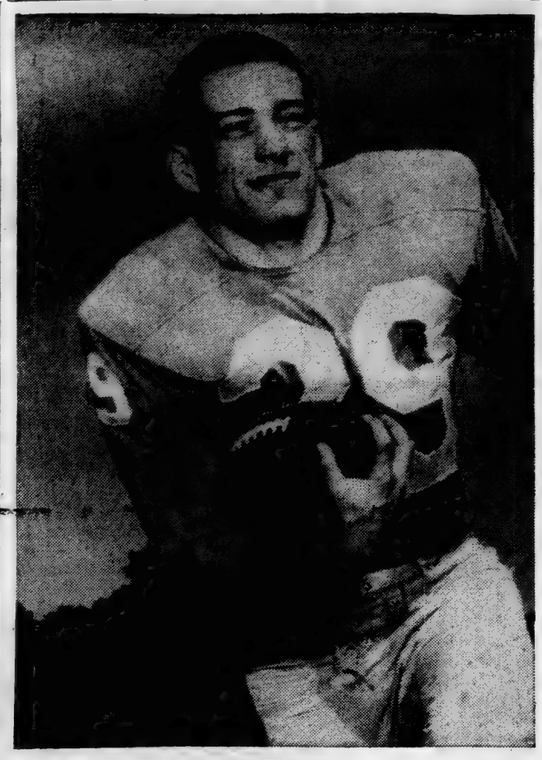
Although Sokol did not seem to be at his very best, Goddard produced many shots that brought the respectful applause of the crowd. He managed to keep Sokol on the court longer than any of his teammates before he ultimately succumbed, too.

It was Sokol's usual type of game that succeeded in breaking down Goddard's defenses. His hard, relentless groundstrokes forced Goddard into enough errors to secure the decision, and when he had his forehand working as it should, there was nothing Goddard could do to really stop it.

The best performance of the day undoubtedly belonged to Charlie Shaffer. Williams' Jack Lucktemeyer was the unfortunate victim of his fine play as he lost by a decisive 6-1, 6-0 margin.

Shaffer literally left Lucktemeyer at the gate, racing ahead to an incontestable lead. The 6-3 Chapel Hill junior kept an unbearable pressure on his opponent throughout the match with his quick serve and lightning volleys.

Bitsy Harrison did almost as well with Frank Thayer. After shutting out Thayer in the first set, Harrison allowed him only two games in the second to close out the victory.



Pete Monroe of Williams offered O. H. Parrish a little more competition, but this effort, too, was futile. Parrish continued to show his promising ability as a sophomore by beating Monroe, 6-4, 6-2.

At number five, Keith Stoneman simply outclassed Bruce Birgbauer in walking away with a 6-1, 6-4 triumph.

The final singles match saw Pete Myers take his second win with a 6-2, 6-3 decision over Henry Lum. It was Myers' steady game that wore Lum down.

In the doubles Shaffer and Parrish displayed flashes of raw, genuine power as they defeated Goddard and Lucktemeyer, 6-2, 6-3. The Williams duo was completely unable to handle Shaffer and Parrish on their serves and at the net.

The match between Harrison and Stoneman and Thayer and Lum was a completely different matter. In contrast to the quick-paced action on the first court, Harrison and Stoneman emerged from their sluggishness just often enough to subdue the Williams team, 6-3, 7-5.

RON TUTHILL

The former Rockingham quarterback will probably start against the alumni in Saturday's Varsity-Alumni game. This time he'll be at quarterback. In his senior year in high school, Tuthill was a high school All-American selection.

Frosh Netters Whip Chowan

By BILLY HATFIELD

Carolina's freshman tennis team won its fourth straight match of the season Tuesday afternoon over Chowan College, 9-0. This whitewash kept their undefeated string going and at the same time made them more than ready for the upcoming match against Duke on April 9 here at Chapel Hill. In the meanwhile they play Suffolk High School Saturday in a warm-up contest.

In singles play against Chowan, number one man Long defeated Sukit, 6-0, 6-0. The same score was recorded by UNC's Goddard and Oettinger over the number three and four of Chowan. Number two man Evans had little trouble with Paul getting him, 6-1, 6-0. Ruday of the baby netters stopped Breedlove, 6-1, 6-1, and Neeley disposed of Chowan's Jones, 6-3, 6-2.

The doubles play proved to be just as easy when the team of Sadow-Ruday topped Sukit-Paul, 6-2, 6-1. Number two and three doubles went 6-0, 6-0, as Smith-Neeley got Jones-Breedlove, and Thomas-Evans topped Harahan-Jones.

Pirates Topple Yankees, 6–4

FT. MYERS, Fla. (UPI) — The Pittsburgh Pirates closed out their spring exhibition schedule here Tuesday afternoon with a 6-4 victory over the New York Yankees.

The Yankees provided Stan Williams, former National Leaguer, with a three-run lead, but the Pirates overcame the deficit. Bob Clemente led the offense with a pair of triples, which drove in two runs.

The clinching run came on a throwing error by Williams in the sixth inning after he fielded Bob Skinner's high bouncer back of the mound.

Don Cardwell pitched eight innings for the Pirates, giving up all the New York runs and their seven hits, and Roy Face finished the game.

SARASOTA, Fla. (UPI) — Diego Segui's arm and bat led the Kansas City Athletics to a 10-5 triumph over the Chicago White Sox Wednesday.

The right-hander pitched the first eight innings before giving way to Norm Bass. Segui also paced the A's 15-hit bombardment with a single, double and triple.

Pete Ward, rookie third baseman of the White Sox, hit his third homer of the spring in the eighth off Segui, who gave up all the White Sox runs and eight of the hits.

Gridders Get Set For Alumni Game

Tar Heels past, present and future suit up Saturday for the second annual Varsity-Alumni football game.

It is the traditional windup of spring practice at North Carolina, with former Carolina gridders providing the opposition for next fall's varsity for the second year in a row.

As for the varsity — both the present Tar Heels (veterans of '62) and the "future" ones (sophs next fall)—they'll be fielding an all-letterman lineup. But they will aso miss three key men who are currenty playing baseball: Ken Willard, Gary Black and Frank Gallagher.

The familiar aerial combination of Junior Edge and Bob Lacey has generated the most advance interest in this Monogram Club-sponsored affair. But the coaches are probably anticipating most the job done by linebackers.

This was the position struck hardest by the graduation of All-ACC operative Joe Craver. Chris Hanburger, the bearish sophomore defensive end standout last season, has been switched to center-linebacker. His early work has impressed.

Other likely varsity starters; John Hammett with Lacey at end. Cole Kortner and Vic Esposito at tackles, Clint Eudy and Jim Alderman at guards, Ron Tuthill and Roger Smith at halfbacks and Eddie Kesler at full.

Most of the second unit will probably be letter-filled, too, with Jerry Cabe, Loren Wells and Rich Zarro battling at guards, Genie Sigmon and John Hill at tackles, Glenn Ogburn at center, Sandy Kinney at quarterback, Tommy Ward, Jim Eason and Ronnie Jackson at halfbacks, and Barry Westfall at fullback. Number two ends have been Neal Clay and Bill Axselle, former high school teammates who are rising juniors.

Alumni returning to play include Rip Hawkins of the Minnesota Vikings and Skip Clement of the Pittsburgh Steelers, Ray Farris (of the U. S. Marines), Frank Riggs, Wade Smith, Fred Swearingen, Gib Carson, Bob Zaback and Joe Craver.

Ohio Squeaks By Golfers; Heels Seek 5th Win Today

Clubmen Lose 2nd Straight By 11-10

By DON KING

The University of Ohio squeezed by Carolina yesterday in a golf match to hand the Tar Heels their second straight defeat. The score was 11-10.

UNC's Abe Andes and Ohio's Bob Littler tied for medalist honors. Both had 2-under-par 70's. They were playing against each other and knotted the score at 1½-1½.

Both teams won the same number of matches, but the difference came in the points scored. Carolina and Ohio won two 3-0 matches, but in the other two, UNC could not keep it even.

Tommy Arnold defeated Alec Rotar 2-1, but Bill Hiding whipped Ed Hoopes 2½-½.

Otherwise the games were lopsided. Carolina's Skip Tucker and Harvey Hill blanked their opponents, Bob Santor and Joe Reichley. Visitors Nick Carl and Russ Beckoben shutout Mike Dore and George Reams.

The defeat brought Carolina's record to 3-2, with one match still to be decided.

In conference meets, the Tar Heels have defeated Clemson and lost to Wake Forest. A meet with South Carolina is the one under question.

Non-conference matches have brought two victories, over Davidson and Princeton, and yesterday's defeat.

In a tri-meet with Wake and Duke, the Heels finished third.

The next match will be at Davidson Friday, and a week from today the Heels participate in the Miami Invitationals, which will last four days.

Palmer Heads Masters Field

AUGUSTA, Ga. (UPI) — There was a lot of last minute support Wednesday for Johnny Pott and Billy Casper on the eve of the Masters Golf Tournament, starting Thursday, but Arnold Palmer still remained the solid favorite.

Pott, 27, and Casper, 31, turned in the most brilliant series of practice rounds and both were highly regarded. Pott has been so steady that there were many who predicted this Masters Tournament could become a battle of the P's—Palmer, Pott and Gary Player.

"I just hope I didn't leave my game in the practice rounds," said Pott. "I really have been playing well, driving, approaching and putting."

Casper, who admitted he liked the 6,980-yard Masters course, said he was playing well "but whether that is going to be good enough is the big question."

Physics Fiends And Alexander Advance In Intramural Play

By STEWART BALL

Mac and Jack Rugheimer led the Physics Fiends to victory in the Grad Division badminton tourney Monday. The Fiends beat the Peacocks, 2-1, as the Rugheimers took both singles matches. The win increased the Fiends' 125-point margin over Law School in the point standings and virtually assured them of the Grad title.

In other results Alexander and the Navy B.T.'s scored semi-final wins to advance to the Dorm division finals.

Alexander beat another Navy team, 2-1, for their victory. George Stretcher and Alan Goddard won both singles matches for Alexander and Bill Poteat and Dick Newcomb took the doubles event for Navy.

Navy's B.T.'s shut out Parker, 3-0, for their win.

Monday's softball results:

Joyner 16, Winston Bums 3; Ehringhaus A 15, BVP Bombers 12; Town Rats 12, Teague I 6; Phi Gam Fijis 9, Delta Sig Rouges 8; SAE 1, Sigma Nu 0 (default).

In the Fraternity white division Kappa Psi beat Chi Psi 12-1, Phi Kappa Sigma topped Beta 16-10, DU rolled over Kappa Sig 18-6, Phi Delt walloped Pi Kappa Phi 19-0, and ATO edged KA 6-1.

UNC Diamondmen Pleasant Surprise

But even more pleasing to Coach Walter Rabb is the fact Tar Heel pitchers have surrendered just five bases on balls in 45 innings.

"Wildness was our nemesis last spring," says Rabb. "If our pitchers can keep this up, we should win a few more games."

Already the Tar Heels have won half as many as last year—four, as against a single loss to Southern Illinois in the opener.

Today Carolina resumes play, entertaining Delaware at Emerson Stadium at 3 p.m. Then it's off to the ACC races with a game against Duke here tomorrow and one against N. C. State in Raleigh Saturday.

Three big hitters to date have been Frank Gallagher (.500), Dick Prindle (.450) and Dick Fleming (.400). Gallagher has been alternating at first base with Bill Brown, who's hitting .308. Prindle is the second baseman. Fleming, starting his first game against Colgate, smacked a three-run homer in his initial tip to the plate and may have solved Rabb's problem at third base.

Vets Heyward Hull and Jim Speight have lusty averages, too. Rightfielder Hull has seven safeties in 18 trips (.389) and Speight is 6 for 18 (.333).

Another sophomore, footballer Gary Black, leads the club in runs batted in with five, Hull trailing wih four. Sophomore gridder Ken Willard, leftfielder, has been slow starting with two hits in 10 tries.

Thus Rabb is starting two sophomore outfielders and two to three sophomores in the infield.

Pitching has been the brightest department. Junior Spence Willard, with little past experience, went the distance against Virginia Tech, winning 1-0 on three hits and near-perfect control (one walk). The day previous junior Bob Cox, used solely in relief roles in '62, also toiled all nine innings. He allowed six singles, walked only two and gave up one earned run in winning 8-1.

Junior college transfer Bill Haywood has in 7 2-3 innings of relief permitted two singles, no runs, no walks and struck out five. Sophomore lefthander Jerry Davis, the starter and winner against Yale, tired a little after five innings—but had walked only one batter, which pleased his coach.

Kennedy's Pollster To Give Address In Carroll Tuesday

Lou Harris, 1942 graduate of UNC and nationally-known public opinion analyst, will speak in Carroll Hall Tuesday at 8 p.m.

Harris's talk, sponsored by the Carolina Forum, will be "Reflections of a Public Opinion Polltaker."

Harris is President of Louis Harris and Associates, a marketing and public opinion research firm which he established in 1956 after resigning as partner in the Elmo Roper organization.

He is best known as a political opinion analyst; he and his organization have become closely identified with President Kennedy's campaign and Mayor Robert Wagner's campaign although his association with the successful elections of dozens of Governors, Senators, Congressmen and Mayors is recognized as well.

Harris's political opinion research is, however, only one side of his organization and actually constitutes far less than a third of his firm's business; the bulk of his opinion research is conducted for such commercial, industrial, and financial firms as the New York Stock Exchange, Johnson and Johnson, Standard Oil of New Jersey, Liebmann Breweries, McGraw Hill Publishers, MJB Coffee Company in San Francisco, Granny Goose Foods in Oakland, Puget Sound Power and Light Company in Seattle and others.

Harris was born in New Haven, Conn. He attended New Haven High School and at UNC he majored in Economics, minored in Philosophy and wrote extensively for the Daily Tar Heel.

RED CHIINA TALK

Maud Russell, publisher of Far East Reporter Magazine, will discuss Red China and show slides from her 1959 visit there at 8 p.m. tonight in Gerrard Hall.

Miss Russell, a native of California, lived in China from 1917 to 1943.

Connected with the Young Women's Christian Association of China during those twenty-six years, Miss Russell worked in many of the major cities of China, and was actively related to the student, labor, women's and other movements of that period.

Her speaking and reading knowledge of the Chinese language gave particular help in understanding the meaning of social developments, nationalist feeling and reactions on international issues.

This quarter of a century of living and working in China has given Miss Russell an understanding of the Asian peoples' fast-growing struggle for freedom from feudalism and colonialism.

Miss Russell's itinerary has taken her to over half of the States, speaking in cities, towns, and rural areas to varied organizations, forums, picnics, rallies, discussion groups, home gatherings and churches. Her appearance here is sponsored by the New Left.

American Ballet Appearance Set Tonight At 8

The American Ballet Theatre will perform at Memorial Hall tonight at 8. The performance will be an unscheduled attraction in the Chapel Hill Concert Series.

The program will consist of three numbers: "Les Sylphides," with music by Frederic Chopin; "La Fille Mal Gardee," a ballet in two acts with music by Wilhelm Hertel; and "Theme and Variations," with music by Tchaikovsky (theme and variations from Suite no. 3 for orchestra).

The American Ballet Theatre Company was organized in 1940. Since then, it has produced 110 ballets and many of these have become American classics — "Fall River Legend," "Fancy Free," "Rodeo," "Pillar of Fire," and "Billy the Kid."

Agnes de Mille was choreographer for the company during its first season. In 1944, when Jerome Robbins did his first ballet, "Fancy Free," a young unknown composer named Leonard Bernstein was asked to do the score.

Stars of the American Ballet Theatre are Lupe Serrano, the company's Chilean prima ballerina, and Royes Fernandez.

Tickets for the performance are on sale in Chapel Hill at Danziger's and at UNC's Graham Memorial Student Union. All seats for the performance are reserved at $2 and $3. Available tickets will be sold at the box office.

SPU Picketing Of Carolina Cafe Starts

The Student Peace Union Wednesday night announced plans to begin picketing of the College Cafe, a Franklin St. restaurant, at 7 a.m. today.

The picketing stems from an SPU resolution instituting a boycott of 13 Chapel Hill establishments which practice racial discrimination. The resolution was passed unanimously by the local chapter last month.

Pat Cusick, chairman of the local chapter, said the SPU feels this action is necessary because continued negotiations with the management of the College Cafe have proved futile.

"The continuation of racial discrimination in Chapel Hill is an insult of the spirit of a free university and to the fundamental precepts of human dignity and freedom," Cusick said.

John Dunne, a member of the SPU steering committee, said the Student Peace Union was taking action on civil rights because "the members feel that any effort toward peace must involve attempts to end domestic injustice."

"The problems of world peace and the problems of civil rights and human freedom are not separate, but are both a part of SPU's concern for the human community as a whole," Dunne said.

Both Cusick and Dunne urged students and townspeople to boycott the establishments involved and, if possible, to help on the picket line.

TALBERT TO SPEAK

Coffee will be served at the English Club meeting at 7:30 p.m. The public is cordially invited.

Prints On Show At Art Museum; Picked By Grads

The South Gallery of Ackland Art Center currently has an exhibit of 46 prints selected by members of the Journal Club of the Art Department. The Journal Club is an organization of graduate art history students—its purpose is to give students practice in preparing literary material for oral presentation.

According to Journal Club President David Farmer, who organized the print show, "eight graduate art history students were given carte blanche to choose a group of prints for exhibit. The result is this show, representing personal tastes, ranging from late medieval to modern, from religious themes to mythological. All the prints are from the Ackland Art Museum collection."

There is much in this exhibit appropriate for the Easter season. The eight groups are: graphic arts representing scenes from the Passion cycle; etchings of Biblical subjects by Rembrandt; graphic works of modern artists in France; engravings illustrating the change of popular taste in Northern Europe from the Gothic to that based on classical mythology; prints by Odilon Redon revealing the role of imagination in art through his creations of fantastic beings and haunting visions; lithographs by Honore Daumier satirizing society and politics; prints by Albrecht Duerer showing his wide scope of interests and his superior skill for various graphic arts media; and prints illustrating the departure in the 17th century from religious and mythological subject matter to familiar genre content.

Exhibiting students are Jean Weir, Janet Sloane, Patricia Metzger, Rabbi Ephraim Rosensweig, John Cogswell, Robin Jones, Jethro Hurt and David Farmer.

The exhibit will be on view through April 28. The Center is open Tuesdays through Fridays, 2 to 5 p.m. and 8 to 10 p.m.; Saturdays 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sundays 2 to 5 p.m.

Judy Frieder, a junior from Cincinnati, Ohio, has been elected president of the Carolina Women's Council.

"I hope that next year's council will favor the spring semi-formal dance CWC sponsored this March," she said. "Next year we'd like to have it in a smaller place than Woollen gym and serve refreshments."

Bawdy Stories Get Attention At UNC

Bawdy stories and tales about beasts are included in a series of books which are put out by the UNC Department of Romance Languages.

Best-seller stardom cannot be claimed by this serics of foreign language publications. However, there are scholars throughout the world who avidly look forward to each new book produced in the series.

Entitled "University of North Carolina Studies in the Romance Languages and Literature," the series consists of a group of 42 books ranging over a variety of romance subjects such as: medieval-age allegorical stories on beasts (like the well-known "Uncle Remus Stories"); a group of lively, witty, and somewhat bawdy stories of the renaissance; and an exciting play by Spain's most famous dramatist, Lope de Vega, accompanied by a comparative study of the dramatist's place in world literature.

"Our books form one of the most prolific foreign language series in the country", says John E. Keller, UNC Professor of Spanish, who is the managing editor of the series.

The editor is UNC's Prof. of Romance Languages Urban T. Holmes Jr., a widely known scholar whose knowledge embraces 28 languages.

Repeat Elections Slated For 10 Legislative Seats

Lawler Commends Dorm Men For Stopping Demonstration

By VANCE BARRON, JR.

Mike Lawler yesterday commended Lower Quad residents for their "responsible action" Wednesday night in refraining from a planned demonstration against adoption of 3-man dorm rooms next fall.

Lawler said, "The students were very responsible. They seemed to realize the danger that a demonstration against 3-man rooms could easily turn into another 'panty-raid'."

Wednesday evening Lawler called a meeting of 20 student leaders from the upper and lower quads and neighboring dormitories. The purpose of the meeting was to forestall the demonstration planned for that evening.

Lawler told the students that such a demonstration could seriously damage the University's hopes for a new student union in the event of unfavorable publicity. He also emphasized that the issue of student responsibility in handling such affairs was at stake. He then sent the students back to the dorms to talk to the residents and urge them to refrain from participating in the demonstration.

Immediately after the meeting, Lawler approached Dean of Men William Long and requested that he call off the dormitory meetings scheduled that evening by the dormitory advisers and allow the students to handle the affair in their own way. Long agreed to the request, and Lawler said that he would talk to dorm presidents and others who might be able to stop the demonstration.

The attempt was successful. One resident of the lower quad remarked, "The quad was as quiet as a tomb."

Lawler said yesterday that "Bob Spearman and I thank Dean Long for his decision. We feel that students have acted very responsibly and have emphasized our responsibility for jurisdiction in these matters. It was essentially the guys who lived in the dorms who made this a success."

Lawler said that he felt that a "constructive demonstration" against 3-man rooms or against an increase in dorm rents might be in order, but that it would have been ill-advised to schedule one at that time.

Dean Long had nothing but praise for Lawler's actions yesterday. "I think it was in the highest tradition of student Government. I can't say too much about it," he said. "It was a splendid piece of work and I take my hat off to him. I think he talked sense to the boys and handled it beautifully. What we saw last night was the way student government ought to act in theory but has so seldom acted in practice. I'm very much impressed."

Adam Powell Hit For $211,500 Libel

NEW YORK (UPI)—A Superior Court jury decided Thursday that Rep. Adam Clayton Powell libeled a 66-year-old Harlem widow and ordered him to pay her $211,500.

Mrs. Esther James charged that the Negro congressman called her a "bag woman" (graft collector for the police department) in a television interview.

Powell allegedly said that she collected protection payoffs from gamblers.

Mrs. James had asked the jury to award her $1 million.

In Washington, Powell said through an office aide that he would appeal the verdict. The congressman would make no other comment.

The all-white seven-man, five-woman jury handed down its verdict after four hours of deliberation. It said that the New York Democratic congressman must pay Mrs. James compensatory damages of $11,500 and punitive damages of $200,000.

The jury said it was unanimous in its decision. It affirmed its decision when a poll was requested by Powell's attorney, William McKinney.

Powell failed to show up for the trial, although his attorney had pledged he would appear. The congressman was reported to be in Washington while the trial was in progress.

McKinney asked the verdict be set aside on grounds that it was aginst the weight of evidence presented at the trial, and that the award was "extremely excessive." Judge Thomas A. Aurelio denied the motion.

Griselda Robbed, Says Her Manager

Tony Mason, campaign manager or Griselda the Pig, yesterday announced that he will appeal his case to the Constitutional Council to seek redress due to the fact that the elections board refused to count Griselda's votes.

Mason said that he accepts the disqualification of his candidate as enumerated in Article Seven, Sec. 6 nd 7 of the Elections Laws, but questions the board's action on the basis of Article XII, a. and b. which states that there will be a runoff election when no candidate for the office of Secretary of the Student Government has received a majority of the votes cast for that office.

Mason claims that the elections board violated its own laws by not counting Griselda's votes which were clearly votes for this office.

According to this, Mason contends, Bonnie Hoyle cannot officially take office since she did not receive a majority of the votes cast. She did however receive a majority of the votes cast for both her and Sarah Broadhurst.

Hoyle received 1,849 and Broadhurst received 1,522. The total number of ballots cast was 4,240. If Mason's claims are upheld by the Constitutional Council, Hoyle did not receive a majority. The Elections Board may have to declare a re-election, depending on the outcome of Mason's appeal on the basis of Article XII of the Elections Laws.

Mispelling Was Factor In Balloting

By LOUIS LEGUM

The Constitutional Council unanimously ruled yesterday that there will be re-elections for the Student Legislature seats in Dorm Men's III and Town Men's IV. These elections will be held Tuesday.

The Council's ruling was based on the contention that names printed on the ballots in both districts were misspelled, thus giving an unfair advantage to other candidates. On this basis the election was judged illegal.

In Dorm Men's III, which has four seats, the name of Rick Kramer (UP) was listed on the ballot as "Dramer." In the original election Kramer finished in a three-way tie with Bill Baynard and Juan Carvajal for the fourth seat. The elected members were Charlie Lfler (SP), Gordon Appell (SP), and Doug Freeman (SP).

On the ballot for Town Men's IV the name of Bill Davis (UP) was listed as "Dairs." He finished behind Bill Bowerman (SP), Harry DeLung (UP), Rufus Edmisten (SP), John Getsinger (SP), Danny Edwards (SP), and George Newsome (SP), who were elected to fill the six seats in that district.

Arthur Hays, speaking in behalf of the SP, stated at the meeting that there should be a run-off in DM's III since there was such a wide margin between the three winners, who received as much as 240 votes, and the three candidates deadlocked at 172. Hays contended that these results made a complete re-election unnecessary, and that a run off for the remaining position should be held.

However, it was the contention of Mike Chanin, chairman of the UP, that the misspellings could have affected the entire structure of the results, no matter how spaced the voting. Chanin felt that a run-off would have put the SP at a distinct advantage.

DU MEET

The North Carolina Chapter of Delta Upsilon will be host to the Province V Convention of the Delta Upsilon General Fraternity this weekend. Twenty delegates from seven chapters in the south-east will attend.

Friday night Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson will address the delegates at a banquet at the Carolina Inn. Following the banquet there will be a reception at Graham Memorial.

Saturday night Holt McPherson, Editor of the High Point Enterprise and a Delta U alumnus of UNC, will deliver the keynote address at the Carolina Inn. Mr. W. A. Butler, General Secretary of the fraternity, will also attend the conference.

Saturday morning and afternoon, the delegates will attend discussion groups on different areas of fraternity operations, such as rush and administration and finance. Sam Jones, chairman of convention arrangements for the UNC chapter, said that the purpose of the convention would be to "discuss common problems facing the chapters and to pool resources in these areas. We are looking forward to a very successful convention."

GERMAN TEACHERS

The North Carolina Chapter of the American Association of Teachers of German (AATG) will hold its spring meeting at the University Saturday, beginning at 9 a.m.

The AATG provides German teachers from both high schools and colleges an opportunity to compare notes and to keep abreast of developments in teaching methods and scholarship.

The active North Carolina chapter, headed by Professor Anne F. Baecker of Woman's College, draws upon more than 35 educational institutions for its membership.

The spring meeting of the chapter will feature lectures by Dr. Cornelius Kruse, professor of philosophy at Woman's College, and Dr. Beate C. Berwin, now retired from her teaching at Greensboro College and at A. & T. College in Greensboro.

Professor Kruse will discuss the German philosopher Immanuel Kant and his proposals for eternal peace, while Dr. Berwin will speak on the famous German poet J. W. von Goethe.

The Elections Board; Basic And Simple . . .

It would not seem unreasonable to make again the point that the Elections Board is one of the most disorganized and inefficient segments of student government to ever thrash around on the second floor of Graham Memorial.

The ruling, yesterday, by the Constitutional Council, which granted a re-election in two districts for legislative seats, can be but another instance of unfortunate last-minute shuffling in an effort to rectify one of those inevitable Elections Board blunders.

There has not ben a campus-wide election in the recent history of this school which has not suffered from the mismanagement and misunderstandings that are perpetrated by the well-intending but poorly functioning committee of "Half Way Hastings."

Each general election is followed by days of uncertainty and petty squabbling about who won what and how. Either someone fails to turn in an expense account and their name goes on the ballot anyway, or someone complies with the rules and their name goes on the ballot in a form that not even the candidate's mother would recognize.

A good deal of the real tragedy in the blunders comes from the fact that if anyone, just anyone, would bother to make a routine, last-minute check on the regulations that seem elemental, most of the run-offs and re-elections could be avoided.

Of course, one would suppose that the Elections Board is in existence for just those very reasons, to insure that the simple and basic things are carried out; however, the modifier "simple" seems not to apply to the regulations as much as it does to the Board itself. (CW)

One Giant Step; Mama May I?

All we can say is: it's about time.

Student Government has been losing ground all year without anyone who had the guts to stand up for the students. The Beat Dook censor board, and the Apartment Rule veto are only two examples of the administration's loss of faith in student self-government; and after a year of inaction and fence-riding on the part of the executive branch, who can blame them?

But Student Government got a dose of new energy and respect Wednesday, when Mike Lawler, president-elect, united the leaders of both parties to halt a campus wide and well organized panty raid.

Dean Long had already planned to handle the "unauthorized demonstration" himself with the help of an army of police officers, resident advisors, and any other force deemed necessary to quell a mob. But Lawler, interrupted the dean at dinner, said that student conduct is a student problem and the administration should stand aside. The quads were quieter than they had been since Christmas vacation.

Student government, when it stands up for student rights, academic freedom, and student responsibility, is a fine thing, but we must remember that it is only as good as those who lead it, and when they fail, student government becomes a blustering, bumbling bunch of bureaucrats.

For the past year, the students involved in our great bureaucracy have been far more worried about themselves, their images, and how they do things than what they are supposed to be doing.

New, perhaps, with a revitalized, responsible, and well directed executive branch led by Mike Lawler and Bob Spearman, student government can move out of second floor GM and get the show on the road.

We might add here that Dean Long went out on a limb in letting the students take back the ground they have lost. We hope he realizes how much easier that has made things for everyone concerned. If the students will take responsibility, then it is rightfully theirs, and they should have all the rope they need.

After all Ross Barnett's talk about defending state's rights and standing up to the unconstitutional and un-American interference of the Federal government in Mississippi's affairs, a recent news story came as something of a letdown.

The attorney general offered to withdraw all Federal troops still on the Ole Miss campus, if the governor could "give adequate assurance by deeds and words that you will accept and carry out the basic responsibility of the state for maintaining law and order at the university."

Barnett answered that he could NOT guarantee James Meredith's safety if the soldiers were removed. The governor said he would "try to keep law and order . . ." but could not give the Negro police protection.

And so goes law and order and state's rights in Mississippi. (JC)

New Frontier In Southern History

An address delivered on March 25 at Rice University, Houston, Texas, at a symposium on "The Idea of the South." Dr. Tindall is a professor of history at the University here.

By GEORGE B. TINDALL

The idea of the South—or more appropriately, the ideas of the South—belong in large part to the order of social myth. There are few areas of the modern world that have bred a regional mythology so potent, so profuse and diverse, even so paradoxical, as the American South. But the various mythical images of the South that have so significantly affected American history have yet to be subjected to the kind of broad and imaginative historical analysis that has been applied to the idea of the American West, particularly in Henry Nash Smith's VIRGIN LAND: THE AMERICAN WEST AS SYMBOL AND MYTH. The ideas of the South have yet to be fully examined in the context of mythology, as esssentially problems of intellectual history.

Since the Southern mind is reputed to be peculiarly resistant to pure abstraction and more receptive to the concrete and dramatic image, it may be unusually susceptible to mythology. Perhaps for the same reason our subject can best be approached through reference to the contrasting experience of two Southerners—one recent, the other about forty-five years ago.

The first is the experience of a contemporary Louisiana writer, John T. Westbrook. "During the thirties and early forties," Westbrook has written, "when I was an English instructor at the University of Missouri, I was often mildly irritated by the average northerner's Jeeter-Lester-and-potlikker idea of the South. Even today the northern visitor inertiaheatedly maintains this misconception: he hankers to see eroded hills and rednecks, scrub cotton and sharecropper shacks.

"It little profits me to drive him through Baton Rouge, show him the oil-ethyl-rubber-aluminum-chemical miles of industry along the Mississippi River, and say, 'This . . . is the fastest-growing city of over 100,000 in America. We can amply substantiate our claim that we are atomic target number one, that in the next war the Russians will obliterate us first . . .'

"Our northerner is suspicious of all this crass evidence presented to his senses. It bewilders and befuddles him. He is too deeply steeped in William Faulkner and Robert Penn Warren. The fumes of progress are in his nose and the bright steel of industry towers before his eyes, but his heart is away in Yoknapatawpha County with razorback hogs and night riders. On this trip to the South he wants, above all else, to sniff the effluvium of backwoods-and-sand-hill subhumanity and to see at least one barn burn at midnight. So he looks at me with crafty misgivings, as if to say, 'Well, you DO drive a Cadillac, talk rather glibly about Kierkegaard and Sartre . . . but after all, you ARE only fooling, aren't you? You do, don't you, sometimes, go out secretly by owllight to drink swamp water and feed on sowbelly and collard greens?' "

The other story was the experience of a Southern historian, Frank L. Owsley, who traveled during the First World War from Chicago via Cincinnati to Montgomery with a group of young ladies on the way to visit their menfolk at an army camp. He wrote later that, "despite everything which had ever been said to the contrary," the young ladies had a romantic conception of the "Sunny South" and looked forward to the journey with considerable excitement. "They expected to enter a pleasant land of white columned mansions, green pastures, expansive cotton and tobacco fields where Negroes sang spirituals all the day through." Except in the bluegrass basins of central Kentucky and Tennessee, what they actually found "were gutted hill-sides; scrub oak and pine; bramble and blackberry thickets, bottom lands once fertile now senile and exhausted, with spindling tobacco, corn, or cotton stalks . . . ; unpainted houses which were hardly more than shacks or here and there the crumbling ruins of old mansions covered with briars, the homes of snakes and lizards." The disappointment of Dr. Owsley's ladies was, no doubt, even greater than that of Mr. Westbrook's friend in Baton Rouge.

There is a striking contrast between these two episodes, both in the picture of Southern reality and in the differing popular images that they present. The fact that they are four decades apart helps to account for the discrepancies, but what is not apparent at first is the common ancestry of the two images. They are not very distant cousins, collateral descendants from the standard image of the Old South, the plantation myth. The version of Owsley's lady friends is closer to the original primogenitor, which despite its advancing age and debility, still lives amid a flourishing progeny of legendary Southern gentility. According to Francis Pendleton Gaines, author of THE SOUTHERN PLANTATION, the pattern appeared full-blown at least as early as 1832 in John Pendleton Kennedy's romance, SWALLOW BARN. It has had a long career in story and novel and song, in the drama and motion picture. The corrosions of age seem to have ended its Hollywood career, although the old films still turn up on the late late. Until very recently it could be encountered on the magazine pages in the guise of a dignified old colored servant in formal livery offering a tray with whiskey decanter and glasses. It may still be found in the tourist bait of shapely beauties in hoop skirts posed against the backdrop of white columns at Natchez, Orton, or a hundred other places.

These pictures are enough to trigger in the mind the whole euphorious pattern of kindly old marster with his mint julep, happy darkies singing in fields perpetually white to the harvest, or as the case may be, sadly recalling the long lost days of old; coquettish belles wooed by slender gallants in grey underneath the moonlight and magnolias. It is a pattern that yields all too easily to caricature and ridicule, for in its indifference to the ballance sheet, hot temper, profanity, overindulgence, a certain stubborn obstinacy. The old time Negro, when not a figure of comedy, is the very embodiment of loyalty. And the Southern belle: "Beautiful, graceful, accomplished in social charm, bewitching in coquetry, yet strangely steadfast in soul", Gaines has written, "she is perhaps the most winsome figure in the whole field of our fancy." "The plantation romance," Gaines says, "remains our chief social idyl of the past; of an Arcadian scheme of existence, less material, less hurried, less prosaically equalitarian, less futile, richer in picturesqueness, festivity, in realized pleasure that recked not of hope or fear or unrejoicing labor."

But there is still more to the traditional pattern. Somewhere off in the piney woods and erosion-gutted clay hills, away from the white columns and gentility, there existed Po' White Trash: the crackers; hillbillies; sand-hillers, rag tag, and bobtail; squatters; "po' buckra" to the Negroes; the Ransy Sniffle of A. B. Lonstreet's GEORGIA SCENES and his literary descendants like Jeeter Lester and Ab Snopes, abandoned to poverty and degeneracy—the victims, it was later discovered, of hookworm, malaria, and pellagra. Somewhere in the pattern the respectable small farmer was lost from sight. He seemed to be neither romantic nor outrgeous enough to fit in. His neglect provides the classic example in Southern history of the blind spots engendered by the power of mythology. It was not until the nineteen-thirties that Frank L. Owsley put his students at Vanderbilt on his trail and re-discovered the Southern yeoman farmer as the characteristic, or at least the most numerous, antebellum white Southerner. More about the yeoman presently; neglected in the plantation myth, he was in the foreground of another.

In contrast to the legitimate heirs of the plantation myth, the image of John T. Westbrook's Yankee visitor to Baton Rouge seems to be descended from what might be called the illegitimate line of the plantation myth, out of Abolition. It is one of the ironies of our history that, as Gaines put it, the "two opposing sides of the fiercest controversy that ever shook national thought agreed concerning certain picturesque elements of plantation life and joined hands to set the conception unforgettably in public consciousness." The Abolitionists found it difficult to escape the standard image, or even undesirable. It was pretty fully developed in UNCLE TOM'S CABIN. Harriet Beecher Stowe made her villain a Yankee overseer, and has been accused by at least one latter-day Abolitionist of implanting too deeply in the American mind the stereotype of the faithful darkey. For others the plantation myth simply appeared in reverse, as a pattern of corrupt opulence resting upon human exploitation. Gentle old marster became the arrogant, haughty, imperious potentate, the very embodiment of sin, the central target of the antislavery attack. He maintained a seraglio in the slave quarters; he bred Negroes like cattle and sold them down the river to certain death in the sugar mills, separating families if they served his purpose while Southern women suffered in silence the guilty knowledge of their men's infidelity. The happy darkies in this picture became white men in black skins, an oppressed people longing for freedom, the victims of countless atrocities so ghastly as to be unbelievable except for undeniable evidence, forever seeking an opportunity to follow the North Star to freedom. The masses of the white folks were simply poor whites, relegated to ignorance and degeneracy by the slavocracy.

Both lines of the plantation myth have been remarkably prolific, but the more adaptable one has been that of the abolitionists. It has repeatedly readjusted to new conditions while the more legitimate line has courted extinction, running out finally into the decadence perpetrated by Tennessee Williams. Meanwhile the abolitionist image of brutality persisted through and beyond Reconstruction in the Republican outrage mills and bloody shirt political campaigns. For several decades it was more than overbalanced by the Southern image of Reconstruction horrors, disarmed by prophets of a New South created in the image of the North, and almost completely submerged under the popularity of plantation romances in the generation before Owsley's trainload of ladies ventured into their "Sunny South" of the teens. At about that time, however, the undercurrents began to emerge once again into the mainstream of American thought. In the clever decade of the twenties a kind of neo-abolitionist myth of the Savage South was compounded. It seemed that the benighted South, after a period of relative neglect, suddenly became an object of concern to every publicist in the country. One Southern abomination after another was ground through their mills: child labor, peonage, lynching, hookworm, pellagra, the Scopes trial, the Fundamentalist crusade against Al Smith. The guiding genius was Henry L. Mencken, the hatchet man from Baltimore who developed the game of South-baiting into a national pastime, a fine art at which he had no peer. In 1917, when he started constructing his image of "Baptist and Methodist barbarism" below the Potomac, he began with the sterility of Southern literature and went on from there. With characteristic glee he anointed one J. Gordon Coogler of South Carolina "the last bard of Dixie" and quoted his immortal couplet:

> "Alas, for the South! Her > books have grown fewer—
> She never was much given > to literature."

"Down there," Mencken wrote, "a poet is now almost as rare as an oboe-player, a dry-point etcher or a metaphysician," as for "critics, musical composers, painters, sculptors, architects . . . there is not even a bad one between the Potomac mud-flats and the Gulf. Nor an historian. Nor a sociologist. Nor a philosopher. Nor a scientist. In all these fields the south is an awe-inspiring blank . . ." It was as complete a vacuity as the interstellar spaces, the "Sahara of the Bozart," "The Bible Belt." He summed it all up in one basic catalog of Southern grotesqueries: "Fundamentalism, Ku Kluxry, revivals, lynchings, hog wallow politics—these are the things that always occur to a northerner when he thinks of the south." The South, in short, had fallen prey to its poor whites, who would soon achieve a mythical apotheosis in the Snopes family.

It did not end with the twenties. The image was reinforced by a variety of episodes: the Scottsboro trials, chain gang exposes, Bilbo and Rankin, Senate filibusters, labor wars, much later by Central High and Orval Faubus, Emmett Till and Autherine Lucy and James Meredith, bus boycotts and Freedom Riders, and not least of all by the lush growth of literature that covered Mencken's Sahara, with Caldwell's TOBACCO ROAD and Faulkner's SANCTUARY and various other flora of what Ellen Glasgow labeled the Southern Gothic and a less elegant Mississippi editor called the "privy school" of literature. In the words of Faulkner's character, Gavin Stevens, the North suffered from a curious "gullibility: a volitionless, almost helpless capacity and eagerness to believe anything about the South not even provided it be derogatory but merely bizarre enough and strange enough." And Faulkner, to be sure, did not altogether neglect that market! Not surprisingly, he was taken in some quarters for a realist, and the image of Southern savagery long obscured the critics' recognition of his manifold merits.

The family line of the plantation myth can be traced only so far in the legendary gentility and savagery of the South. Other family lines would seem to be entirely independent — if sometimes on friendly terms. In an excellent new study, "The New South Creed, 1865-1900," soon to be published, Paul M. Gaston has traced the evolution of the creed into a genuine myth. In the aftermath of the Civil War, apostles of a "New South," led by Henry W. Grady, preached with almost evangelical fervor the gospel of industry. Their dream, Gaston writes, "was essentially a promise of American life for the South. It proffered all the glitter and glory and freedom from guilt that inhered in the American ideal." From advocacy, from this vision of the future, the prophets soon advanced to the belief that "their promised land (was) at hand, no longer merely a gleaming goal." "By the twentieth century . . . there was established for many in the South a pattern of belief within which they could see themselves and their section as rich, success-oriented, and just . . . opulence and power were at hand . . . the Negro lived in the best of all possible worlds."

As the twentieth century advanced, and wealth did in fact increase, the creed of the New South took on an additional burden of crusades for good roads and education blending them into what Francis B. Simkins has called the "trinity of Southern progress": industrial growth, good roads, and schools. When the American Historical Association went to Durham in 1929 for its annual meeting, Robert D. W. Connor of the University of North Carolina presented the picture of a rehabilitated South that had "shaken itself free from its heritage of war and Reconstruction. Its self-confidence restored, its political stability assured, its prosperity regained, its social problems on the way to solution . . ." Two months before Connor spoke the New York Stock Exchange had broken badly, and in the aftermath his image was seriously blurred, but before the end of the thirties it was being brought back into focus by renewed industrial expansion that received increased momentum from the Second World War and postwar prosperity.

Two new and disparate images emerged in the depression years, both with the altogether novel feature of academic trappings and affiliations. One was the burgeoning school of sociological regionalism led by Howard W. Odum and Rupert B. Vance at the University of North Carolina. It was neither altogether the image of the Savage South nor that of industrial progress, although both entered into the compound. It was rather a concept of the "Problem South," which Franklin D. Roosevelt labeled "the Nation's Economic Problem No. 1," a region with indisputable shortcomings but with potentialities that needed constructive attention and the application of rational social planning. Through the disciples of Odum as well as the agencies of the New Deal, the vision issued in a flood of social science monographs and programs for reform and development. To one undergraduate in Chapel Hill at the time, it seemed in retrospect that "we had more of an attitude of service to the South as the South than was true later . . ."

The regionalists were challenged by the Vanderbilt Agrarians, who developed a myth of the traditional South. Their manifesto, I'LL TAKE MY STAND, by Twelve Southerners, appeared by fortuitous circumstance in 1930, when industrial capitalism seemed on the verge of collapse. In reaction against both the progressive New South and Mencken's image of savagery they championed, in Donald Davidson's words, a "traditional society . . . that is stable, religious, more rural than urban, and political conservative," in which human needs were supplied by "Family, bloodkinship, clanship, folkways, custom, community . . ." The ideal of the traditional virtues took on the texture of myth in their image of the agrarian South. Of course, in the end, their agrarianism proved less important as a social-economic force than as a context for creative literature. The central figures in the movement were the Fugitive poets John Crowe Ransom, Donald Davidson, Allen Tate, and Robert Penn Warren. But, as Professor Louis Rubin has emphasized, "Through their vision of an agrarian community, the authors of I'll TAKE MY STAND presented a critique of the modern world. In contrast to the hurried, nervous life of cities, the image of the agrarian South was of a life in which human beings existed serenely and harmoniously." Their critique of the modern frenzy "has since been echoed by commentator after commentator."

Heels Win, Play Duke Today

By LOU ROSENTHAL

Heavy hitting and nine Delaware errors paved the way for an 11-7 Tar Heel victory over the Blue Hens yesterday at Emerson Stadium.

Ken Willard knocked a second-inning homer 430-feet over the left field hedge, that spurred the Tar Heels on to score in every inning thereafter.

Bill Dannemann, a sophomore righthander, came in to relieve starter Larry Jenkins in the seventh, and allowed only one hit to pick up his first win of the season. Dannemann struck out five.

Carolina opens the ACC season tomorrow, playing Duke at 3 p.m. at Emerson Stadium. Saturday, UNC visits State for a game there.

The losing pitcher was Rusty Hood, who had to be taken out in the eighth, when his right knee popped out of joint when he covered first on a ground ball.

Willard's homer is the only one ever hit over the hedge in left. The Blue Hen starting hurler, Terry Arnold, said the pitch was a "high inside" fast ball. The slugging righthander hit the blast on the first pitch served to him.

The Delaware squad got off to a 4-0 lead in the top of the second, with the aid of three Tar Heel miscues. First baseman Wes Frith rapped a blooping liner down the left field line, and when the ball took a bad hop and bounced by Willard, Frith got credit for a homer.

Heyward Hull hit two singles and a double, while Gary Black had two bingles for the Tar Heels. Jim Speight had a triple and a single.

Jenkins struck out four and walked four. He allowed eight hits in the six innings he pitched.

Delaware only threatened once after the second, and that was in the eighth, when they scored three runs to tie the game 7-7. That was all, however, as the Tar Heel bats started booming, and Dannemann came into the game.

Score by innings:

Delaware	.040	000	300	—	7	9	9
UNC	.011	212	31x	—	11	16	4

Netmen Whitewash Williams; Meet Tough Harvard Today

By LOUIS LEGUM

For the second straight afternoon the North Carolina tennis team ran through Williams by a 9-0 score. Despite the heady wind that seemed to slow up the pace of all the players, Coach Don Skakle's team never experienced any real trouble.

This afternoon the Tar Heels will meet Harvard at 2 p.m. in probably the toughest match of the season. Harvard has a very strong line-up, one of the best in the East, which includes Paul Sullivan, Frank Ripley, and Vic Niederhoffer.

In the singles against Williams, Skakle switched his ladder around to allow his team to play new opponents. But the results were still the same.

On the number one court Charlie Shaffer took advantage of a strong opening set to defeat Brooks Goddard, 6-1, 8-6. The Carolina co-captain controlled the net when he had to, which was the difference in the match.

George Sokol and O. H. Parrish both beat their opponents by identical scores, 9-7, 6-1. Sokol received stiffer competition from Jack Luckteneyer than was expected, while Frank Thayer, Parrish's victim, also played surprisingly well, especially in the first set.

The longest match of the day was a two-hour, two-set marathon between Carolina's Keith Stoneman and Pete Monroe. Stoneman was finally able to get the better of both Monroe and the bothersome wind to triumph, 7-5, 7-5.

Pete Myers also took a two-set victory from Bruce Birgbauer, 6-2 6-4.

Because regular Bitsy Harrison was unable to play in the singles as the result of a foot injury, Sam Applegate stepped in at number six. He did an excellent job as he easily defeated Henry Lum, 6-0, 7-5.

It is expected that Harrison will be fully recovered and ready to go against Harvard today. In the doubles yesterday he was able to combine with Stan Cocke to defeat Luckeneyer and Goddard, 5-7, 6-3, 6-3.

Harrison and Cocke experienced some difficulty in the first set, but they rallied effectively in the final two to pull the match out. This was the only set that Williams was able to win in two days of competition against the Tar Heels.

The other two doubles featured a couple of new combinations. Sokol and Myers breezed past Thayer and Lum, 6-2, 6-4, while Applegate and Kirby Jones did even better with a 6-1, 6-2 win over Monroe and Baltrus.

Tomorrow's important match with Harvard will be the last one at home before Carolina takes off on its make-or-break Florida road trip. On consecutive days beginning April 11, the Tar Heels will take on Rollins, Michigan, and Miami. They will return home again to face Davidson April 17, and then go into regular season Atlantic Coast Conference competition.

LOST

FOOTBALL GATES

For the Alumni-Varsity football game Saturday, only the following two gates at Kenan Stadium will be open: Gate 2, the main North Side gate, and Gate 10, the gate at the Field House end of the stadium.

Stickmen Lose In Overtime

The UNC Lacrosse Club missed its second straight victory of the season this week by ten seconds in one of the most exciting contests ever played in Chapel Hill.

The Tar Heels led a strong Amherst team, 8-7, but a goal by the New Englanders with ten seconds remaining tied the Tuesday contest. The visitors went on to score three more goals in the ten minute overtime for their 13th straight victory over two seasons.

Coach Connie Steele called the game "quite an accomplishment" for his men despite the loss. The Amherst team won the New England championship with a 9-0 record last year and had won its first three contests this season.

Freshman Jeff Parker was once more the Tar Heel star. He scored five goals, three unassisted, in the 11-8 loss. Bud Adams added two goals and two assists.

Scully Scandrett, the Amherst coach, labeled Parker "the finest player he's seen this year." Coach Steele added that Scandrett would not see any much better.

Steele is pleased with the performances of his younger players. Parker, Adams and goalie Harvey Stanley are all freshmen — yet they have performed amazingly against Randolph-Macon and Amherst.

Tom Thayer, the club's big scorer last year and still an important man in the offensive lineup, is only a sophomore. Unlike most of the men on this year's club, Thayer is a North Carolina native. He hails from Asheville.

Parker, Adams and Stanley all come from the Baltimore, Md., area.

Steele also had words of praise for two of his defensive men, Bruce and Duff Greene, a pair of Tar Heel footballers.

"Bruce and Duff played a real solid defensive game against Amherst," said Steele. "They'll give you a solid performance every time."

A few of the UNC starters were injured during the game, contributing to Amherst's late drive of four straight points. Steele pointed out, though, that Amherst had a very well-drilled team, and that their second and third units were very strong.

Steele was pleased with his team's performance in only their second official game of the year, but added that "we have a lot to work on and much to improve."

A match with the Duke varsity may be next on the team's schedule. Steele expects to schedule the Blue Devils on either April 18 or 20 at Duke. The next home match will be April 22 against the Virginia freshmen.

Frosh Nine Plays Blue Imps Today

By LARRY TARLETON

UNC's freshman baseball team opens its season this afternoon when it goes to Duke for a 3 o'clock game. The Tar Babies open their home schedule against State Saturday afternoon.

Coach Bill Lovingood says his team is looking better, especially in the infield. He says, "Hitting is the weak link on the team. If our hitters come through for us we should have a good season."

Coach Lovingood has decided that right-hander Mike McLaughlin will be the starting pitcher against Duke with leftie Beattie Leonard backing him up. Danny Walker will be the starter against State if he is not needed today.

The Tar Babies will have Ed Warren leading off and playing center field today. He will be followed by Danny Galves — second base, Bob Kaufman — first base, Tom Weir — catcher, Billy Dean Davis — left field, Jon Baylin — shortstop, Bill Sessoms — right field, Bob Bonczek — third base and McLaughlin on the mound.

Alumni Footballers Have Center-Punch

"We took the old timers a little too lightly last year," says football coach Jim Hickey. "We're not going to make that mistake this time. We're strapping our pads on tight."

The "old timers" won the first annual Varsity-Alumni game by a toe, 10-7. Phil Blazer's field goal early in the game was the difference.

This year the Alumni are loaded down the middle. It seems that half their team is made up of centers—centers who have garnered numerous All-Star honors both as Tar Heels and pros.

The best of the middle men is Rip Hawkins, now a linebacker with the Minnesota Vikings. Former Tar Heel center Ronnie Koes and seniors Joe Craver and Bob Zaback also double as linebackers. Hawkins, Koes and Craver were all All-Atlantic Coast Conference choices at their positions.

The big name in the backfield is Charlie "Choo Choo" Justice. Justice is something of a novelty in that he is a playing coach.

"I've been dieting for a year to get in shape for this one," said Choo, the most famous Tar Heel All-American. When Justice played last year, someone from the stands suggested that they roll him on the field.

Since then, Charlie has trimmed down. He's about 190 and looks very much like he could sprint if the conditions warrant. When Justice made football history at Chapel Hill, he weighed only 167.

Other Alumni backs include Skip Clement of the Pittsburgh Steelers, Ray Farris of the United States Marines, Wade Smith and Gib Carson .

Tuition Up 11% In Schools Throughout United States

Tuition and fees for residents rose 11 per cent at state universities and land-grant institutions over the past year, according to figures compiled by the U. S. Office of Education for the Joint Office of Institutional Research.

During the same period, 1961-62 to 1962-63, tuition and fees for non-residents rose by 7.4 per cent, room rates by 6.2 per cent and board charges by 1.7 per cent. Using a national average for these schools, a student who paid $815 for his education at a state university or land-grant institution in his home state in 1961-62 is currently paying $860 for room, board, tuition and fees.

The Office of Education's comparative study covered 90 institutions. Forty-five raised their tuition and fee for residents, 49 for non-residents. Room rate increases for women were made by 40 institutions and for men by 43 institutions. Increases in board charges occurred at 39 institutions for women and 42 for men. Median tuition and fees increases for all institutions surveyed were $30 for residents, $50 for non-residents. The median increase for room and board charges for men was $20, for women $24, while board charges averaged an $18 increase for both sexes.

For 75 institutions attended predominantly by white students, average tuition and fees for residents rose from $263 in 1961-62 to $293 in 1962-63; average tuition and fees for non-residents from $593 to $635; average room rates from $240 to $251 and average board charges from $422 to $435. For 15 institutions attended predominantly by Negro students, residents' tuition and fees rose from $165 to $186 during the period; non-resident tuition and fees from $391 to $422; room rates from $128 to $140 and and board charges from $305 to $310.

Individual increases ranged from under $10 to over $100. The area most affected by increases was non-resident tuition and fees, where 25 of the 49 institutions raising charges upped them by over $50 and 11 of this number by more than $100.

Shifting the burden of college costs increasingly from society as a whole to the student is a source of major concern to the institutions represented in the Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges and the State Universities Association. The two Associations have stated:

"The process of making students pay an increasing proportion of the costs of higher education will, if continued, be disastrous to American society and to American national strength.

"It is based on the theory that higher education benefits only the individual and that he should therefore pay immediately and directly for its cost — through borrowing if necessary. . . .

"This is a false theory. Its adoption . . . will jeopardize seriously our national strength, reduce our standard of living, and reverse the entire tradition of equal opportunity in dife for our young people

Supreme Court To Decide On School Bible-Reading

The United States Supreme Court is expected to rule on the legality of Bible reading in the public schools sometime this spring. The high court has already heard oral arguments on the matter.

The Superior Court of Baltimore and the Maryland Court of Appeals have refused Mrs. Madalyn E. Murray's petition to declare unconstitutional the required Bible reading ritual in the school her son attends.

The U. S. District Court for Eastern Pennsylvania has overturned two versions of a similar Pennsylvania law, in suits brought by the family of Edward L. Schempp, supported by the Greater Philadelphia Branch of the American Civil Liberties Union. The losers of both cases — Mrs. Murray and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania — have appealed to the high court.

The Schempps, who have two children attending the Abington Township Public High School, contend the Pennsylvania Bible reading law violates the First Amendment, which forbids the state establishment of religion, or interference with the citizen's free exercise thereof.

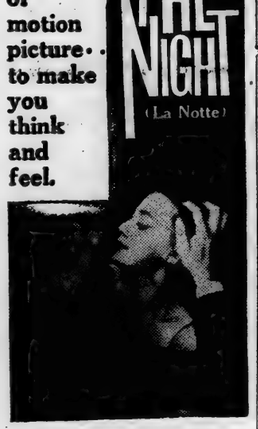
They claim even the revised version of the state law, which permits students to be excused from Bible reading ceremonies on written parental request, unconstitutionally illicits a profession of religious belief or disbelief. In the brief submitted to the Supreme Court by their attorneys, Henry W. Sawyer III and Wayland H. Elsbree, it is claimed that the present law thus exposes the child to enormous psychological pressures, whether he chooses to hear a doctrine that contradicts what he has been taught, or excuses himself and faces the social ostracism of his classmates.

The Pennsylvania law in question calls for the compulsory reading of "at least ten verses from the Holy Bible" in all public schools. The State supplies the King James version of the Bible. The Schempps are Unitarians. The three children and their father have previously testified that they not only do not believe, but are offended by, much that has been read to them. They do not believe in what Mr. Schempp called the Old Testament's concept of "Jehovah as a God of vengeance." Nor do they believe in the divinity of Christ.

Expert witnesses testifying for both plaintiffs and defense in the District Court admitted that Protestants, Catholics and Jews cannot even agree about the wording of the "correct version of the Old Testament, which they supposedly share. Catholics, Jews, and many Protestants do not emphasize Bible reading. Other religions represented in the United States and guaranteed equal religious protection consider different works sacred. The Schempps contend that, in addition to violating the "no establishment of religion" clause of the First Amendment, the existing law violates their right to free religious practice, since their children must attend public schools, and they must support these schools with taxes.

Attorneys for the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania reason the elimination of such vestiges of religious tradition as Bible reading could logically lead to abandonment of the motto on U. S. legal tender and replacement of the Christian calendar.

Steelman Featured In Concert Program



George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" with Robert Steelman as pianist will be the featured selection in a concert by the UNC Concert Band Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Hill Music Hall.

Other program highlights will be Charpentier's "Ballot du Plaisir," as transcribed by Herbert W. Fred, conductor of the band; the "Psalm for Band" by the modern American composer Vincent Persichetti, with Eddie Bass conducting; and the "Finale" from Shostakovich's 5th Symphony with Errol Gay conducting. Assistant conductors Bass and Gay are both graduate students in the UNC Music Department.

Steelman, the piano soloist, received his A.B. with Honors in Music from UNC in 1960. He then attended Tulane University for one year as a Southern Fellow, returning to Chapel Hill in 1961 for further graduate study in musicology.

The Concert Band is organized immediately after the close of the marching season each year. Dr. Fred, the conductor, said that the personnel of the Concert Band "are selected so as to provide a well-balanced instrumentation capable of the study and performance of the best in concert literature."

The concert is being sponsored free by the Tuesday Evening Series. The next program of this series will be by the University Symphony Orchestra, Earl Slocum, conductor, on May 7.

Legislature Urges Increase In Student Tax Exemptions

By JOEL BULKLEY

Student Legislature went on record Thursday night supporting legislation increasing income tax deductions for students as SL concluded its 34th assembly in a 51-minute session.

The resolution, introduced by Arthur Hays (SP) and amended by Arahur Hays (SP), urges the United States Senate to adopt legislation increasing exemptions for students attending institutions of higher learning and that the Senate give full consideration to Senator Thomas Dodd's (D-Conn.) bill.

Senator Dodd's bill which proposes that an additional exemption of $1,200 be added to the existing $600 deduction, for dependents is now before the Senate.

Copies of this resolution will be sent to Senators, Everett Jordan and Sam Edvin of N. C. and Thomas Dodd of Conn., the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, the National Affairs vice-president of NSA, and Tom Lambeth, special assistant to the Governor.

The proposed Student Government budget for 1963-64 was not considered Thursday night and there ore will be discused by the new assembly. New legislators will be sworn in Tuesday, April 23.

All other bills before legislature were either referred back to committee or withdrawn.

GW President Says Education Needs Support

Education in contemporary American Society is a domestic problem which needs support at all levels—and dedicated businessmen can contribute their knowledge to the achievement and maintenance of educational strength, according to Thomas H. Carroll, president of George Washington University.

President Carroll, a former Dean of the UNC School of Business Administration, gave the address at UNC's commencement exercises for the 10th Executive Program yesterday in Carroll Hall.

American business executives must earn the respect and confidence of their fellow citizens by their demonstrated interest in problems of the society generally, by attention to undertakings that will assist in their solution, and by their investment of time, money, effort in actualy attacking such problems of the society generally, by attention to undertakings that will assist in their solution, and by their investment of time, money, effort in actually attacking such problems of general character, said President Carroll, addressing the 47 graduates of this academic year's Executive Program.

President Carroll pointed out that "there is much evidence that the public is increasingly impatient with narrow points of view" taken in regard to the general problems of society.

"Our nation can realize its total potential in the broadest sense, only if it enjoys truly enlightened action by responsible business executives in response to these complex contemporary developments throughout the world," said President Carroll.

The UNC Executive Program is composed of business executives who come to the UNC campus during alternate weekends and for two full weeks of residence during the academic year to study various facets of business organization and management and to obtain a broad educational experience in subjects related to business.

ULLMAN TO SPEAK

Prof. Ullman will give an address entitled "Geometry in the Medieval Quadrivium." He will describe how geometry was taught in the early middle ages according to the Roman plan of studying the four liberal arts which formed quadrivium.

Prof. Ullman is an internationally recognized classicist and is president of the Mediaeval Academy of America. He is one of two U. S. representatives on the Committee on Prizes of the Swiss International Balzan Foundation which recognizes leading world figures in the arts, sciences, and peace.

Butts Says Betting Never Took Place

ATLANTA (UPI)—Wallace Butts exclaimed "it's all news to me" when state investigators grilled him about betting on football games when he was University of Georgia athletic director, it was disclosed Friday.

The delayed release of testimony by Butts and several other witnesses appearing before investigators in the office of Attorney General Eugene Cook threw new light on one of the biggest recent controversies in the sporting world.

Butts, who resigned from the state university just before a magazine published an article alleging he gave Georgia football secrets to Alabama Coach Paul Bryant, told state investigators he was often in telephone contact with Frank Scoby, a longtime friend and wealthy Midwest businessman. But he said it was all about Butts' personal business ventures.

"At any time in any telephone conversation has the subject of the Georgia football team ever been discussed?" Butts was asked.

"No," the former coach of the Bulldogs replied.

He was asked if forthcoming games or the subject of betting ever were discussed. Again Butts said, "no, all this is news to me."

The Georgia attorney general, who conducted his investigation under orders of Gov. Carl Sanders, handed the governor what was termed a complete report on the case earlier in the week, but a number of documents, including testimony by Butts, were not included.

Cook told a reporter Friday there was "no intent whatsoever" to withhold information. He said the full document would be more than 100 pages long and the problem of transcribing the taped testimony of the witnesses was time-consuming. He said several statements still have not been completed.

Ill. Birth Control Head Vows Fight

CHICAGO (UPI)—The embattled administrator of Illinois' controversial program of free birth control for women on relief vowed Friday he would fight all the way to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary to keep it in operation.

Arnold H. Maremont, chairman of the Illinois Public Aid Commission, asked other IPAC members who favor the policy to join him in hiring a private lawyer to conduct a court battle to save the program.

The birth control-to-save-taxes program was on the verge of being ruled, legislated and sued out of existence before it got into full operation. The program went into effect only Monday over the vigorous opposition of Roman Catholic and some Protestant groups.

It gives free birth control instruction and devices to women on relief who have either a husband or a child, providing they request such aid.

Legislation to strip the plan of its most controversial elements — free contraceptives and information for unwed mothers or wives not living with their husbands—passed the State Senate Thursday by a 42-5 vote. Similar legislation is before the House.

Illinois Atty. Gen. William Clark, official lawyer for the IPAC, all but scuttled the program by announcing he would press for a court injunction to prevent it from operating.

Acting on Clark's opinion, two other state officials pulled tight the purse strings on state funds necessary to finance the program.

State Auditor Michael J. Howlett said he would not draw a warrant to pay for birth control aid to unwed mothers or women not living with their husbands. State Treasurer William Scott said he would withhold checks even if the auditor's office issued the warrants.

Opponents of the IPAC plan—designed to save up to $31 million a year in public paid costs by preventing some 4,000 illegitimate births—said it amounted to "subsidization of sin."

NAACP To Picket Hospital As Health Building Dedicated

★ ★ ★

Hospital Says Healing Sick Is It's Task

By DAVE CHEEK

"I do not feel sick patients should be taught a social lesson," Dr. Robert Cadmus, former director of Memorial Hospital, reported yesterday after learning that the UNC chapter of the NAACP planned to picket the hospital Sunday.

The picketing and mass demonstration planned by the NAACP, protests the limited segregation in the hospital. According to David Dansby, president of the NAACP, the hospital maintains some segregation which is in conflict with the overall policy of integration at the University.

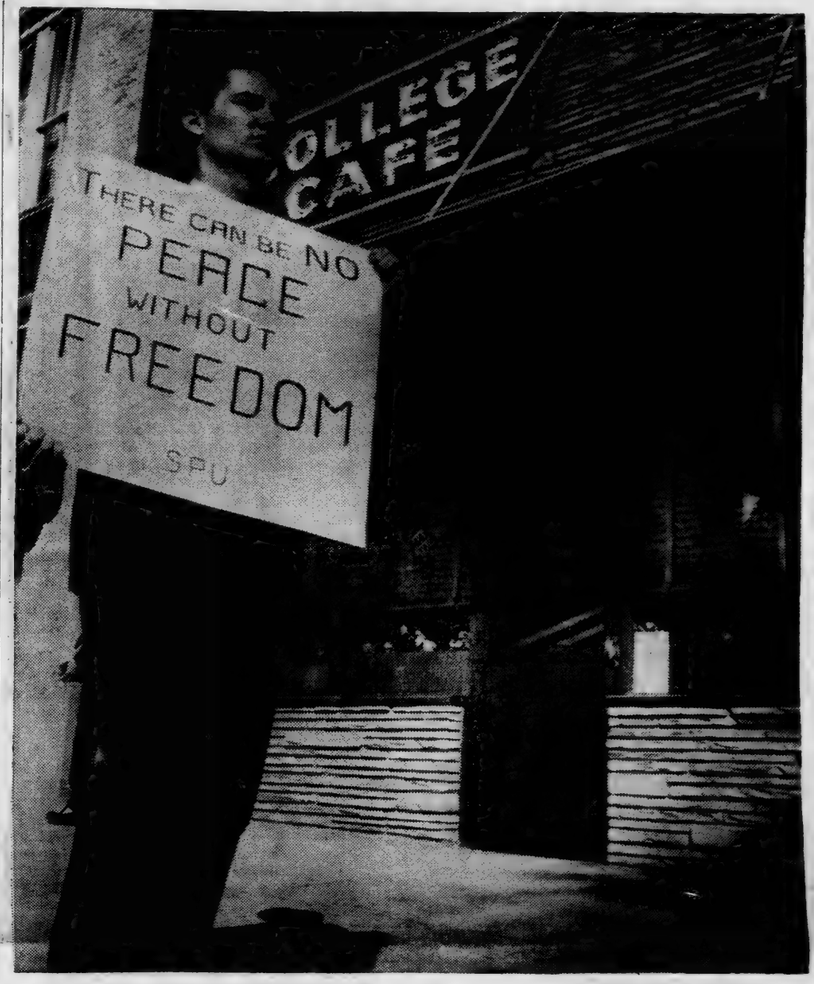
The feeling of the NAACP is that only when total integration is in effect will the hospital be in harmony with the University and the trend of general humanism.

Hospital officials are opposed to the demonstration on the grounds that they are trying to heal sick persons and the NAACP action will only do harm to the hospital's aims. The general philosophy of the hospital is that a man's condition might be adversely affected by integration.

Sunday's demonstration will culminate long negotiations between the hospital and the student group. The hospital has already integrated most wards and services but still maintains segregation in some areas, Dansby said.

Coincides With Ceremonies

The demonstration will coincide with the dedication of the new Public Health School building. However, Dansby pointed out that the action was not aimed at the Public Health School and the picket line will be in front of the hospital and will not cross the street to the dedication.



As of now the only segregated portions of the hospital are the private rooms and some wards provided for Negro patients who are receiving free medical care, hospital officials reported. It is the feeling of the hospital authorities that most Negroes will feel better in these segregated wards and that recovery of both races would be impaired by integration.

The out - patient facilities, surgery-recovery rooms, intensive-care facilities, waiting rooms, seventh-floor pediatrics, and the cafeteria are some of the areas which have been opened on an integrated basis. The NAACP feels that this limited integration of the hospital does not coincide with the general spirit of UNC.

Will Begin At South Building

Sunday's demonstration will begin at South Building and will then move to the hospital. The group plans to picket until about 3 p.m. Other groups that are expected to support the march include: Reflections from Chapel Hill, the Durham NAACP-CORE chapter, some local high school students, the Chapel Hill NAACP chapter, the UNC-SPU chapter, and various congregations of Negro churches in Carrboro and Chapel Hill.

Dansby estimated the expected number of participants in the demonstration to be about one hundred.

A STUDENT PEACE UNION member pickets the College Cafe yesterday morning in an attempt to urge students and townspeople to boycott the restaurant, one of 13 local establishments the SPU instituted a boycott against in a resolution passed last month. However, the restaurant's manager reported the cafe had the largest amount of business it has ever had, even to the point of selling out of food. SPU chairman Pat Cusick stated in yesterday's DTH that the group is picketing because, ". . . racial discrimination . . . is an insult to the spirit of a free university . . . human dignity and freedom." The picketing will continue today.

Ask End To All Separation Of Sick Races

N. C. Memorial Hospital will be picketed Sunday by the local NAACP in protest of segregation policies there while dedication ceremonies are being held at the new Public Health Building.

The open demonstration, "in protest to the segregation of the hospital," will begin at 1:30 p.m. Sunday in front of South Building and proceed past the new School of Health to the hospital.

"We know that influential people in medicine will be attending the dedication and we want them to realize the segregated situation at the hospital," said an NAACP spokesman.

The dedication ceremonies, which will be attended by many Negro graduates of the School, will begin today at 10:00 a.m. when Dr. Abel Wolman of Johns Hopkins University will deliver the keynote address "Trends and Challenges in Public Health."

Dr. E. G. McGavran, Dean of the School, will preside over the first of the three sessions and greetings from the Consolidated University will be extended by President William C. Friday, Chancellor William B. Aycock, Dr. Hugh Holman, Dean of the UNC Graduate School, and Dr. Henry T. Clark Jr., Administrator of UNC's Division of Health Affairs.

Following a Lenoir Hall luncheon, today's program will continue with a series of four discussion sessions on "Schools of Public Health—Past, Present and Future."

Later, Dr. Frank Porter Grahsm will speak on the University's Role in World Education" at 8:30 in Hill Hall during the Second General Session. President Friday will introduce the speaker.

Sunday at 10 a.m. a magnolia tree, known as Rosenau Memorial will be planted in honor of the School's first Dean. Dr. John Wright, professor of the public health administration will be the speaker. The Third General Assembly at 2 p.m. will see Chancellor Aycock and Dr. David E. Price deliver major addresses followed by Governor Terry Sanford presenting the dedication plaque to Dr. McGavran. The program will close with the signing of the dedication book, an open house and tours of the building.

The new school has 120,000 square feet of space and will house ten different departments. It has four major classrooms, one classroom-auditorium, innumerous seminar rooms and at least one research lab in every department.

Because of limited space and facilities, the School has been operating on a quota enrollment system.

"Though we now have 200 graduate students attending classes in 14 different classrooms, our enrollment next year will be practically unlimited with our new facilities said a Public Health official. "We

Doctor Says Love Making Not Tied To Baby Making

By BOB SANDARG

"All problems of human fertility control have in common the tension between making love and making babies," Dr. Joseph Fletcher said Thursday night in a speech sponsored by the YM-YWCA Religious Emphasis Committee.

Dr. Fletcher discussed the moral right of love making without baby making and said, "The doctrine that making love and making babies must go together is as dead as the dodo bird. Love making is a good thing on its own merits, whereas Catholic, Protestant and Jewish churchmen once believed that making love without making babies was morally wrong."

"Today an important issue is the means of contraception," he said. Protestants, Jews and Humanists will accept contraceptives in mechanical, pharmaceutic or surgical form. Catholics accept only the 'more natural' abstinence or rhythm method."

The problem of birth control is now social as well as private, Fletcher said. "The population bomb ticks as loudly as the nuclear bomb."

OUTMODED LAWS

There should be no unwanted babies. The laws against contraception which exist in some states were "placed on the statute books by blue-nose Protestants and kept there by Catholic pressure, are as outmoded as Queen Anne" he noted.

The old theory of 'naturalism' in the birth rate is being replaced by a new Judaeo-Christian humanism or personalism. In this belief, human mastery of human reproduction is accepted.

"Why should God give mastery to blind and sub-human nature rather than to man?" he asked.

In the humanist belief God stands behind man rather than behind the unpredictable cause and effect of nature.

Dr. Fletcher continued, "There are unmistakable signs of leanings in this direction within the Catholic Church," he said. The question of birth control is a reason for many "luke-warm" or non-practicing Catholics.

Abortion Not Wrong

Abortion is the least desirable form of preventing birth," he said, "but added that abortion is not ethically or morally wrong.

The best method is by preventing conception or fertilization. This may be done by abstinence, mechanical, pharmaceutic or surgical methods.

"But any method is permissable if the good gained by using it is great enough to justify the means," he said. "Abortion to save the mother's life is certainly right."

Loving concern is the only method that is always right, he added.

A Look Ahead At Student Government

Student government faces what President-elect Mike Lawler called a "crisis year." But there will be no face-to-face showdowns between students and administration; there will be no dramatic confrontation with the issues placed clearly in the open and with open, definitive conclusions reached.

The crises will be more subtle than that—some may seem even trivial. And that is the reason it may prove to be a "crisis year"—because student government will have to work continuously, studiously and with maturity—and receive no public acclaim for their work.

Student government must work in minor areas where student self-government is threatened, so that the major areas will never come into question. An example of such work was the alert action of student leaders to prevent a demonstration and subsequent panty raid earlier this week.

* * *

Students elected a new leadership for their government Tuesday—Lawler and vice-president-elect Bob Spearman, both of whom previously have proven their maturity in dealing with the difficult problems of student government. This gives the students a better, more experienced leadership than they have had in many years—but in no way does this decrease the need for bold, positive action in the coming year.

Student government must develop an operational efficiency, a reinvigorated daringness and, most important, an institutionalized maturity. If it fails, self-government on this campus may be relegated to a permanent status as ornamental fixture, without substance or meaning.

* * *

The matter of student government efficiency must be squarely faced by this and every other student administration. Student government must reach the point where it no longer is primarily concerned with its own affairs—only then can it turn to its true business of governing the student community.

As the student government year for the months of April and May now stands, it is not operational (interviews for committee appointments), December and January (vacations and exams) and March (campaigns). This situation must be improved.

There is no valid reason why the president himself must interview all applicants for SG committees. Why not let the vice-president and presidential assistant do that?—and free the president for policy matters.

Operations of the committees might be better coordinated if the president formally appointed several advisors to coordinate activities in the areas of national-international affairs, academics, social and dormitory affairs, etc.

There is, above all this, a great need to involve a greater number of students in student government, in a meaningful way, both to the student and to SG.

* * *

More than in past years, student government now must ask to become a real part of the decision-making machinery of the University—at the risk of being considered presumptuous or brash. Students should begin to enter more into the important decisions of the University.

SG should ask for a larger role in such matters as enrollment expansion o the University; the advisor system and its defects; the athletic program, and other primarily administrative-faculty-run aspects of university life.

Other areas are technically or actually under the dominion of student government—usually because they would be too difficult for the University to govern: dormitory affairs; student discipline under the honor and campus codes; women's rules; and the operations within Graham Memorial. It is within these areas that student demands may and should be made.

Why is Dean Long handling almost all "morals" cases? Why aren't these sent to the student judiciary? SG has an obligation to divert these cases to itself—already this year a number of students have been suspended from school on morals charges by Long—without the justice of a trial by the honor council.

Within the dormitories lie a long-standing competition for responsibility between Lon's dormitory advisors and the IDC officers of student government. SG's quick and responsible action in the panty raid episodes of this week bodes well for more success in this area.

The controversy over the apartment rule is a story within itself—if the students stick to their guns here, it will prove a victory for common sense as well as self-government.

* * *

Institutionalized maturity, above and beyond these other goals, is what student government should aim for. Student government should mean student government, and not Mike Lawler, Hank Patterson, or any other strong individual. Student government must mature, as an entity—not a collection of diverse individuals—to the point where its traditions and ideals dwarf individual actions — where the differences between year to year are less than the similarities, not more.

Student government should mature to the point where those who oppose student autonomy's rightful demands will not be able to take comfort in the graduation of a strong leader, but must always face intelligent, well-taught students, trained in the methodology as well as the ideals of a strong self-governing student community. Mythology In Southern Culture

PART TWO

By GEORGE B. TINDALL

While it never became altogether clear whether the Agrarians were celebrating the aristocratic graces or following the old Jeffersonian dictum that "Those who labor in the earth are the chosen people of God . . ." most of them seemed to come down eventually on the side of the farmer rather than the planter. Frank L. Owsley, who rediscovered the ante-bellum yeoman farmer, was one of them. Insofar as they extolled the yeoman farmer, the Agrarians laid hold upon an image older than any of the others — the Jeffersonian South. David M. Potter, a Southerner in exile at Stanford University, has remarked how difficult it is for many people to realize that the benighted South "was, until recently, regarded by many liberals as the birthplace and the natural bulwark of the Jeffersonian ideal. . . ." The theme has long had an appeal for historians as well as others. Frederick Jackson Turner developed it for the West and William E. Dodd for the South. According to Dodd the democratic, equalitarian South of the Jeffersonian image was the norm; the plantation slavocracy was the aberration. Dodd's theme has been reflected in the writing of other historians, largely in terms of a region subjected to economic colonialism by an imperial Northeast: Charles A. Beard, for example, who saw the sectional conflict as a struggle between agrarianism and industrialism; Howard K. Beale, who interpreted Reconstruction in similar terms; C. Vann Woodward, defender of Populism; Arthur S. Link, who first rediscovered the Southern progressives; and Walter Prescott Webb, who found the nation divided between an exploited South and West on the one hand and a predatory Northeast on the other. Jefferson, like the South, it sometimes seems, can mean all things to all men, and the Jefferson image of agrarian democracy has been a favorite recourse of Southern liberals, just as his state rights doctrines have nourished conservatism.

In stark contrast to radical agrarianism there stands the concept of monolithic conservatism in Southern politics. It seems to be a proposition generally taken for granted now that the South is, by definition, conservative — and always has been. Yet the South in the late nineteenth century produced some of the most radical Populists and in the twentieth was a bulwark of Wilsonian progressivism and Roosevelt's New Deal, at least up to a point. A good case has been made out by Arthur S. Link that Southern agrarian radicals pushed Wilson further into progressivism than he intended to go. During the twenties Southern minority leadership in the Congress kept up such a running battle against the conservative tax policies of Andrew Mellon that, believe it or not, there was real fear among some Northern businessmen during the 1932 campaign that Franklin D. Roosevelt might be succeeded by that radical Southern income taxer, John Nance Garner! The conservative image of course has considerable validity, but it obscures understanding of such phenomena as Estes Kafauver, Albert Gore, Russell Long, Lister Hill, John Sparkman, Olin D. Johnston, William Fulbright, or the Yarboroughs of Texas. In the 1960 campaign the conservative image seriously victimized Lyndon B. Johnson, who started in politics as a vigorous New Dealer and later maneuvered through the Senate the first civil rights legislation since Reconstruction.

The infinite variety of Southern mythology could be catalogued and analyzed endlessly. A suggestive list would include the Proslavery South; the Confederate South; the Demagogic South; the State Rights South; the Fighting South; the Lazy South; the Folklore South; the South of jazz and the blues; the Booster South; the Rapacious South running away with Northern industries; the Liberal South of the interracial movement; the White Supremacy South of racial segregation, which seems to be for some the all-encompassing "Southern way of life"; the Anglo-Saxon (or was it the Scotch-Irish?) South, the most American of all regions because of its native population; or the Internationalist South, a mainstay of the Wilson, Roosevelt, and Truman foreign policies.

The South, then, has been the seedbed for a proliferation of paradoxical myths, all of which have some basis in empirical fact and all of which doubtlessly have had their true believers. The result has been, in David Potter's words, that the South has become an enigma, "a kind of Sphinx on the American land." What is really the answer to the riddle, what is at bottom the foundation of Southern distinctiveness has never been established with finality, but the quest for a central theme of Southern history has repeatedly engaged the region's historians. Like Frederick Jackson Turner, who extracted the essential West in his frontier thesis, Southern historians have sought to distill the quintessence of the South into some kind of central theme.

In a recent survey of these efforts Davil L. Smiley of Wake Forest College has concluded that they turn upon two basic lines of thought: "the casual effects of environment, and the development of certain acquired characteristics of the people called Southern." The distinctive climate and weather of the South, it has been argued, slowed the pace of life, tempered the speech of the South, dictated the system of staple crops and Negro slavery — in short, predetermined the plantation economy. The more persuasive suggestions have resulted from concentration upon human factors and causation. The best known is that set forth by U. B. Phillips. "The quintessence of Southernism," he wrote in 1928, was "a common resolve indomitably maintained" that the South "shall be and remain a white man's country." Whether "expressed with the frenzy of a demagogue or maintained with a patrician's quietude," this was "the cardinal test of a Southerner and the central theme of Southern history." Other historians have pointed to the rural nature of Southern society as the basic conditioning factor, to the prevalence of the country gentleman ideal imported from England, to the experience of the South as a conscious minority unified by criticism and attack from outside, to the fundamental piety of the Bible Belt, and to various other factors. It has even been suggested by one writer that a chart of the mule population would determine the boundaries of the South.

More recently, two historians have attempted new explanations. In his search for a Southern identity, C. Vann Woodward advances several crucial factors: the experience of scarcity and want in a land of plenty, failure and defeat in a land that glorifies success, sin and guilt amid the legend of American innocence, and a sense of place and belonging among a people given to abstraction. David M. Potter, probing the enigma of the South, has found the key to the riddle in the prevalence of a folk society. "This folk culture, we know, was far from being ideal or utopian," he writes, "and was in fact full of inequality and wrong, but if the nostaglia persists was it because even the inequality and wrong were parts of a life that still had a relatedness and meaning which our more bountiful life in the mass culture seems to lack?"

It is significant that both explanations are expressed largely in the past tense, Potter's explicitly in terms of nostalgia. They recognize, by implication at least, still another image — that of the Dynamic or the Changing South. The image may be rather nebulous and the ultimate ends unclear, but the fact of change is written inescapably across the Southern scene. The consciousness of change has been present so long as to become in itself one of the abiding facts of Southern life. Surely, it was a part of the inspiration for this symposium. As far back as the twenties it was the consciousness of change that quickened the imaginations of a cultivated and sensitive minority, giving us the Southern Renaissance in literature. The peculiar historical consciousness of the Southern writer, Allen Tate has suggested, "made possible the curious burst of intelligence that we get at a crossing of the ways, not unlike, on an infinitesimal scale, the outburst of poetic genius at the end of the sixteenth century when commercial England had already begun to crush feudal England." Trace it through modern Southern writing and at the center — in Ellen Glasgow, in Faulkner, Wolfe, Caldwell, the Fugitive-Agrarian poets, and all the others — there is the consciousness of change, of suspension between two worlds, a double focus looking both backward and forward.

The Southerner of the present generation has seen the old landmarks crumble with great rapidity: the one-crop agriculture and the very predominance of agriculture itself, the one-party system, the white primary, the poll tax, racial segregation, the poor white (at least in his classic connotations), the provincial isolation, virtually all the foundations of the established images. Yet, sometimes, the old traditions endure in surprising new forms. Southern folkways have been carried even into the factory, and the Bible Belt has revealed resources undreamt of in Mencken's philosophy — but who, in the twenties, could have anticipated Martin Luther King?

One wonders what new amages, what new myths, might be nurtured by the emerging South. Some, like Harry Ashmore, have merely written AN EPITAPH FOR DIXIE. It is the conclusion of two Southern sociologists, John M. Maclachian and Joe S. Floyd, Jr., that present trends "might well hasten the day when the South, once perhaps the most distinctively 'different' American region, will have become . . . virtually indistinguishable from the other urban-industrial areas of the nation." U. B. Phillips long ago suggested that the disappearance of race as a major issue would end Southern distinctiveness. One may wonder if Southern distinctiveness might even be preserved in new conditions entirely antithetic to this image. Charles L. Black, Jr., another emigre Southerner (at Yale Law School) has confessed to a fantastic dream that Southern whites and Negroes, bound in a special bond of common tragedy, may come to recognize their kinship. There is not the slightest warrant for it, he admits, in history, sociology or common sense. But if it should come to pass, he suggests, "The South, which has always felt itself reserved for a high destiny, would have found it, and [illegible] last. And the fragrance of it would spread, beyond calculation, over the world."

Despite the consciousness of change, perhaps even more because of it, Southerners still feel a persistent pull toward identification with their native region as a ground for belief and loyalty. Is there not yet something more than nostalgia to the idea of the South? Is there not some living heritage with which the modern Southerner can identify? Is there not, in short, a viable myth of the South? The quest for myth has been a powerful factor in recent Southern literature, and the suspicion is strong that it will irresistibly affect any historian's quest for the central theme of Southern history. It has all too clearly happened before — in the climatic theory, for example, which operated through its geographical determinism to justify the social order of the plantation, or the Phillips thesis of white supremacy, which becomes almost a touchstone of the historian's attitude toward the whole contemporary issue of race. "To elaborate a central theme," David L. Smiley has asserted, is "but to reduce a multifaceted story to a single aspect and its result . . . but to find new footnotes to confirm revealed truths and prescribed views."

The trouble is that the quest for the central theme, like Turner's frontier thesis, becomes absorbed willy-nilly into the process of myth making.

To pursue the Turner analogy a little further, the conviction grows that the frontier thesis, with all its elaborations and critiques, has been exhausted (and in part exploded) as a source of new historical insights. It is no derogation of insights already gained to suggest that the same thing happened to the quest for the central theme, and that the historian, AS HISTORIAN, may be beter able to illuminate our understanding of the South now by turning to a new focus upon the regional mythology.

To undertake the analysis of mythology will no longer require him to venture into uncharted wilderness. A substantial conceptual framework of mythology has already been developed by anthropologists, philosophers, psychologists, theologians, and literary critics. The historian, while his field has always been closely related to mythology, has come only lately to the critique of it. But there now exists a considerable body of historical literature on the American national mythology and the related subject of the national character, and Smith's stimulating VIRGIN LAND suggests the trails that may be followed into the idea of the South.

Several trails, in fact, have already been blazed. Nearly forty years ago, Francis Pendleton Gaines successfully traced the rise and progress of the plantation myth, and two recent authors have belatedly taken to the same trail. Howard R. Floan has considerably increased our knowledge of the abolitionist version in his study of Northern writers. THE SOUTH IN NORTHERN EYES, while William R. Taylor has approached the subject from an entirely new perspective in his CAVALIER AND YANKEE. Shields McIlwaine has traced the literary image of the poor white, while Stanley Elkins' SLAVERY has broken sharply from established concepts on both sides of that controversial question. One foray into the New South has been made in Paul Gaston's "The New South Creed, 1685-1900." Yet many important areas — the Confederate and Reconstruction myths, for example — still remain almost untouched.

Some of the basic questions that need to be answered have been attacked in these studies; some have not. It is significant that students of literature have led the way and have pointed up the value of even third-rate creative literature in the critique of myth. The historian, however, should be able to contribute other perspectives. With his peculiar time perspective he can seek to unravel the tangled genealogy of myth that runs back from the modern changing South to Jefferson's yeoman and Kennedy's plantation. Along the way he should investigate the possibility that some obscure dialectic may be at work in the pairing of obverse images: the two versions of the plantation, New South and Old, Cavalier and Yankee, genteel and savage, Regionalist and Agrarian, nativist and internationalist.

What, the historian may ask, have been the historical origins and functions of the myths? The plantation myth, according to Gaines and Floan, was born in the controversy and emotion of the struggle over slavery. It had polemical uses for both sides. Taylor, on the other hand, finds its origin in the psychological need, both North and South, to find a corrective for the grasping, materialistic, rootless society symbolized by the image of the Yankee. Vann Woodward and Gaston have noted its later psychological uses in bolstering the morale of the New South. The image of the Savage South has obvious polemical uses, but has if not others? Has it not served the function of national catharsis? Has it not created many Americans a convenient scapegoat upon which the sins of all may be symbolically laid and thereby expiated — a most convenient escape from problem solving? To what extent, indeed, has the mythology of the South in general welled up from the subconscious depths. Taylor, especially, has emphasized this question, but the sceptical historian will also be concerned with the degree to which it has been the product or the device of deliberate manipulation by propagandists and vested interests seeking identification with the "real" South.

Certainly any effort to delineate the character of a people must take into account its mythology. "Poets," James G. Randall suggested, "have done better in expressing the oneness of the South than historians have in explaining it." Can it be that the historians have been looking in the wrong places, that they have failed to seek the key to the enigma where the poets have so readily found it — in the mythology that has so much to do with shaping character, unifying society, developing a sense of community, of common ideals and shared goals. Perhaps by turning to different and untrodden paths we shall encounter the central theme of Southern history at last on the new frontier of mythology.

Is Car Ownership A Right Of Students As Citizens?

Should the North Carolina General Assembly prohibit its members from operating automobiles in Raleigh?

Students in a college or university, such as UNC, who sometimes hear that collegians should not maintain cars on or near the campus — even if their parents are willing — could pose that question for a pro or con argument.

It's an odd question, perhaps ridiculous — to even hint that U. S. citizens, over 21, with drivers' licenses, should have their cars taken away from them because of a temporary condition of life: serving as state legislators.

However, it isn't beyond fantasy to pose a query for debate — "Resolved: That possession of an Automobile is a Drawback to Legislative and Scholarly Efficiency."

* * *

Automobile ownership by Assemblymen in the State Capital, according to the affirmative, could have five bad results.

1. Weekend trips home and mid week excursions to other places interrupt the smooth continuity of legislative routine. Car availability tempts legislators to leave for home early on Friday and arrive back in Raleigh late on Tuesday.

2. Walking is good for the health. It's only a short distance from the Sir Walter and Carolina hotels to the Statehouse.

3. Extra cars accentuates Raleigh's traffic and parking snarls. Legislators should not add to the congestion.

4. Excessive use of cars could be destructive of good legislation. An automobile owner can't do as good a job as someone who doesn't possess a car.

5. Car ownership indicates riches, and encourages a country club atmosphere. Automobile accessibility might lead to misconduct.

On the other hand, to be fair about it, there is much to be said in favor of motor vehicle ownership, even by Legislators.

* * *

To dissent and give the negative side of the question, the following four points:

1. Legislators are American citizens. They have the legal right to own and operate automobiles anywhere in the state and nation. If they have a driver's license, there is no good reason to deny them automobile ownership in Raleigh just because they happen to be serving in the General Assemby. Such discrimination would be unreasonable and punitive, perhaps unconstitutional.

2. The automobile is a fact of 20th Century life. Owning a car is no longer a symbol of great wealth. The answer to the parking problem is more parking spaces. The horseless carriage is here to stay.

3. Legislators can often do better at their tasks if they enjoy the convenience of their cars. Some Legislators who own automobiles actually do a more effective job than some who do not have cars.

4. Legislators are mature and not likely to abuse the privilege of automobile maintenance in Raleigh, any more than they would at home. It is deplorable to insinuate probable misconduct because of availability of ready transportation.

Turning from the debate, it is proper to look at automobile ownership by students in the University of North Carolina.

Of the 9,600 students in the University of North Carolina here, 6,200 DO NOT maintain cars nor have them in Chapel Hill. About 3,400 students cars are registered, 1,000 of them owned by married students, and most of the others by graduate and professional students and juniors and seniors. The age of the average student in Chapel Hill is 22 years.

* * *

Freshmen may not have cars in Chapel Hill. Sophomores must maintain a "C" average before bringing the family automobile to the University.

Students holding scholarships or borrowing from the loan fund may not maintain motor vehicles in the University. Exceptions are made i nthe case of student who need cars in relation to self-help jobs in working their way through the University, and whose application to register a car is approved by the Faculty Committee on student Book Series Brings Acclaim To Romance Language Dept.

A number of observers have been dictating lately that Americans have too much free time on their hands and that something has to be done about this.

There is another side to this attack against free time—witness the people who make good use of it such as University of North Carolina Professors of Romance Languages Urban T. Holmes Jr. and John E. Keller.

In their non-classroom hours, Professors Holmes and Keller are devoting their leisure-time energies to a project which is bringing the University recognition throughout the world.

Prof. Holmes is the founder and editor of a series of publications grouped under the title "University of North Carolina Studies in the Romance Languages and Literature." Prof. Keller is the managing editor. Forty-two books have appeared in this series over the past 23 years of its existence.

Published 42 Books

To publish 42 books is no easy task, particularly when one is a busy professor! The process involves reviewing numerous manuscripts, reading each one, selecting those to be printed in book form, negotiating with printers, proofing, editing, and distributing the finished product. For many, such an activity would require a full-time paid employee. This, however, is not the case with the "Studies in the Romance Languages and Literature."

The series is a non-profit organization. "Our mission is to see that scholarly books, which can never be best sellers, but which deserve to appear in print, actually come into printed being," said Prof. Keller.

The 42 books produced in the series range anywhere from 80 up to about 350 pages in length. They are printed in Valencia, Spain, and Rome, Italy. The University of North Carolina Press handles the distribution of the publications.

Some of the books come out in hardback editions but most of them are printed with vivid paperback covers.

Contributes 100 Copies To Library

Profs. Holmes and Keller contribute over 100 copies of each publication in the series to the UNC Library, which, in turn, the Library then sends out to other libraries in exchange for books published at other universities. Such an exchange brings the UNC Library many books per year.

Scholars from all over the United States submit their manuscripts to editor Holmes for consideration for publication. Minute appraisal is given to each work submitted. The manuscripts cover a wide variety of romance subjects.

Recent titles in the series are: "La Chancun de Willame," edited by Nancy V. Iseley; "The Reappearing Characters in Balzac's Comedie Humaine," by Arthur G. Canfield and edited by Edward B. Ham of the University of Michigan (1962); "El libro do los enganos (revised edition)," edited by Prof. Keller (1959). Other volumes by UNC professors include "The Letters of Louvois," by Prof. Frank Duffey (1956); and "History of the Indies," a translation by Prof. Sterling Stoudemire from Oviedo.

In addition to Profs. Holmes and Keller, there is a six-member editorial board which looks after the series.

The Department of Romance Languages also publishes a journal called "Romance Notes," now in its fourth year of publication. The journal is also under the editorship of Profs. Holmes nad Keller.

"Romance Notes" publishes the short writings—note—and articles of scholars in the Romance languages and literatures from colleges and universities both in the United States and abroad.

Baby Boom Soon To Affect Campuses Throughout State

The first big wave of children born after the return of men from World War II will reach the campuses of colleges and universities in the nation next September. The so-called "population explosion" is now being heard and seen.

The nation's birthrate, which declined in the early years of the war, shot up after Johnny came marching home in 1945.

In 1946 the birthrate escalated sharply. The upward trend in births was further pronounced in 1947 and 1948.

A 1920-to-1963 birthrate chart prepared by Prof. Daniel O. Price, director of the Institute for Research in Social Science and a population specialist in the University of North Carolina Department of Sociology, shows a decline in the nation's birthrate in the 1930's, the sharp rise in 1939-40 just before World War II—to about 23 births per 1,000—then the slump to 20 births per thousand in 1943-44.

In 1946 the birthrate was about 25 births per 1,000 and in 1947-48 a peak of 28 births per 1,000 was reached.

Greater Admissions

Interpreted in school and collegiate terms, the population explosion and the impact on public schools are constantly pictured to the American people. Forecasts of enrollments in schools and colleges have been heard and warned for the past 15 years.

The 1946 "post-war babies" reached six years old and the first grade in 1951-52.

By 1958, they were 13 years old and going into junior high school, and by 1960 they had reached senior high.

The 17-year-olds are now graduating from high school and ready for college.

The first large enrollment will occur next Fall, September, 1963. An even bigger wave will come in September of 1964, and the biggest of all in 1965.

The N. C. General Assembly, fully aware of the problem, now is considering budgets of state institutions of higher learning. The current budget covers the period 1963-65, or the time of the peak of the population explosion birthrate.

Figures accumulated by the Governor's Commission on Education Beyond the High School show that requests for admission will go up drastically from new through the rest of the 1960's. That is why there is a plan for more community colleges to relieve the enrollments pressure, as well as for expansion of four-year colleges and possible founding of additional branches of the University.

Meanwhile, UNC is getting ready to do its part in taking care of the increased enrollments— at the rate of 500 increase per year.

Five Year Growth

In the past five years Chape Hill's student body has grown from 7100 to 9600 or 2,500 increase The average size of a liberal arts college in the nation is 2,500 students.

Accordingly, the growth at Chapel Hill alone in the last five years can be said to be equivalent to the size of the typical American liberal arts college. Chapel Hill growth in five years has been like adding another regular-sized college to the University. Another 500 increase will be registered this Fall, to bring the total enrollment above 10,000.

Does the present levelling off in birthrates indicate an eventual lessening in demand by students for admission—during the rest of the 20th century?

No, say the population experts. There will be increasing need for more dormitories, more classrooms, more educational facilities for students.

Prof. Dan Price, who in addition to his Institute for Research in Social Science duties, is a member of the board of directors of the American Population Associarate of the late 1940's will begin having babies in the next few years.

Although the birthrate has declined somewhat in the last several years, this has not resulted in the number of births. "The increase in the number of women of child-bearing age has off-set the decrease in the birth race," said Dr. Price.

Considering that 18 to 35 is the child-bearing age in the United States, it is seen that beginning in 1963 a group of women born during the high birthrate years from 1946 on will be entering this child bearing age.

"If birthrates remain anywhere near their present level," said Prof. Rice, "this sharply increasing number of women in the child-bearing ages will be producing a new wave of babies that will far exceed the number born in the post-war period. In other words, we are on the threshold of a second baby boon that, like the second stage of a rocket, is built on top of the momentum of the first stage."

General Assembly

Legislators in Raleigh, meeting to consider the State's operations from 1963 to 1965, are aware of the surge in enrollments. They know that high school populations, are increasing year by year. So is college enrollment.

Comparing college enrollments North Carolina with pre-World War II college enrollments, it is found that total college and university enrollment in the state in 1940 was 32,000 students. In 1950 the number had grown to 45,000. In 1960 there were 68,000. In 1962, the number grew to 75,000.

The Governor's Commission on Education Beyond the High School predicts 93,000 seeking admission to colleges and universities in the state in 1965.

In 1970 the number seeking admission will reach at least 110,000.

HOW TO GET EDUCATED ALTHOUGH ATTENDING COLLEGE

In your quest for a college degree, are you becoming a narrow specialist, or are you being educated in the broad, classical sense of the word?

This question is being asked today by many serious observers—including my barber, my roofer, and my little dog Spot—and it would be well to seek an answer.

Are we becoming experts only in the confined area of our majors, or does our knowledge range far and wide? Do we, for example, know who fought in the Battle of Jenkins' Ear, or Kant's epistemology, or Planck's constant, or Valsalva's maneuver, or what Wordsworth was doing ten miles above Tintern Abbey?

If we do not, we are turning, alas, into specialists. How then can we broaden our vistas, lengthen our horizons—become, in short, educated?

Well sir, the first thing we must do is throw away our curricula. Tomorrow, instead of going to the same old classes, let us try something new. Let us not think of college as a rigid discipline, but as a kind of vast academic smorgasbord, with all kinds of tempting intellectual tidbits to savor. Let's start sampling tomorrow.

We will begin the day with a stimulating seminar in Hittite artifacts. Then we will go over to marine biology and spend a happy hour with the sea slugs. Then we will open our pores by drilling a spell with the ROTC. Then we'll go over to journalism and tear out the front page. Then we'll go to the medical school and autograph some casts. Then we'll go to home economics and have lunch.

And between classes we'll smoke Marlboro Cigarettes. This, let me emphasize, is not an added fillip to the broadening of our education. This is an essential. To learn to live fully and well is an important part of education, and Marlboros are an important part of living fully and well. What a sense of completeness you will get from Marlboro's fine tobaccos, from Marlboro's pure filter! What flavor Marlboro delivers! Through that immaculate filter comes flavor in full measure, flavor without stint or compromise, flavor that wrinkled care derides, flavor holding both its sides. This triumph of the tobacconist's art comes to you in soft pack or Flip-Top box and can be lighted with match, lighter, candle, Welsbach mantle, or by rubbing two small Indians together.

When we have embarked on this new regimen—or, more accurately, lack of regimen—we will soon be cultured as all get out. When strangers accost us on the street and say, "What was Wordsworth doing ten miles above Tintern Abbey, hey?" we will no longer slink away in silent abashment. We will reply loud and clear:

"As any truly educated person knows, Wordsworth, Shelley, and Keats used to go to the Widdicombe Fair every year for the poetry-writing contests and three-legged races, both of which they enjoyed lyrically. Well sir, imagine their chagrin when they arrived at the Fair in 1776 and learned that Oliver Cromwell, uneasy because Guy Fawkes had just invented the spinning jenny, had cancelled all public gatherings, including the Widdicombe Fair and Liverpool. Shelley was so upset that he drowned himself in a butt of malmsey. Keats went to London and became Charlotte Bronte. Wordsworth ran blindly into the forest until he collapsed in a heap ten miles above Tintern Abbey. There he lay for several years, sobbing and kicking his little fat legs. At length, peace returned to him. He looked around, noted the beauty of the forest, and was so moved that he wrote Joyce Kilmer's immortal Trees . . . And that, smart-apple, is what Wordsworth was doing ten miles above Tintern Abbey."

Alumni Game Ends Spring Football Practice

Jim Hickey To Field Experienced Line-Up

By DON KING

Thirty-eight former North Carolina gridders return to Kenan Stadium today to do battle with the 1963 varsity edition of the Tar Heels.

Leading the oldsters against the Heels will be such former greats as Phil Blazer, John Shroeder, Rip Hawkins, Gib Carson, Joe Craver, Ray Farris and Skip Clement.

Last year the alumni came away the victors by a 10-7 score. It was Blazer's field goal that made the difference.

The varsity will be led by the passing combination of Bob Lacey and Junior Edge. On the ground the Heels will feel the absence of fullback Ken Willard. He, Gary Black and Frank Gallagher have been with the baseball team, and did not participate in spring practice.

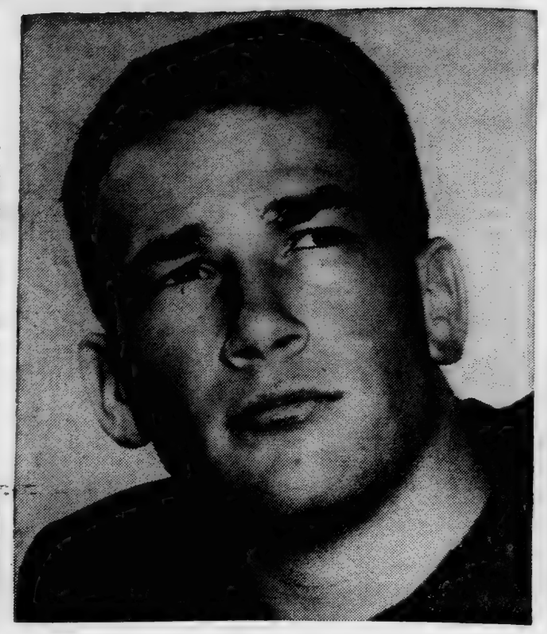
But Coach Jim Hickey will count on Eddie Kesler at full, and Ron Tuthill and Roger Smith at the halves to take up the slack.

However the varsity will not monopolize the airways. Back for the alumni are Ray Farris and All-America John Schroeder. Steve Yates and Jim Runco of last year's Tar Heels will bolster the end position.

In the backfield Coach George Barclay will have Lenny Beck, Daley Goff, Wade and Moyer Smith, and Carson. The alumni will be even stronger in the line and at linebacker with Blazer, Hawkins, Craver, Frank Riggs, Jim Shumate, Don Stallings, Andy Miketa, and from last year's team, Bob Zaback, Bruce and Duff Green, Tony Hennessey, and John Hegarty.

Likely starters for the varsity will be Lacey and John Hammett at end, Cole Kortner and Vic Esposito at tackle, Clint Eudy and Jim Alderman at guard, Chris Hanburger at center, Junior Edge, Kesler, Tuthill, and Smith in the backfield.

Helping the alumni will be 27 varsity players.



Charlie Justice will not be at the game as announced earlier, because of a business engagement.

Basketball Stars Play Exhibition

An exhibition basketball game featuring Carolina stars, past and present, will be played in the Chapel Hill High School Gym at 8 Monday night.

Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet will head up a Big Four All-Star team which will oppose Lenny Rosenbluth's Carolina All-Stars. Members of Rosenbluth's team are Danny Lotz, Doug Moe, Al Long, Jim Hudock, Joe Quigg and Tony Radovich.

Joining Brown and Poteet will be State's Ken Rohloff, ex-State basketballer Whitey Bell, now with San Francisco in the American Basketball League, and Roman Gabriel, former N. C. State football All-American now with the Los Angeles Rams. Duke's Art Heyman was originally expected to play in the six-game tour but has withdrawn because of studies.

Gib Carson

Skip Clement

FORMER UNC BACKFIELD stars, Gib Carson and Skip Clement, will play with the Alumni this afternoon in the second annual Monogram sponsored Varsity-Alumni football game. The Alumni won last year's event, 10-7.

Clement played quarterback and halfback while at UNC and now plays with the Pittsburgh Steelers. Carson was an All-Atlantic Coast Conference halfback for the Tar Heels in 1961.

Duke Tops UNC Nine

By LOU ROSENTHAL

Duke capitalized on five unearned runs in the first inning, and the four hit pitching of Stan Crisson, to beat the Tar Heels 9-1, in the opening game of the 1963 baseball season, yesterday at Emerson Stadium.

Crisson struck out 10 Tar Heels and only a ninth inning homer by Ken Willard prevented the Blue Devils from shutting out Carolina.

Crisson also helped his own cause by blasting a homer in the top of the ninth with two teammates on base. Both Willard's and Crisson's home runs went 380 feet away over the left-center field fence.

Jack Mullen started the Blue Devils' scoring when his grounder was overthrown by Tar Heel shortstop Jim Speight. Tommy Taylor then hit a single, and Biff Bracey drove in Mullen when his grounder forced Taylor at second.

Dave Uible single to put Bracey on third, and when Crisson tapped a slow roller down the third base line, Dick Fleming failed to come up with the ball, to let Bracey score.

Bobby Hawn then singled to load the sacks, and Sonny Odom cleared the bases with a double to left center. Tar Heel starting pitcher Bill Haywood then struck out the next two Duke batters to end the inning.

In the third Hawn started with a walk, and went to second on Odom's single. Ed Chestnutt then laid down a sacrifice bunt, to move the runners to second and third. Tar Heel Coach Walter Rabb then yanked Haywood, and put in Bobby Cox.

Bucky Fader, the next batter, hit a hard grounder to Fleming, but again Fleming miscued, and the sixth Blue Devil run scored. Cox then retired the next two batters to end the inning.

Crisson retired the first nine Tar Heels in order, before Dick Prindle walked to start the fourth. Speight struck out, but Heyward Hull lined a single to right, and Prindle advanced to third. Crisson then got Gary Black to hit into a double play to end the threat.

Cox retired nine men in order, before he left the game. In the top of the sixth, the first batter, Mullen, rapped a hard hit ball back to the mound. It hit Cox's knee, but catcher Bernie Isgett pounced on the ball and threw Mullen out at first.

Cox finished the inning, but Rabb decided not to take a chance on the knee, and pulled Cox in the bottom of the inning for a pinch-hitter.

ONLY ONE GATE

Only one gate will be open for the Varsity-Alumni Football Game in Kenan Stadium today. Gate 2, the main gate at the north end of the Stadium will be open. All others will be closed.

Netters Win 5th, Bag Harvard, 7-2

By LOUIS LEGUM

The real test of any good team is its ability to play well against strong competition—to win when they have to.

North Carolina proved that they are such a tennis team yesterday as they authoritatively put down a determined challenge by Harvard, 7-2.

In several of the previous matches of the season Carolina appeared to lack some of its characteristic sharpness, but with only one or two exceptions yesterday, they proved to the satisfaction of an overflowing crowd that when the chips are down they have what it takes.

Characteristic of the match was Bitsy Harrison's inspired play at number three. In the first game Harrison completely bewildered Harvard's Vic Niederhoffer by scorching four consecutive shots down the line in tart reply to Niederhoffer's serve. With his serve and net game working very well, Harrison was able to win by a lopsided 6-2-, 6-1 score.

The match on the number one court, while a little closer, was exciting and well played. George Sokol and his opponent Paul Sullivan played the same kind of game, but Sokol had just enough extra on every point to become a 6-4, 6-2 winner. Sullivan had Sokol down 3-1 in the first set, but Sokol got his tremendous forehand working, and thereafter it was easy going.

In the closest match of the afternoon, improving Charlie Shaffer used every bit of energy he had, which is a lot, to pull out a tight 6-3, 1-6, 6-4 victory over Frank Ripley. Ripley had Shaffer down 4-3 in the final set, but the Tar Heel co-captain held his serve twice and broke Ripley's when it counted to preserve the win.

Carolina's other singles victory was credited to Keith Stoneman who impatiently got rid of Doug Walker, 6-2, 6-2. As usual, in important matches the 6-3 veteran played some of his best tennis.

Harvard's only two points of the afternoon came at four and six. Doug Walter apparently caught O. H. Parrish on one of his off days to win, 6-3, 6-3. Tall Bob Inman dropped the first set to Carolina's Pete Myers, but came on to win. 4-6, 7-5, 6-2.

In the doubles, which were all fiercely contested, Sokol and Stoneman defeated Ripley and Niederhoffer, 6-4, 6-3, while Shaffer and Parrish scored a three set victory, 4-6, 6-3, 6-1, over Sullivan and John Vinton. The oddity of the day came in the match between Harrison and Cocke and Peckham and Inman. After winning the first set 6-3, the Carolina team had to struggle to a 16-14 second set for the win.

Fallout Shelter Supplies Arrive

Fallout shelter survival equipment is being delivered to the University.

The fourth of six tractor-trailer truckloads of equipment arrived at Aycock Dormitory Friday. Chapel Hill-Carrboro Civil Defense director George Spooner said the remaining two loads would come this week. Distribution of the equipment to the various fallout shelters on campus will begin soon.

The material has been provided by the federal government. The lengthy red tape and voluminous correspondence necessary before a survival equipment requisition can bear fruit was conducted by Dr. Spooner's Civil Defense secretary. The secretary was provided with funds appropriated to Civil Defense by Chapel Hill and Carrboro.

The survival equipment is sufficient for the 11,825 people for whom shelter space has been allocated on the University campus. Dr. Spooner said a potential of 30,000 shelter spaces existed in Chapel Hill and Carrboro, but that the only officially designated shelters at present were on campus.

The equipment includes survival ration biscuits, the only foodstuff, which taste like graham crackers but are a complete nutrient. A little less than 1,000 calories per person per day has been provided, a total of 10,000 calories per person. Also part of the equipment are 17½-gallon water drums, sanitation equipment, and medical equipment. The medical equipment is not designed for the treatment of wounds, but only for normal, everyday ailments which could be treated from the average home medicine cabinet. Some of the medical kits have an effective expiration date of 1967. None of the kits contains narocotics.

In addition, the survival equipment contains radiation detection equipment: pocket dosimeters, and low and high range radiation survey meters.

The campus shelters to which the survival equipment will be distributed have all been marked as shelters.

The shelters and their capacities are:

Aldermen Dormitory basement, capacity 200; Alexander Dormitory basement, 200; Carroll Hall basement, 375; Cobb Dormitory basement, 1,209; Connor Dormitory basement, 92; Hanes Hall basement, 582; Joyner Dormitory basement, 63; University Library, the stacks between the first and seventh levels, 3,160 (the Library walls are four feet thick); McIver Dormitory basement, 79; Morehead Planetarium, Orrery and east wing basement, 330; Parker Dormitory basement, 195; Phillips Hall, basement of the new addition, 207; Spencer Dormitory, basement of the new addition, 50; Whitehead basement, 99; Wilson Hall basement corridor, 100; Winston Dormitory 92; UNC Dental School basement, 142; Hospital Clinic basement corridors, 335; various areas of the core, basement to fourth floor, of Memorial Hospital, 2,937; MacNider Hall basement, 146; Medical Science residential wing basement, 225; Nurses' Quarters basements of wings B & C, 420; Pharmacy Building basement, including the unfinished part, 283; Psychiatric wing basement, 105; Psychiatric Wing tunnel to Gravely Sanatorium, 105; Public Health building, basement of new addition, 94.

Honorary Observes Sixtieth

The 60th annual tapping exercises of the Order of the Golden Fleece will be held Monday night in Memorial Hall, beginning at seven o'clock, along with the Valkyrie Sing competition.

Termed "the highest honor that can come to a Carolina student", tapping into the Golden Fleece is accorded to a number of outstanding students annually, chosen on criteria of leadership and contribution to the academic and extra-curricular life of the University.

The Order of Golden Fleece was organized at Chapel Hill in 1903. Besides students and faculty members and others of Chapel Hill who are active or alumni members, a number of alumni from throughout North Carolina and elsewhere will attend the tapping and a dinner for Fleece members after the ceremonies.

The speaker at the private Golden Fleece dinner following the tapping will be Louis Harris, nationally-prominent public opinion poll expert who is a University alumni and a member of the Golden Fleece. The dinner will be held in the banuet hall of the Carolina Inn.

Doors To Be Closed

The doors to Memorial Hall will be closed at 7 with the tapping ceremonies will begin shortly after, with a revelation of the search "by Jason for the Golden Fleece." Following the presentation of the story of Jason from Greek mythology, the hall will be darkened and hooded "giants," with the emblem of the Golden Fleece on their shoulders will go up and down the aisles. The giants will tap a number of persons for membership in the order.

Immediately following the Fleece ceremonies will be the presentation of the Valkyries and the Valkyrie Sing. Eighteen groups, including sororities, fraternities, dormitories, and special organizations, have entered the Sing competition in one of five divisions.

Entered in the Women's Sing Division are Alpha Delta Pi presenting "Let's Get Away From It All;" Alpha Gamma Delta, "Journey Through Southland;" Chi Omega, "Carolina, From A Co-Ed's Point of View;" Delta, Delta, Delta, "Tri-Delta Trip To The Stars;" Pi Beta Phi, "The Best Things In Life Are Free;" and Kappa Kappa Gamma, "Sound of Tar Heel Voices."

Women's Skits

In the Women's Skit division are KD's with "How To Multiply By Long Division" and the Nurses Dorm's "On Conformity."

The Men's Skit division has two entries: Delta Upsilon with "East Side Story," and Ruffin Dorm with "Lenoir Hall Story."

Entered in the Men's Sing division are ATO (last year's winners) presenting "Calyso Melody;" Chi Psi, "The Diminished Fifth"; Everette Dorm, "Six-Pack Plus Two"; St. Anthony Hall, "The Thirsty Thirteen;" and Sigma Nu, "Distractions."

In the special division, the Spanish club is presenting "Fantasia de Carnival."

Trophies will be presented to the group judged best in each of the five divisions. Judges for the event are Mrs. Kaye Kyser, Bob Johnson, Vincent Cantarino, Charles Edge, George Daniels, and Mrs. Helen Allen.

While the judges are making their decisions, special entertainment will be presented by the Migrants.

Between divisions, a representative from the Dean of Women's office will present the Irene F. Lee Award to the senior woman student judged to be most outstanding in character, scholarship, and leadership.

Both the Fleece tapping and the Valkyrie Sing are open to all students who wish to attend. Providing they are seated by seven o'clock.

Late permission will be granted for women students who enter the sing, if the program continues past 11 p.m.

Chester Bowles New Ambassador To India

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy announced Saturday he is naming Chester Bowles as U. S. ambassador to India, sending the controversial diplomat-politician back to the post he filled 10 years ago.

Bowles will speak here, in a Carolina Forum-sponsored program, Monday, April 29 at eight o'clock in Memorial Hall.

Bowles will succeed economist and writer John Kenneth Galbraith, who is returning to his old teaching post at Harvard University in June. Galbraith, like Bowles an expert on India, has been U. S. ambassador in New Delhi since President Kennedy took office.

The President said in a statement announcing his choice of Bowles that "no American has a deeper understanding of India and Asia. A decade ago, he was a pioneer in creating bonds of understanding between India and the United States."

Bowles' first tour of duty in india was during the Truman administration, in 1951-53. Big, easy-going and informal, he was extremely popular with the Indian people.

However, some Indian officials have said they now felt that a more conservative envoy would do them more good because he would have more influence in Washington. Bowles' relations with Kennedy have been somewhat stormy.

During the 1960 presidential campaign, Bowles' name was sometimes mentioned as a possible choice for secretary of state. He was, instead, appointed an undersecretary.

Then, on Nov. 6, 1961, he and a number of State Department officials were shifted around, following a spate of reports that the President was unhappy with Bowles.

He was named Kennedy's special adviser on underdeveloped areas, and has spent much time traveling in Asia, Africa and Latin America since then.

It has been reported that Bowles had decided to resign from the government unless he was given some other position than the one he has been occupying.

His appointment as ambassador must be confirmed by the Senate, but no trouble is expected. He was confirmed for the undersecretary job in January, 1961, with no recorded opposition in either the Foreign Relations Committee or on the Senate floor. This was in spite of the fact that Bowles has at times been a favorite target of some Republican lawmakers for his liberal views.

Sen. George D. Aiken, Vt., the Foreign Relations Committee's second-ranking Republican, said "I doubt if there will be any difficulty in approving Chester Bowles."

He added that "it takes a particular type of person to represent us in India and Bowles got along pretty well before."

NAACP Says Demonstration Seeks Support, Not Boycott

By DAVE CHEEK

David Dansby, president of the UNC chapter of the NAACP, speaking in behalf of the chapter, said yesterday, "We would like to emphasize that the purpose of picketing Memorial Hospital this afternoon is to enlist community support, through picketing and writing letters.

"It is certainly not our intention that the picket line be construed as meaning that sick people should refuse to accept medical treatment," he said.

The UNC Chapter of the NAACP voted Thursday to protest what it said were segregated facilities at the hospital.

The demonstration planned by the NAACP will coincide with the dedication of the new school of Public Health to be dedicated today.

Planning to assist in the demonstration, which will begin from South Building at 1:30 p.m. today, will be the Town Chapter of the NAACP, the Durham NAACP-CORE chapter, some local high school students and members of the staff of Reflections magazine in Chapel Hill.

Several noted speakers, including Gov. Terry Sanford will be on hand for the dedication of the new facility.

The history of local efforts to desegregate the hospital is a long one, according to a statement released yesterday by Dansby.

The statement read in part, "During the 1961-62 school year the UNC chapter of the NAACP sent a negotiating committee to the Director of the N. C. Memorial Hospital to urge him to take steps to end segregation there. At that time the director was Dr. Robert Cadmus. We had two meetings with Dr. Cadmus in which we discussed removal of signs denoting racial segregation in rest rooms at the Hospital and the end of segregation in the wards and private patient rooms.

"During the negotiations Dr. Cadmus was receptive to the idea of removing the Negro and White signs from the rest rooms but indicated the signs would have to be removed over a period of time, and twould have to be removed at night so their removal would be inconspicuous. He flatly refused

Religion Professor Hill Is Jr. Class Teacher Of Month

Professor of Religion Dr. Sam Hill has been chosen Teacher of the Month of March by the Junior Class. Dr. Hill is the second professor in the Department of Religion, following Dr. Bernard Boyd, to be so honored.

The Junior class reported that Dr. Hill's courses are "interesting, challenging and of great importance to the students."

Dr. Hill said that, "although many students are not religious during their college years, many of them will probably be good churchmen when they settle down."

"A high percentage of college students are interested in religion intellectually, for they are attempting to work out a world view and a way of life, and they see the study of religion as affording an important perspective or the task of general education, he said.

Dr. Hill spent his youth in Georgetown, Ky and graduated from Georgetown College (magna cum laude) in 1949 with an AB in history and a minor in English. Strongly influenced by his home, his father was a Baptist minister, Dr. Hill attended Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, Ky. for two years.

Feeling that his world had become circumscribed, Dr. Hill said, "I wanted to expand my horizons." So he attended Vanderbilt where he received his MA in English, and later returned to the Seminary and completed his Bachelor of Divinity in 1953.

Dr. Hill was active in the pulpit for two years and then attended Cambridge University for a year on a Rotary Foundation Fellowship.

It was during this time that he decided upon teaching as his vocation. He said, "I am interested in ideas and I thrive upon university atmosphere. I realized that I needed intellectual stimulation and excitement."

Dr. Sam Hill

Dr. Hill attended Duke University for four years and completed his PhD in Theology in 1960. He also taught at Stetson University for a year and then came to Chapel Hill as professor in Religion in the fall of 1960.

Students Come Alive

When asked what was the most exciting phase of teaching Dr. Hill said, "It's watching a student come alive intellectually when he can cease learning something for the sake of a good grade and can relate his subject to other areas in his own life. This gives a student a better understanding of himself.

"I am sold on the importance of what I teach and the value of education. A student needs to realize who he is, the forces of which he is a product, and his responsibilities in society," he noted.

Dr. Hill stressed his belief in the "unity of all knowledge." However he recognizes the fact that he and other teachers often fail to expose the relationships between their topics and other fields. He feels that this failure is a grave mistake.

Dr. Hill is now in the process of writing a book, tentatively entitled "The Rise and Decline of Protestantism in the South."

Astronauts Train Here Friday Night

Three astronauts and accompanying scientists arrived in Chapel Hill Friday for pre-orbital training at the Morehead Planetarium.

Commander Wally Schirra, Major Gordon Cooper, and Commander Alan Shepherd were accompanied by NASA official Dr. Robert Voss; NASA astronomer Dr. Jocelyn Gill; University of Michigan airglow specialist Dr. Frankln Roach; and William Hutch.

A 22-orbital flight is planned for Major Cooper May 7. Commander Shepherd will be Major Cooper's backup man for the flight.

The group trained Friday night from the conclusion of the Planetarium's regular "Easter The Awakening" program until about 1 a.m., reviewing Commander Schirra's 6-orbital flight.

The group also considered Major Cooper's coming flight, studying the appearance of the planned flight path and surrounding areas of sky.

Planetarium narrator Harvey Daniell and administrative assistant Don Hall assisted the astronauts with their training.

Hank Murphy's "Daytona Do's And Don't's"

(This space was contributed by the Tar Heel to the Campus Chest auction — and was sold to Mr. Murphy.—Eds.)

Inasmuch as many of us will be heading to Daytona Beach next week, and inasmuch as I am a native of that fair city, and inasmuch as I can't think of anything else to write about, without rehashing the already well-hashed hash that seems to be the main staple of our beloved piece of pulp which we fondly call the DAILY TAR HEEL; I have decided to capitalize on this opportunity by presenting my list of "Do's and Don't's of Easter Holidays in Daytona Beach."

I entertained thoughts of possible remuneration from the Chamber of Commerce until I realized that most of my Don't's and many of my Do's might probably be looked upon with some disfavor by the City Fathers, and, being further stunted by that good rule, rammed down our throats from Sunday School on up, namely, that it is better to tell the truth, I have decided to be as frank as hell and just generally LAY IT ON THE LINE. Behold:

DO:

1. Buy your liquid refreshments in Florida—it's cheaper there.
2. Go to the Martinique. (off Mainstreet)
3. Take advantage of the city's special entertainment (includes Peter, Paul & Mary; The Folksters; and The Highwaymen).
4. Go to the Paleface (across Seabreeze bridge).
5. Go to the Checkerboard (South Ridgewood).
6. Sing "Hotnuts Songs" at 3:00 A.M. in front of your motel.
7. Take a cooler with you, and paper cups. Bottles or tin containers aren't allowed on the beach—City Ordinance (joke).
8. Take your date to see the "Tomoka lights."

DON'T:

1. Tip Mary at the Paleface.
2. Buy a "paleface" at the Paleface.
3. Stay at a certain motel with a name meaning "an African excursion." You'll get rooked.
4. Try to use a fake Georgia Driver's license—they'll laugh in your face.
5. Go to a pseudo-coffee house called "Laissez-Faire" (God, you'd croak).
6. Swing from lampposts.
7. Talk back to a D. B. cop.
8. (boys) mess with any D. B. girls—they know every line ever used.
9. (girls) mess with any D. B. boys—they know lines that haven't been used.
10. Call me if you get in trouble. I'll probably be in more of it than you are.

These articles constitute Hank's Handy-Guide-for-Better-Living in Daytona. Those of you with insight will read into it the subtle implication that Daytona is a hell of a place to go if you want to raise a little. To those of you without that insight might I suggest a nice, quiet trip to the mountains?

Miss Carmichael

To Miss Katherine Carmichael, known affectionately to the campus as the "Dean of Women," we would direct the following quotation of Arnold J. Toynbee:

"The world's greatest need . . . is mutual confidence. No human being ever knows all the secrets of another's heart. Yet there is enough confidence between mother and child, husband and wife, buyer and seller, to make social life a practical possibility. Confidence may be risky, but it is nothing like so risky as mistrust."

Morals

In yesterday's editorial column we said Dean Long was handling almost all "morals" cases; that the student judiciary should try these cases; that "already this year a number of students have been suspended from school on morals charges by Long."

This was incorrect. Dean Long has been handling all morals cases, "in conjunction with an agreement with student government dating back to the Bill Harriss administration," he asserted—but the suspensions have been carried out by a special administrative - faculty judicial board (which only tries moral and psychiatric cases) consisting of Dean Henderson and two faculty members. Six students have been sent by Dean Long to the board on morals charges—five have been suspended. (JC)

Letters To The Editors

Small-Time Big-Time . . .

Which Way For Athletics?

To the Editors,

"I agree with his (Tom Crais') general statement about big time athletics." So said Chancellor Aycock in Wednesday's Daily Tar Heel. But does he? Anyone taking even a cursory glance at the U.N.C. athletic program would have to say that it attempts to be "big-time." The fact that "big-time" teams have not been produced is a fault of an inadequate athletic department. They try to be "big-time" but they fail.

If the Chancellor does not want "big-time" athletics how can he condone the following:

1. Membership in the Atlantic Coast Conference (certainly a "big-time" conference).
2. A football section in a dorm.
3. High-pressure recruiting.
4. Pre-game meals at the Pines (at added expense) when they could be adequately furnished at Lenoir Hall at a fraction of the cost.
5. Playing non-conference "big-time" schools to finance a "big-time" athletic program.
6. Special tutors for athletes.
7. An addition to Kenan Stadium—could not they have asked Mr. Kenan to donate to a more worthwhile project?
8. The very existence of the "Educational Foundation."

These are just a few of the "big-time" moves made by U.N.C.

This is not to say, however that I am not in favor of "big-time" athletics. I am in favor of them! But I am not in favor of being a small-time big-time school. Which way are we to go?

P.S. Get on the stick, Chuck!

White-Washing By UP: Ech!

To the Editors,

The University Party of UNC once prided itself as the guardian of fraternal conservatism on campus. However, in recent times this thoughtful political organization has apparently realized that it has altruistic interests in the campus as a whole—thus the "All-Campus Party." The party is so proud of this recent, noble gesture that it has decided to leave memorable monuments to mark the beginning of its change of heart. The cultural wing of the party has decided to utilize the simplicity of nature on campus combined with contemporary expressionism in producting this aesthetic marvel which often produces tears in the eyes of the appreciative observer.

That is, the landscape just south of Kenan Stadium has been beautifully altered by the leisurely application of a white-wash medium. Although some critics have doubts concerning the permanence of the medium, the artistically inclined will be overjoyed to learn that, although the artistic design will be weathered into a more subtle message, its beauty will remain to be enjoyed for a long time to come.

Problems Of Amateur Athletes

To the Editors,

The elections of the past week brought into prominence the workings of Student Government. Both parties advocated a betterment of existing conditions at Carolina as a part of their campaign propaganda. Now that the victors are firmly entrenched in office they may—and probably will — forget these "promises". However, may I be bold enough to bring to fore several conditions under which the amateur athlete suffers.

First is the closing of the Tin Can at such a ridiculously early hour. Surely, it would not be too much trouble to allow it to remain open until eleven o'clock nitely. Second is the absence of outdoor basketball courts. There are certainly many students who would enjoy playing in the fresh air and sunshine. We offer these newly elected student representatives an opportunity to prove that Student Government is not a gigantic fiasco, but does have its place in a modern, progressive campus.

UNC Mockery Of Old Self

To the Editors,

The University of North Carolina has been raped. The premise of liberty and learning, coupled with an even more abstract term as honor, on which this school was founded has been turned into a dry husk of mockery. The reason the University ever had any identity was that here in North Carolina was a combination of Southern romantic idealism and Yankee practicality.

Now, when coaches are fired for speaking out, when professors are remonstrated for fraternizing with students, when mature young women are censored as to where they may visit, and trials in councils of Honor are held almost secretly, the University has no right to bear the name of a Southern state. By such acts of simpering prudery, the University has been betrayed and taken advantage of. The bastard offspring of this iscariot act will be a hybrid of Duke and Davidson, and will be blind and spastic from the Prussian disease. Let us pray for an abortion.

Tuition Should Be Kept Low At State Schools

Joint Office of Institutional Research
Washington, D. C.

The case for keeping tuition at a minimum at public colleges and universities has been bolstered by an analysis of family income made recently by Elmer D. West of the American Council on Education.

Dr. West gave his appraisal in a talk to the College Scholarship Service Meeting in New York City, as part of a review of the national scholarship situation.

According to the Census Bureau, the median U. S. family income in 1960 was $5,620, Dr. West said, indicating that half the families in the country had incomes below that figure. Twenty-two per cent, or one in five families, had incomes of less than $3,000 a year, Dr. West said, and another 20 per cent had family incomes between $3,000 and $4,999 a year. All figures were for income prior to taxes, he pointed out. "It is hard to see how families with such incomes can offer their children much hope of a college education," Dr. West declared. "Although a few individuals will aspire to and attain a college education, in general hope — if it comes at all — must come largely from outside sources."

A large proportion of these families had young children, Dr. West continued. Of the families with six or more children under 18 years of age, 59.2 per cent had annual incomes lower than $5,000, he said, with 49.7 per cent of the 5-children families and 38.5 per cent of the 4-children families in the under-$5,000 family income bracket. Among families whose income fell under $6,000 a year, he continued, were 69 per cent of those with six or more children, 65 per cent of those with five children and 55 per cent of those with four children. "These families, it seems to me, represent what may be essentially new territory for the discovery and development of needy but talented children. I have a feeling not enough has yet been done for them," Dr. West said.

"College costs are going up, up, up," Dr. West continued. "Perhaps income will, too, but at present it is not rising as fast as tuition and fees."

Molehills Mighty At UNC

Raleigh News & Observer

At least by now U.NC Athletic Director Chuhck Erickson has learned how to make a mountain out of a molehill — or to disclose a mountain where only a molehill was supposed to exist.

A freshman tennis coach wrote a letter to The Tar Heel at Chapel Hill. He charged softness to athletes in student discipline at the University. So Athletic Director Chuck Erickson fired the tennis coach forthwith for "unfitting remarks." Then the Tar Heel let Erickson have it with both barrels in an editorial.

"This thing is getting all out of proportion," said Erickson. Maybe so. Maybe not.

It has now resulted in Chancellor Aycock stating that he did feel it necessary to suspend an athlete whose admitted guilt had resulted in no action by the Honor Council. "Since that day," the Chancellor says, he thinks the Honor Council has faced up to its responsibilities very well. This incident, however, indicates that the fired tennis coach was not entirely off base in his charges.

Now also Chancellor Aycock has said that he checked The Tar Heel editorial, criticizing Erickson, "to make sure it wasn't written by an adult or somebody not connected with the college." He found out it was written by a student staff member of the paper. Still his action suggests a sort of investigation of The Tar Heel rather than of the precipitate behavior of the athletic director it criticized. And this, plus the necessity the Chancellor found to go over the head of the Honor Council, suggests a sort of lack of faculty faith in student expression and student justice which is new at Chapel Hill.

It begins to look as if there may be a whole range of molehills and—or mountains over there.

"We then appealed to Chancellor Aycock. Aycock indicated that the assignment of beds was a medical problem and that he would leave that up to the discretion of Dean Berryhill and the director of the hospital.

"In a second meeting with Aycock he indicated that all the signs had been removed. He said that he would leave the assignment of rooms soley to the discretion of the Dean of the Medical School.

"This year a negotiating committee resumed negotiations with the new director of the hospital. Mr. Crawford, the new director, refused to take any steps toward eliminating racial discrimination in the assignment of patients to rooms. He stated that he was not interested in 'sociological problems' . . . that his job was to cure the sick.

"From Dr. Crawford the NAACP took its appeal to Dean Berryhill, Dean of the School of Medicine. In a brief session Berryhill gave a flat 'no' to the assignment of rooms on a non-discriminatory basis.

"The NAACP next took its appeal to President Friday. Friday merely stated that he would sustain the decision of Chancellor Aycock, leaving the matter to the judgment of Dean Berryhill.

"President Friday did indicate that he would approve an appeal to the Board of Trustees. The NAACP wrote a letter to President Friday asking him to reconsider his decision 'approving of racial segregation in N. C. Memorial Hospital.' He answered that he had merely 'sustained a decision allowing for a degree of segregation.'"

Varsity-Alumni Contest Ends In 6-6 Deadlock

Tar Heel Passing Impressive

By ED DUPREE
DTH Sports Editor

The North Carolina varsity's passing combination of Junior Edge and Bob Lacey was as impressive as ever yesterday, but the Alumni footballers fought Jim Hickey's men to a 6-6 tie in the second annual Varsity-Alumni contest.

Edge hit Lacey seven times for 89 yards as the sparkling duo picked up where they left off in the fall. The longest of the Edge-Lacey aerials went for 34 yards when an Alumni defensive back interfered with Lacey on the Alumni 10-yard line. The play set up the only Varsity score of the game.

But even more impressive than the Edge-Lacey combo was the play of John Hammett who has been more heralded for his blocking and defensive ability than for his pass catching. The 5-10 rising senior from Concord caught seven Edge tosses for 93 yards, four more yards than Lacey's. The pass receptions of Hammett and Lacey combined for 182 of the Varsity's 325 offensive yards.

Hammett was injured on the last play of the contest and for several minutes it seemed that the final second might have been a costly one for the Tar Heel end. He was taken off the field on a stretcher and put into an ambulance, then taken into the field house rather than the hospital. After the game head trainer John Lacey said that Hammett only had the breath knocked out of him. Hammett's was the only injury of the hard-played contest.

Edge also completed a pass to rising sophomore fullback Frank Bowman for 16 yards, giving him 15 completions in 29 attempts for 198 yards. Sandy Kinney completed one of his three passes for nine yards giving the Varsity 207 yards passing.

The ground game, spearheaded by speedy Jim Eason, contributed another 118 yards to the offensive total of 325. Eason carried six times for 35 yards. Five other Tar Heel backs were clustered behind Eason.

The absence of baseball-playing Ken Willard at fullback slowed down the Varsity ground game. Bowman, the starting fullback, picked up 14 yards in seven carries, and Barry Westfall ground out 18 in five carries. Ron Tuthill and Roger Smith, the starting halfbacks, picked up 17 and 16, respectively. Edge ran for 15 yards.

The Alumni ground game amounted to practically nil, and the 127 passing yards fell far short of the Varsity total. Yet, the old-timers still refused to let the younger gridders and the slippery field of mud stop them.

The Varsity's scoring drive started with only 1:25 left in the first half. It covered 73 yards in less than a minute and nine plays.

An 11-yard pass from Edge to Lacey was the starter. Edge again hit his 1962 favorite target on a six-yarder, then connected with Hammett for six more yards and another first down.

Another six-yarder from Edge to Lacey moved the ball into Alumni territory on the 4, then came the long pass to Lacey which spiraled to the right hand corner around the 10. Lacey's defender jumped in front of him, but interfered, giving the Varsity an automatic first down on the 10.

Edge set up the touchdown by hitting Hammett along the sidelines at the five. It took Bowman, who showed promise of becoming another dependable Carolina fullback, only two plays to carry the ball into the end zone. Max Chapman's extra point attempt went wide to the left, giving the Varsity a 6-0 halftime lead.

The Varsity drove to the Alumni 32 early in the second half, but a penalty stopped the drive. Bill Edwards, a rising sophomore, lofted a high punt which was downed on the Alumni 16. The old-timers were pushed back to the 3 on a penalty and an eight-yard loss by Ray Farris. Then Farris got the Alumni out of trouble with a second-down quick quick to the 39. The kick was returned to the 30 and it seemed that the Varsity might get their second score.

Four plays later the Alumni took over on downs on the 21. The teams exchanged punts for the remainder of the quarter and most of the final period. Then the Alumni began their march.

Chapman's 42-yard field goal attempt fell short for the Varsity and the Alumni took over on the 20. Buddy Cozart, a graduating senior fullback carried four yards for the starter. Another senior, quarterback George Boutselis hit halfback Gib Carson with an 11-yard pass for the first down.

Cozart picked up another yard, then Farris hit end Jeff Newton for a 17-yard gain.

Moyer Smith, after dribbling the football in the backfield, found the handle and carried for six yards. Cozart added three and Farris got two more for another first down.

On the next play Wade Smith, the Alumni rushing leader with 27 yards in eight carries, lost five yards—but a roughing penalty against Chris Hanburger cost the Varsity 15 yards and moved the Alumni to the Varsity 26. Cozart carried two more yards from there for the first down.

Wade Smith picked up five yards, then was stopped for no gain. Farris threw a third down pass to John Schroeder at the one for a first down. Two plays later Farris sneaked over for the tying touchdown.

Phil Blazer, whose field goal was the Alumni's margin of victory in 1962, had the chance to win another with his toe, but the kick was wide and the old-timers had to settle for a moral victory.

The Varsity had another scoring opportunity in the final minutes when Edge started hitting his favorite targets. Only 38 seconds were left in the game, with the ball on the Varsity 38. Then Edge found Hammett on the left sideline and connected. Hammett weaved all over the field and picked up 32 yards by the time he was tackled along the right sideline.

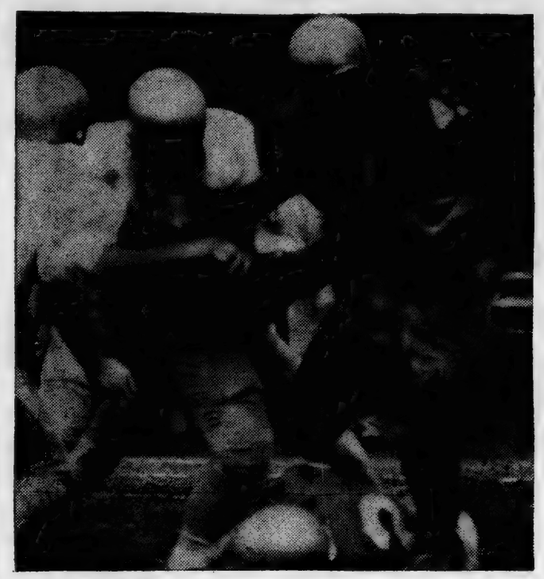
With eight seconds remaining Edge fired another to Lacey at the 19 and he carried to the 14 for a 16-yard pass play. Chapman came in to try his second field goal, from the 25 yard line, but the kick fell short.

Farris threw a long pass with two seconds remaining on the clock, but Roger Smith intercepted at the Varsity 40 and carried 30 yards before he was brought down.

The unyielding Varsity defense which limited the Alumni to 39 net yards rushing was the deciding factor in the game. Wade Smith was the only Alumni back who could move the ball with regularity, and he found the Varsity line immoveable on several occasions. Their ground game stopped almost cold, the old-timers went to the airways where their accuracy fell far short of Edge's.

Boutselis hit six of 18 for 45 yards and Farris connected on seven of 16 for 82 yards—13 completions in 34 attempts for 127 yards.

The linebacking play of Hanburger and Jim Alderman and the end play of Joe Robinson—along with the strong interior line—produced numerous headaches for the Alumni.



Tough on defense for the Alumni were Rip Hawkins of the Minnesota Vikins, Frank Riggs, Joe Craver and Duff Greene.

Yesterday was a typical football Saturday at Carolina. Approximately 500 attended the game and braved the wet weather which added about 400 umbrellas to the attendance.

The game brings an end to spring football practice. UNC opens its 1963 season at home against the University of Virginia on September 21.

CRUNCH—An unidentified Varsity player meets strong opposition yesterday afternoon as he runs into the arms of powerful Rip Hawkins while another alumni moves in to assist. On the ground is Frank Bowman about to feel the impact of Hawkins and his charge.

Hickey Pleased With Team

By DON KING

Coach Jim Hickey said yesterday in an after-game interview that he was quite satisfied with the way the Tar Heel varsity played and with spring practice generally.

"We have been very pleased with practice," the 43-year-old headmaster reiterated several times. "And I think we played much better ball than we did last year."

He wouldn't single out any one gridder who played real well. He insisted that "all the boys looked good."

Hickey wouldn't comment on how he thought the Heels will play next year. "I know we'll have one problem, though. Who will we play, and where, in the backfield? Frank Bowman (a sophomore) and Barry Westfall played fullback today, but next year we'll have Willard (Ken) and Eddie Kesler." Kesler was injured in practice and Willard has been playing baseball.

"At half we'll have Dave Braine, Ronnie Jackson and Jim Eason, and Roger Smith and Ron Tuthill who played today. Braine and Jackson both have been injured." Hickey said.

"Junior Edge will be our quarterback but both Gary Black and Sandy Kinney will be pushing him."

The game ended in a 6-6 tie with both teams missing their point after touchdown try. On the last play of the game end John Hammett had to be carried on a stretcher to the fieldhouse, but he only had the breath knocked out of him.

Hickey singled out Hammett as a very pleasant surprise this spring. In yesterday's game he caught seven passes as did All-America candidate Bob Lacey.

"I was very pleased with the passing game," Hickey said, "and you have to remember that they had some outstanding backfield men." He was obviously referring to Rip Hawkins and Joe Craver.

"You can't run very well against a line as big as the one the Alumni had," Hickey pointed out. Besides 250-pounders Tony Hennessey, Don Stallings, and Paul Biggers, the oldsters had Ronnie Koes, Bob Zaback, Bob Shupin, Frank Riggs, and John Hegarty.

Hickey used Max Chapman, who will be a sophomore next year, for the punting chores, along with Bill Edwards. Both kicked the ball well.

"This alumni game is a good thing," he concluded. "It gives us a chance to see how the boys will play as a team."

Big Four All-Stars Play Rosy's Team

Some of the Big Four's finest basketballers—and one top name in pro football—will take on the Lennie Rosenbluth All-Stars here Monday night at Chapel Hill High gymnasium.

Game time is 8 p.m.

North Carolina's Larry Brown and Yogi Poteet and North Carolina State's Ken Rohloff will appear against the Rosenbluth players. An added attraction will be Roman Gabriel, former N. C. State football All-America, who is now with the Los Angeles Rams.

Rosenbluth, who still hits the bucket with regularity, has on his team such glittering names of past basketball stars as Doug Moe, Jim Hudock, Joe Quigg, Tony Radovich, Al Long and Donny Lotz.

The game is a benefit for the prep monogram club and its projects.

Students Want Games Played During School

The following opinion survey was taken by the communications committee from a sample of 215 students, living mainly in the Upper Quad. It concerns pre-exam reading periods, Daily Tar Heel news coverage and the scheduling of sporting events during vacations.

Student opinion concerning a pre-exam reading period, DTH news coverage and scheduling of sporting events were the objects of a recent Communications Committee poll.

The idea of a reading period before exams has been under consideration for some time, and 95.1% of the students polled favored it. The type of reading period referred to in the poll was one similar to the one at Duke, lasting three or four days.

Students were evenly split on the question of DTH campus news coverage. It was considered excellent by 4.9%, good by 36.3%, fair by 38.7% and poor by 20.1%. National news coverage was called "sufficient" by 65.7%. The poll also revealed that only 61.6% of the students buy a newspaper other than the DTH.

Student opinion ran high against the scheduling of athletic events during vacations. Of the students polled, 86.2% expressed the opinion that no games should be scheduled during any vacation period.

NCC Student Held For Library Theft

Garrett Weaver, 19, of Chapel Hill has been charged with larceny, police said, and released under $100 bond.

Arthur Beaumont, chief of the campus police, said yesterday that Weaver was detected by a UNC student, Robert Moseley, when he attempted to steal a co-ed's coat from the back of a chair in the stacks of the library. Weaver admitted to Moseley that he was trying to steal the coat and told him that he was a student at NCC in Durham. Moseley then called the Chapel Hill Police, according to Beaumont.

Moseley gave a description of Weaver to Beaumont, and a short while later Weaver was apprehended at the Chapel Hill Bus Station by two policemen on a routine check of the station.

When he was questioned, Weaver admitted trying to steal the coat. He also admitted the theft of three books from the UNC Library which were found in his briefcase. The books had not been properly checked out, according to Beaumont.

22 More Books

Weaver admitted under further questioning that he had "four or five more" library books in his room at NCC. A search of his room in Childley Hall uncovered about 22 more books. About a half dozen of these were marred with paint and had the fly-leaves torn out so that the ownership of these books could not be determined.

Most of the books were from the UNC Library; a few were from the Chapel Hill Public Library.

Weaver said that he had removed the books from the University Library in his briefcase. He also said that he had never been stopped by library personnel to have his briefcase examined. A special permit is ordinarily required for entrance to the stackes.

Weaver had apparently taken books for use in his courses at NCC. According to Beaumont they were largely books dealing in the social sciences. Weaver's trial will come before the Recorder's Court on April 16.

Book Losses Normal

UNC Librarian Jerrold Orne yesterday said that he did not feel there were an unusual number of book losses this year as a newspaper story implied Monday. "There have been considerable losses in the Undergraduate Library before, but a new check-out system has helped to change that," he said.

"The only way to tell when a book is missing," he said, "is when it is not on the shelf and it is not charged out to someone. There can only be a general impression of the losses judging from the number of books you can't find."

Mr. Orne said that no library of the size of the UNC Library could not have an inventory. He estimated the cost of such an inventory at around $40,000. "It is my impression that we are doing better than most libraries in the country in the number of losses."

Orne said that the library takes steps to present the loss of books, but that if "people are determined to steal, there is hardly anything you can do to stop them."

Suicide Fifty Has Option Of Craige Rooms

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

Freshman honor students will be placed in Craige dormitory next year on a strictly optional basis, according to Dean of Men William Long and Freshman Honors Program advisor, Raymond H. Dawson.

Dawson said there are two main reasons for placing these students in Craige. "Since these students have a very heavy academic load, and since many rooms will be tripled next year, we wanted to give them some greater assurance that they will be able to study and that's why we made the offer to them."

Dawson said that in Craige the students would be assured of a two-man room, and this in turn would probably allow them to study in their rooms instead of having to find a place.

He said that some of the boys might like to room with other students who are in the Honor's Program and placing them in Craige would make this possible.

Long said that this move was "merely a service offered to the honor students. They don't have to live there."

Dawson said, "It's their choice . . . I'll write them a letter explaining what our plans are and if they want to live in Craige they are welcome to; but they can live anywhere else they want to."

The "Suicide 50" students were placed in Manly and Mangum dormitories this year and Dawson said that "approximately one-third of the honor students refused the option on these dorms and decided to live elsewhere.

"The whole program is optional," he said again.

Everett Named Best Dorm At IDC Awards Banquet

By OWEN BISHOP

Not only did it claim a trophy and a $100 cash award as "Best Dorm On Campus", but it also came away with a trophy as "Most Improved Dorm." Everett was also recognized for having the best intramural participation and the best dorm newspaper.

Sam Shapiro, president of the Everett "Rogah House", was named "Outstanding Dorm President" and Jim Fullwood, also of Everett, was named "Outstanding IDC Representative." Both won trophies.

Mangum and Joyner dormitories were named second and third, respectively, in the dorm contest and each received a trophy and a $50 cash award.

Point System

The Best Dorm Awards are presented annually to the top three dorms in a campus-wide dorm contest in which each dorm receives points for its activities. The winners are determined wholly on a point basis. Winners of the awards for best dorm president and best IDC representative are chasen by the IDC Executive Committee.

Everett this year accumulated a total of 1,214 points for its various activities, establishing a record high for the contest. It rose over its standing last year by 707 points, thus easily winning the "Most Improved" trophy.

Mangum finished in second place with a point total of 847 and Joyner finished in third place with 822. According to the IDC Contest Committee, Ruffin, fourth place dorm, deserves honorable mention. It was edged out of the winner's circle by only two points.

IDC REVIEW

IDC President Ralph Mosley presided at the banquet, which was held at the Faculty Club and was attended by about 100 old and new members of the IDC, student government guests and administrative officials.

Mosley gave a brief review of the IDC's activities over the past year, citing passage of the dorm referendum to increase social fees and the Council's action to allow fraternity membership in the IDC as important developments.

After Mosley's talk, John Gould, retiring court chairman, officially installed new IDC officers. The new

Cooperation Said Key To Everett Win

By BILL GOODWIN

What makes a dorm the most outstanding on campus?

"It all boils down to cooperation," says Outstanding Dorm President Sam Shapiro of Everett.

He should know. Sunday night Everett was awarded trophies for the Most Outstanding Dorm on Campus, Most Improved Dorm, Best Dorm Newspaper, and Highest Participation in Intramurals.

One of its IDC representatives, Jim Fulwood, was named most outstanding in that respect.

"The only thing we didn't win was second and third places," Shapiro said Monday. "We're the first dorm to score over 1,000 points in the contest."

Shapiro has lived in Everett for four years. The Washington, D. C., senior said the dorm was "disorganized and disorderly" when he moved in as a freshman.

Improved Dorm

As intramural manager he helped lead it to the Most Improved Dorm title last year, and as president paced it to the top this year.

"Intramurals were a major area in getting points," he said. "We were third overall in intramurals, and this gave us about half of our points."

Everett had a team in every sport, and sometimes as many as four. Its basketball team reached the quarterfinals before losing to

Pickets Walk As Leaders Dedicate

By MICKEY BLACKWELL

While N. C. Gov. Terry Sanford, Frank Porter Graham, and President William C. Friday were participating in Sunday's dedication of the new $2 million School of Public Health building, 45 persons picketed nearby protesting "segregated bedding facilities" at Memorial Hospital.

The picketers included members of the UNC and Chapel Hill chapter of the NAACP and students, teachers and townsfolk "sympathetic to our cause," according to David Dansby, president of the UNC chapter of the NAACP.

Dansby said the picketers were "mindful" of the presence of dignitaries including, Sanford, Graham, Friday, Chancellor William B. Aycock, N. C. Congressman Horace Kornegay, and U. S. Deputy Surgeon General David E. Price.

Dansby said he hoped to impress upon these people "our protest to segregation in the hospital."

Earlier in the afternoon, Dean of Student Affairs Charles Henderson appealed to the group to call off the demonstration and "maintain the composure and patience that you've maintained in the past." Henderson said that he failed to see the basis for this immediate action "when I am really confident that the situation will be remedied quickly."

Henderson said that a very quick decision "could prolong this . . . I'll make you whatever promises I can, but as you know my authority here is limited."

Dansby and several others at a Gerrard Hall meeting asked Henderson if he could make a positive recommendation to the trustees that all wards in the hospital be completely desegregated.

Henderson said he couldn't make such a recommendation. The group then decided to continue its plans for the demonstration.

The group left Gerrard at 2:05 p.m. and proceeded to the hospital.

Dansby said the demonstration climaxed nearly two years of talks with University officials including Chancellor Aycock, Medical School Dean W. R. Berryhill and President Friday.

Aycock said he would leave the matter up to Berryhill and Friday said that the University has complied in good faith with the court's decision on segregation and this good faith applies to Memorial Hospital.

Friday added, "I sustain the practices which permit limited segregation based on medical judgment in some particular wards in Memorial Hospital."

Last month Dean Berryhill rejected the NAACP's request for assignment of rooms on a strictly non-discriminatory basis.

Friday said that the Trustees' executive committee will discuss the NAACP's appeal when it meets May 13.

Former University President Frank Porter Graham said that as a guest of the University, "It wouldn't be right for me to come down here and tell them what to do . . . I'm an ex-president and I stay out of things here."

When pressed further, Graham said that "institutions and facilities that are supported by taxes of all people should be opened equally for all people.

"That's what I've said since 1954 in speeches in Chapel Hill, Raleigh and all across North Carolina and the South," Graham added.

Leaders Meet To Seek New Region Center

A closed-door meeting was held here Sunday between Gov. Sanford and area leaders to "discuss the value to this area of the proposed Environmental Health Center of the United States Public Health Service."

Present at the meeting were Sanford, general administration officials and medical and public health representatives from both Carolina and Duke; Congressman Horace Kornegay and Durham Mayor Emanuel J. Evans.

According to Sanford the meeting was held to decide and plan "what efforts we should take to secure the Center."

Sanford said the group discussed "how we hope to dramatize the case for the Health Center" to be located in the Research Triangle.

Current plans call for the Center to be located in Washington, but Sanford and U. S. Senator B. Everett Jordan have presented several reasons for locating it in this area.

The reasons include "Saving of $1,300,000 for the government & the taxpayer; construction costs in the Research Triangle are 80 per cent of costs in Washington; in the event of enemy attack, the risk of damage to the Center is much less if it is located in the Research Triangle rather than in the Washington area." There are other reasons which Sanford has outlined to the Subcommittee on Health, Education and Welfare of the House Committee on Appropriations.

When asked to comment on the meeting, Sanford replied, "We may have planned a little strategy but we can't announce it right now."

Ten Legislative Seats Up Today

Ten seats in Student Legislature will be at stake today as Dorm Men's III (four seats) and Town Men's IV (six seats) districts vote in a re-election. The polls will be open from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m.

Dorm Men's III consists of Alexander, Joyner, Winston and Connor dormitories. Polling places will be located in each dorm except Connor. Residents of Connor will vote in Winston.

Town Men's IV is made up of all students living outside the corporate limits of Chapel Hill and Carrboro. This district will vote in Gerrard Hall.

Re-election in these districts was called by the Constitutional Council because names printed on the ballots in both districts were misspelled, thus giving an unfair advantage to some candidates.

Candidates for SL in the dormitory district include Gordon Appell (SP), Warren Bell, Juan F. Carvajal (SP), Doug Freeman (SP), Rick Kramer (UP), Charlie Lefler (SP), Sandy O'Quinn (UP) and Bill Baynard (UP).

Golden Fleece Taps Thirteen

C.

The ideals of the Order are the pursuit of excellence, the courage to seek the truth and dedication and service to the University.

The active argonauts for 1962-63 include; Bill Whichard, Hans Frankfort, Al Cronenberg, Walter Dellinger, Bill Imes, James Scott, Warner Bass, Joe Craver, Richard Vinroot and Roger Foushee.

Bud Broome, president of the UNC Young Republican club, was elected Director of Region IV of the College Young Republicans at a convention held this past weekend in Charlotte. Region IV includes the five states of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, and Florida.

In accepting the office, the new director thanked the delegates for the confidence they had expressed in him and called for close cooperation and hard work in order to continue the development of college Young Republican Clubs throughout the Region.

The convention also selected Sally Champion of Duke as co-director, Ben McCurdy of Furman University, treasurer, and George Stumpf of Clemson as Secretary.

In other business the University of North Carolina Young Republican Club was selected as the best club in Region IV.

Grind Absent For Those In Arts Program

Students interested in Dramatic Arts and Fine Arts may not have to go through the General College grind before they get into their major fields next year.

J. Carlyle Sitterson, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said yesterday that two programs passed at the Faculty Council meeting Friday, will enable art students to take some of their major courses in their freshman year.

The two programs, one in Dramatic Arts, the other in Fine Arts, still must go before the Board of Trustees and the Board of Higher Education since they will offer degrees not previously available.

Dean Sitterson said the program's chances of passing are "very good," and that he is "most optimistic."

At present a student majoring in either of these fields is only allowed about one-fourth of his courses in his major field. The new programs would allow about twice that number.

Dean Sitterson said that the increase in courses available (roughly from 10 to 20) will be of advantage to the art majors since their fields cannot be neglected for any period of time.

Under the new program, students will be able to keep in constant practice.

SPRING VACATION is still two and ahalf days away, but some students, after a long winter's work, just can't wait to get away, like this boy already packing in anticipation of Thursday noon. There doesn't seem to be space for everything, but then those books can always be left out. —Photo by Jim Wallace

Concert Band Tonight Plays Gershwin Hits

George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," with Robert Steelman as pianist, will be the featured selection in a concert by the UNC Concert Band tonight at eight o'clock in Hill Hall.

Other program highlights will be Charpentier's "Ballot du Plaisir," as transcribed by Herbert W. Fred, conductor of the band; the "Psalm for Band" by the modern American composer Vincent Persichetti, with Eddie Bass conducting; and the "Finale" from Shostakovich's 5th Symphony with Errol Gay conducting. Assistant conductors Bass and Gay are both graduate students in the UNC Music Department.

Steelman, the piano soloist, received his A.B. with Honors in Music from UNC in 1960. He then attended Tulane University for one year as a Southern Fellow, returning to Chapel Hill in 1961 for further graduate study in musicology.

The Concert Band is organized immediately after the close of the marching season each year. Dr. Fred, the conductor, said that the personnel of the Concert Band "are selected so as to provide a well-balanced instrumentation capable of the study and performance of the best in concert literature."

The concert is being sponsored free by the Tuesday Evening Series. The next program of this series will be by the University Symphony Orchestra, Earl Slocum, conductor, on May 7.

Talks Continuing On Coed Visiting Male Apartments

Negotiations are continuing on the Apartment Rule controversy, according to a statement made by Mike Lawler yesterday.

Lawler said that he wished to clarify the situation because many students "have been under the impression that Student Government completely acquiesced to the administrative action which followed the WRC's rule change."

Lawler stated, however, that student representatives have been generally concerned by the negative atmosphere of discussions on this rule change and other related problems.

Both President Lawler and Vice-President Spearman indicated that a more positive direction of discussion still seemed possible.

Increasing Population:
An Unpleasant Solution

Saturday's Tar Heel carried a story on page three that ran with the headline: "Baby Boom Soon To Affect Campuses Throughout State." The story related statistics on the increasing population to the proposed problems of the accommodation of college-age students in the physical plants of North Carolina's institutions of higher learning.

With what might be called the "normal" response, we found ourselves concerned as to how so many upcoming students would be able to pursue a college degree within the limitations of present and proposed facilities. Indeed, the number of students soon to be seeking admission to this state's colleges is far beyond the number that could readily be accommodated, even if all goes well with the proposals of the Governor's Commission on Education Beyond the High School. For this same group predicts that by 1970 over 110,000 students will be knocking on the doors of colleges throughout the state.

* * *

However, lest we despair for nought, the solution to the crowded conditions was quite probably hinted at in the headline of a story that ran just last Friday, proclaiming: "Tuition Up 11% In Schools Throughout United States."

This story told of an 11% increase over last year in tuition and fees for residents at state universities and land-grant institutions. The report, compiled by the U. S. Office of Education, was the result of a study of but 90 institutions across the nation, but its applicability to the situation here in North Carolina goes without padding.

The continued rise in tuitions and fees at various state institutions could very well be the unpleasant answer to most of the hypothesized crowded conditions of years to come. There are not enough scholarships to handle the problems of the qualified but non-moneyed student. And with the rising costs of room rents, fees, and board charges, an overwhelming amount of those 110,000 students will fall, no doubt, within the range of the "non-moneyed." (CW)

Future Of The UP

The University Party was beaten in this spring's elections — UP leaders will admit this. The Student Party captured the Presidency, secretary, treasurer, half the NSA posts and half of the Legislature.

But for the UP the importance of the election is more what it doesn't mean than what it does.

It doesn't mean a rejection of the ideals of an all-campus political party — as primarily set forth by Chairman Mike Chanin (who had little to do with the unsuccessful presidential campaign.)

It doesn't mean the UP should return to the womb of Big Fraternity Court, as its best hope of contributing power in student government.

It doesn't mean that the vote was a rejection of any individual UP leader — Chanin, Inman Allen, Don Curtis or anyone else.

It does mean the University Party will have to regroup its forces for next year, within its present ideological mold and with its current leadership. Next year the party will have a presidential candidate — Vice-president-elect Bob Spearman — who will fully symbolize the new orientation and ideals of the party. There is no one in sight in either party who shows the potential of surpassing him.

The outlook for the party is bright — assuming it continues on its present course, broadening its base of political support for an expansive and increasingly-active student government. (JC)

Thanks

With no prefatory remarks, with no clumsy apology, we would but say "thanks." Thank you for the opportunity to serve, thank you for the ear to bend.

When any young kid assumes the position of campus critic, he can but immediately realize his own shortcomings; there is no "campus god." To dissent a bit, to criticize a lot, the student editor sits at the typewriter. He may work up an anger and expound at length, but he may not, sure he dares not, pretend to a crown unearned.

No man knows better than the student editor that he is no god. And yet, no man knows better how sorely one is needed. There are student government committees that malfunction, student body presidents who fail to function, and administrative officials who overfunction — these imperfections, these student problems, they merit labels and they demand comment. Ours was that task.

Thank you for the opportunity. (CW)

Miss Carmichael

To Miss Katherine Carmichael, known affectionately to the campus as the "Dean of Women," we would direct the following quotation of Arnold J. Toynbee:

"The world's greatest need . . . is mutual confidence. No human being ever knows all the secrets of another's heart. Yet there is enough confidence between mother and child, husband and wife, buyer and seller, to make social life a practical possibility. Confidence may be risky, but it is nothing like so risky as mistrust."

Southern College Student & Integration

By JIM CLOTFELTER

Initial desegregation within the South is history. The first shallow step has been taken into the currents of twentieth century peaceful race relations.

The integration "movement" is continuing history. It has accelerated greatly in the past nine years and will continue. Many of the leaders in this movement — the figures who give it much of its drama — are college students. Conspicuous among these are the Southern white students — why are they here?

The reasons are not wholly humanitarian — they are motivated also by self-interest, because the student feels the terrible presence of shame following him wherever he goes, and wants to be rid of the shame.

He sees the racial problem as a national one, for whose solution all of America must work. As a Southerner, the problem is most acute in his region; he must work hardest.

* * *

THIS PROBLEM has brought a tense feeling within the student of upheavel from old values and principles — an upheavel characteristic of the last twenty years of continual political crisis and chronic moral confusion.

Every young Southerner can vouch for virtually the same inherited feelings toward the black man — the wonder and uneasiness which every city's "Niggertown" caused. The Southerner can remember when, as a child, he asked his father why those colored people lived in "that" section of town, why they worked as maids and gardeners, why they went to different schools, why they ate in different restaurants. . . . And father answered coldly — with the same vague sense of horror as if you had asked about sex — that was just how things were and always had been and always would be. And you soon learned not to ask those questions.

That uneasiness was felt even then, as a child. This is the feeling which torments every Southerner as he attempts to reconcile the two cultures and two traditions which he inherits, as an American and a Southerner: the egalitarian ideals of Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln, and the chauvinistic spirit with which the Southland remembers the Confederacy.

Segregation was, through the early years of the student's life, a topic which broached no discussion, no debate or controversy, no opposition to the majority opinion. Everybody knew, and everybody kept quiet.

* * *

THERE IS a much diferent situation today. Students can and do talk about segregation and integration. Significantly, their talk now can lead to action. This American, Southern generation is feeling its place in history, its obligatory role in a moral vindication of American principles aganst the physical background of their South. The debate on integration has been going on for a long time, but the pace is quickening, and students are questioning, doubting, searching for a solution. And they feel this is the age and the year and the day.

The Southern college student can understand the prejudices which plague his people, but more clearly, he senses the shame when that prejudice leads to defiance of the Federal government, and violence. As something of an educated elite in the most educationally-backward region of the nation, the Southern student sees his obligation to help save the South from its misguided friends who, in trying to preserve the "Southern way of life," only cling to those customs old and ugly.

From earliest years in elementary school all Americans are taught that the Declaration of Independence, with it sringing statement that "all men are created equal", was the world's greatest document of freedom and liberty. Southern children are taught this too. This is another cause of the everpresent shame —claiming to be what you are not, preaching to the world the glories of democracy, and at the same time, subjecting a large minority of your region, your town, to second-class citizenship.

* * *

AS THE SOUTHERN student sees them, the issues of racial integration have to do with time and with conscience.

Time is one of the most divisive factors in the whole desegregation muddle. It hangs threateningly over all discussions. The student always is asked by older Southerners, "Your father was a segregationist, why aren't you?" . . . "We have to move slowly in this matter . . . give the people time to adapt" . . . "Don't be impatient, don't be in such a hurry" . . .

You know why they want to adapt, you know how painful this is to many white Southerners, but still, you feel very frustrated . . . You ask, how long, how long. God, man, it's been one hundred years. You were born with eighty years against you, years which your ancestors allowed to build up, with no solution to the problem.

* * *

Any age is old enough to begin; so, let us begin, and let us work quickly.

I no longer want that sword hanging over my head. It has been there since I was born and I am tired of the burden.

I want to be rid of this problem— it cannot be dragged out the rest of my life. I want to end it now, as soon as possible, so that it is no longer even a "question" or a "problem."

For the Southern student there is a peculiar obligation in all this — peculiar because the shame is so close, not next door but in his own home. The problem cannot be seen as next door, or tomorrow, but as in my home ,today.

The desire to go faster, be done with the whole thing sooner, is all the greater because you realize you are the sufferer as much as the Negro. The young white man in search of a broad education from all sources, is shut in by the racial barriers as surely as the Negro is shut out.

* * *

THE STUDENT doesn't want to be shadowed by this shame the rest of his life. Always before him is the dream of America which we have constructed for ourselves, the dream made of liberty and justice and equality. This dream is always stretching out before us, never quite in our grasp.

For the Southerner who loves his nation and his South, the obligation is clear — to vindicate his dream of America, to cleanse the nation of the shame which his neighbors and ancestors have allowed to exist for so long.

The problem is here and now and it was here yesterday and should be gone by tomorrow. It is a question of conscience for the Southern student, and a question of time, and the time is now and no man's conscience will wait.

Letters To The Editors

On Erickson And Athletics

Eds. Shouldn't Hit University

To the Editors;

For the past ten years or so I have read several accounts in the Daily Tar Heel where the Editor has questioned the integrity, decisions, and work of University personnel. During the years of 1941-45 while I was at the University it was unheard of for the Editor to attack a faculty member through the school newspaper.

I doubt very much that newspaper work has progressed to such a degree that the early forties could be called back in the "dark ages."

Chuck Erickson has given much to the University. Through his work with the University he has become a prominent figure in the nation in the administration of athletics. Your attack upon our Director of Athletics "made news," but you certainly did not fulfill your obligation to the students of Carolina and that is to "give news."

Mr. Erickson will continue in his office with our full support long after you have departed from the campus of our beloved University.

UNC Should Set Standards

To the Editors,

In answer to Louis Legum's Article of April 4, 1963:

There are several points Mr. Legum stresses in his article to which I would like to speak.

First he assumes that because the average American sports fan prefers football and basketball, the athletic department at Carolina should also stress these sports. But the average citizen of America also prefers second rate literature, for instance. Should Carolina then teach second rate subject matter of no real value? It seems to me that it is the university's role to set the standards and values of our society not merely reflect them.

Secondly, Mr. Legum seems to indicate that the controversy is primarily over football and basketball, as such, as being most popular. It is not these sports that I am against but I am against certain sports being "big time"; indeed against any sport under the aegis of the university being "big time."

Mr. Legum grants that the university is caught in a vicious circle in that if we de-emphasize football, the other sports will suffer from lack of funds. First of all some scoools maintain complete athletic programs without giving athletic scholarships or having to stress one or more sports as "money-getters." Secondly and more important is the fact that the University walls would not crumble if interscholastic athletics were done away with completely.

As Mr. Legum states, it is WE who have made athletics big time but if this is true, WE can also remove them from their position of power in the universities of this country.

Debate Between YDC And PL?

To the Editors,

The Di-Phi would like to challenge the Young Democrats Club and the Progressivbe Labor Club to an informal debate. This is to be one in a series of debates between campus organizations.

The time, place, and topic of the debate will be worked out to the mutual satisfaction of the three parties involved. These debates are to be open to the public.

We would like to receive acceptance or rejection of this challenge as soon as possible. Contact the President, Nat Dean, at the Sigma Nu House or mail a reply to the Di-Phi Society, New West Hall.

Chapel Hill: Friendly Village

To the Editors,

I have always liked being hostess. I enjoyed immensely chaperoning the USO and other dances during World War II, and I especially like being friendly in Chapel Hill. I talk to people on the campus, on the street, or at the Inn, and my jestures have been accepted in the spirit in which they were proffered, until yesterday.

I had seen a man, who was evidently a newcomer, pass the house for several days. I started out for the campus and met him about two blocks from the house, returning from town.

I said, "you seem to be a stranger, Who are you?"

He answered, "I am a man." That seemed pretty evident, so I tried another tactic.

"I am Mrs. Connor," I said. He said nothing. So I ventured out a little further, in this, for me, a new experience.

I said, "Whats your name?" He had on sun-glasses, so I couldn't tell what was going thru his mind, but without smiling, he answered, "Does it matter?" and turned and walked away.

I thought as I walked on — "He must think I was trying to pick-him-up. He must be from New York or Chicago and doesn't realize he is in a village where people in a neighborhood try to be friendly.

Some people say the University is getting too big. They would like to see the student body held to what it is now. The bigger it gets the more impersonal it becomes, they say. It doesn't have to be that way. Anybody who wants to be friendly will find friendly people here. And unfriendly people wouldn't make friends anywhere.I expect to keep on speaking to people and if someone doesn't want to speak, that will be OK with me.

eventual basketball dorm champ Teague.

Shapiro said Everett was more interested in campus affairs. "We sent a referendum to the student legislature during the Cuban Crisis, and we entered the Campus Chest, homecoming displays, the Valkyrie sing, and Beat Dook parade."

"We won a tape recorder in the Marlboro contest, had several dorm parties, sponsored a page in the Yack, and we're planning a beach weekend later this month."

Politics

Everett residents were also active in campus politics. Jackie Harrell was elected freshman class president, and Donald Carson and Lanny Shuff are in student legislature.

"We had one orderly demonstration, with police permission," Shapiro said. "It was a torchlight parade around the lower and upper quads. Other dorms threw water from their windows trying to break it up, but it didn't work.

"This is the first semester in four years that the dorm has made its grades," he said with a grin. "We had a 2.16, I think.

"The word ROGAH was important, too. It gave us a spirit all our own — a spirit of 'Rogah House.'

"Leadership and cooperation. I've said it before, and I'll say it again. That's what did it."

Carolina's Undefeated Netters Leave For Important Matches

The North Carolina tennis team will leave today for its most important matches of the season in hopefully sunny Florida.

The first of the big three matches will be Thursday against Rollins at Winter Park. Friday the Tar Heels meet the Big Ten champions, Michigan, at Coral Gables.

Saturday's match against Miami at Coral Gables has special meaning to the UNC team. Last year Miami's strong team came to Chapel Hill and handed Carolina its only loss of the season, 6-3.

The Tar Heels are 6-0 on the year. Their victories have been by lopsided scores on each occasion. Skakle's men opened with 9-0 and 8-1 victories over Dartmouth, defeated Michigan State, 9-0, then topped Williams twice by 9-0. Last Friday Harvard became the only team to score more than one point against them in a 7-2 loss.

Carrying the Tar Heel hopes of a three-match sweep will be George Sokol at number one, Keith Stoneman, Charlie Shaffer, Bitsy Harrison, O. H. Parrish and Pete Myers. Ted Hoehn, side-lined on March 25 with appendicitis, may be back in the lineup.

Hoehn practiced last weekend, but was not fully recovered from the operation. Carolina's chances against tough Miami will be weakened if Hoehn, the number two man on the team, is not back in the lineup.

Notre Dame Basketballers Name Tar Heels Best Foe

Notre Dame's basketball squad named North Carolina's Tar Heels as the best team played by the Irish during the 1962-63 basketball season.

Coach Dean Smith's team was named best on nine of 13 ballots. Also on the Fighting Irish schedule were New York University, Bowling Green, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Butler and DePaul. Notre Dame, NYU, Bowling Green and Illinois participated in the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament won by Loyola of Chicago.

The Irish won 17 and lost nine. Their only loss at home was to UNC in overtime, 76-68.

Barry Kramer of NYU was unanimous choice for the all-opponent team. Kramer led a six-man team that included Billy Cuningham, the UNC sophomore that tied the score in regulation time with a 40-foot-plus jump shot in the final second.

Majors Open Today

(UPI) — Major league baseball opens in nine cities Tuesday with a host of players making their first formal appearance in a new uniform and before new home fans.

Six of last season's 20-game-winning pitchers — and two of baseball's 20-game losers—are listed to start as the 1963 campaign gets into full swing following Monday's openers at Washington and Cincinnati.

For many clubs, it really will be difficult to tell the players without a scorecard. More than 70 players changed uniforms in the biggest off-season trading binge in many years. Twenty-three of these were considered "major" deals.

Here is the Tuesday schedule:

National League—San Francisco at Houston; Los Angeles at Chicago; Milwaukee at Pittsburgh; St. Louis at New York, and Cincinnati at Philadelphia (night).

Diamondmen Play Wake Today

The North Carolina baseball team will be seeking its first Atlantic Coast Conference victory against the defending league champions this afternoon at Winston-Salem against Wake Forest.

The Demon Deacons had a 7-1 non-conference record going into yesterday's re-scheduled game with Duke, 1-0, in the conference after last week's victory over UNC. The Deacons have not played any ACC opponents.

Both the North Carolina-N. C. State and Duke-Wake Forest games were rained out Saturday. The UNC-State contest has not been re-scheduled.

Coach Jack Stallings will probably start a lineup led by last season's All-ACC center fielder Bill Scripture. Going into last Thursday's game with Virginia Tech Scripture had an even .500 batting average on 13 hits in 26 at bats. Included in the 13 hits were four home runs and five doubles. He had batted in 13 runs.

The pitcher will probably be Bobby Biddix or Pat McDowell.

Coach Walt Rabb's Tar Heels will try to get back on their hitting feet after being held to four hits in the 9-1 loss to Duke.

Probable starters are Frank Gallagher at first, Dick Prindle at second, Jim Speight at short, Dick Fleming or Bill Taylor at third, and Bernie Isgett, catching.

In the outfield will be Ken Willard in left, Gary Black in center and either Heyward Hull or Buddy Tilden in right.

Bill Haywood, the losing pitcher against Duke, could be on the mound again today. If not, Coach Rabb will probably go with either Bobby Cox or Spence Willard, each 1-0 for the season.

Thinmen Tie For 1st At SC Take On Wake Here Today

By DON KING

North Carolina's track team tied with Maryland Saturday at South Carolina in the South Carolina Relays. Both UNC and the Terps had four first places.

The Tar Heels' firsts came in the pole vault, the 2-mile, the 330 hurdles, and the sprint medley. Heath Whittle of UNC copped the vault crown with a height of 14 feet. It was Art Maillet with a time of 9:49.6 who won in the 2-mile. Jim Brown was the hurdles champ with a time of 37.9 and the sprint team of Bob Hart, John McNinch, Jim Brown, and Jerry Stuver was the medalist in 3:31.

Coach Dale Ranson pointed out that the times were slow because of the rain and other poor conditions. "All the times were excellent considering the weather that we had Saturday," he said.

Ranson expressed hope that today the weather would be nice for the meet with Wake Forest.

"I expect Carolina to be prepared for its best performance against Wake. We have an edge team-wise on the Deacons," he asserted, "but the meet should be quite interesting because of the possibility of new school records in the pole vault and mile relay."

He also asaid that styrofoam would be used in the pole vault pit.

Last Saturday's meet was similar to the one that the cindermen participated in at Florida recently. Points were awarded to individuals, but not to teams.

The freshmen relay teams took two seconds, one in the mile relay, the other in the sprint medley. The same boys ran both races: Bill Allen, Del White, Richard Ambrose, and Bob Hicks.

said he was "disturbed" by the action. "We think it's wrong for sick people to be subjected to something like this. I am disturbed at their actions."

Crawford said the hospital was here "to treat patients regardless of race, creed, or color," but again referring to the picketers, he said, "We're moving ahead along with everyone else on this problem . . . I think they're just not looking at the full facts. Apparently there must be some lack of communication."

Tennis Frosh Meet Blue Imps

UNC's undefeated freshman tennis team opens its "Big Four" season on the varsity tennis courts at 2 p.m. this afternoon against Duke's frosh netters.

Coach Al Hunt's team, led by number one man Don Long, has rolled up four straight victories against Needham Broughton High School of Raleigh, Goldsboro High School, Asheboro Men's Club and Chowan Junior Collee.

The Tar Babies play host to N. C. State's freshman team tomorrow afternoon.

Michigan Plays Duke Rugby Club

The Duke-Durham Rugby Club will play the University of Michigan at 4 p.m. today in Duke Stadium. The contest was originally scheduled for Wednesday, then moved up a day.

Members of the Duke-Durham Club, not only a sports club but also a social club, invite interested UNC students to attend the game. Club members hope to form a similar one at UNC.

PIG CAUSES RECOUNT

Student Party Wins Legislative Majority

By JOEL BULKLEY

The Student Party returned a one-seat majority in Student Legislature as a result of yesterday's re-election in two districts. The Student Party now holds 25 seats, the University Party 24, with one seat being held by an independent.

The Constitutional Council ruled late Tuesday that a run-off election may be necessitated to determne the winner for the position of secretary of the student body.

The Elections Board will meet this afternoon to count the votes cast the ten-week old pig which received write-in votes for secretary. The Constitutional Council said that if Griselda received one more vote than the difference of votes cast for Bonnie Hoyle (SP) and Sara Broadhurst (UP) 327 votes then a run-off would be necessary. The run-off would be held on Tuesday, April 23, according to Elections Board Chairman Polly Hastings. In unofficial returns Miss Hoyle netted 1,849 votes while Miss Broadhurst collected 1,522.

SP Picks Up 7 Seats

In yesterday's re-elections for SL, the SP picked up seven seats, while the UP added three. Prior to the balloting, SP had 18, and the UP 21 representatives.

Elected from Town Men's IV were Bill Davis (UP) with 28 votes; Rufus Edmisten (SP), with 31 votes; Bo Edwards (UP), with 31 votes; John Gettinger (SP), with 30 votes and Allie Tyler (UP), with 29.

Charlie Lefler (SP), Juan Carvajal (SP), Doug Freeman (UP) and Rick Kramer (UP) were named as representatives from the Dorm Men's III district.

Lefler polled 190 votes; Carvajal 177; Freeman 176 and Kramer 159. Other candidates were Gordon Appell with 153; Bill Baynard (UP) with 139; Warren Bell (UP), with 33; and Sandy O'Quinn (UP) with 81.

Legislative Representatives

The following have been elected as representatives to Student Legislature: Dorm Men's I—Clark Brewer (SP); Jeff Davis (SP); Bill Pitts (UP); and Richard Westin (Ind.). Dorm Men's II—Phil Baddour (SP); Donald Carson (UP) and Lanny Shuff (SP). Dorm Men's IV—Arthur Hays (SP) and Hugo Spechar (SP). Dorm Men's V—Neal Jackson (SP) and Mal King (UP). Chi O's Cite State Woman For Service

Mrs. O. Max Gardner, "humanitarian, civic leader, politician, and educator" from Shelby, has been named recipient of the 1963 Chi Omega North Carolina Distinguished Service Award for Women.

Mrs. Gardner received the award last night at the sorority's annual Eleusinian Banquet.

Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House spoke at the banquet, giving a brief history of the Distinguished Service Award, given for the 14th time this year. He presented the citation to Mrs. Gardner in recognition of her years of leadership in the fields of culture, humanities and general education.

Mrs. Gardner was cited as "deserving honors in many charitable and worthwhile organizations for her generous donation of time and spirit. She is a political figure with a life long interest in politics and outstanding contributions in our State Democratic Committees and National Conventions. She is a Dedicated Educator, who has served in positions of leadership in such fields as culture, humanities, and general education."

Miss Colleen Elizabeth Cox of Orlando Florida won the Sociology Award, which goes to the outstanding senior woman studying in the UNC Department of Sociology & Anthropology. Dr. Charles Bowerman, chairman of the Department of Sociology & Anthropology presented the award.

Named as outstanding "active" of Chi Omega was Miss Beverly Ann Haynes of Washington, D. C., who was recently elected chapter president. Miss Peggy Anne Harriss of Wilmington, N. C., was named as the chapter's outstanding "pledge".

Scholarship awards were also presented to Miss Diane Blanton, a senior from Marion, N. C., and to Miss Emily Klyce, a junior, from Memphis, Tennessee. These awards were presented to the "active" and the "pledge" with the highest scholastic average.

ELECTED LAST WEEK

Married Students Now Hold Offices

A new breed of campus politicians—married men with children—has arrived at UNC. In last week's campus-wide elections four married men were elected to student offices. Those elected include the president and treasurer of the student body and the co-editors of the Daily Tar Heel.

Over 1,000 of the 9,600 students in the University are married and live in married students' apartments or in the village of Chapel Hill. Most are graduate or professional students but many of the undergraduates are married, with families.

Michael Lawler of North Hollywood, Calif., is the new student body president. His wife is a graduate student in history and they have a baby, Brian Lawler.

David Ethridge of Chapel Hill and Louisville, Ky., and Gary Blanchard of Portland, Maine, and St. Petersburg, Fla., are co-editors of the Daily Tar Heel. The Ethridge's baby is William Davidson Ethridge Jr., and the other co-editor's son is Brent Blanchard. Mrs. Ethridge attends night classes in political science and modern philosophy, and Mrs. Blanchard works for N. C. Hospital Saving in Chapel Hill.

Dick Akers is treasurer of the student body, his wife is a senior in the School of Pharmacy. They are from Roanoke Rapids and are the parents of Richard Edwin Akers Jr.

In an informal student opinion poll, a scattering of students said it didn't occur to them, when they voted, whether the candidates were married or single. "We just voted for the ones we thought were the best men," said one observer. "The fact they are married is coincidental."

Questions as to whether married men with families will be able to do justice to their studies, their families and their extra-curricular activities seem to be answered in that all the married men elected and their wives are budgeting their time rather well and propose to continue to do so. Both Blanchard and Ethridge are on the dean's list for top grades. Akers is an A and B student and headed for Phi Beta Keppa. Lawler also is a good student, will forego temporarily an honors program in English and will continue in Graduate School after next year.

Ethridge is the son of Mark Ethridge, chairman of the Board of the Louisville Courier-Journal, who will join the faculty of the University's School of Journalism next September.

Blanchard attends Carolina on a special scholarship awarded by the St. Petersburg Times. He has been staff correspondent for the Charlotte Observer and other newspapers and radio stations.

Theatre Gives Free Passes Here Today

Free passes to "Divorce, Italian Style," will be given out today by four UNC and Duke students touring the campus in a promotion campaign for The Rialto Theatre in Durham.

The students will begin the tour at 2 p.m. in front of Harry's Restaurant and will distribute leaflets from a poster bedecked convertible. Some of the leaflets will contain free tickets to the movie which starts today at the Rialto.

"Divorce, Italian Style" won an Oscar Monday night for the best screen play of the year, and was nominated for the two other awards. The students distributing leaflets will enact the roles of the four leading characters of the satire on ancient Italian laws on divorce and murder.

DeLung Selected Chairman Of 33-School NSA Region

Harry DeLung, UNC NSA Coordinator, was elected chairman of the Carolinas-Virginia region of the National Student Association (NSA) Saturday at the regional assembly in Greensboro. There are 33 member schools in the three-state region.

The assembly was keynoted by a speech by Carey McWilliams, Jr., professor of government at Oberlin College. He defended the right of students to self-government in the academic community, and cited the need for student responsibility to their college and community.

McWilliams compared the attitude of university administrations to that of "big business" in the nineteenth century. "They feel that because higher education is a voluntary institution, students must give up their rights when they come to the university. A degree is just as necessary today as employment was 50 years ago, and administrations can no longer tell students, 'If you don't like our rules, you can go elsewhere.'"

Lowenstein Speaks

Al Lowenstein, professor of social studies at N. C. State, spoke to the regional assembly about his experiences as a student and non-student in the academic community.

Lowenstein, a UNC graduate and familiar figure in Chapel Hill, recalled the year the State Student Legislature (SSL) voted to invite Negro schools to sit with them in the State Capital. "We were told that we would be thrown out of school, that we could never use the capital again, and even the Raleigh newspapers called it a radical move.

"In the midst of all this," he said, "We were unsure as to what we should do. Several of us approached a man who was staying at the Sir Walter Hotel and asked him his opinion. He said, 'I would always hope my students would vote their convictions.' We did, and the Negro schools were invited. The man was Dr. Frank Graham."

UNC Students Elected

Two other UNC students were elected to regional offices. Ivars Lama, a junior and member of the NSA committee, was elected International Affairs Vice - Chairman. Mike Chanin, University Party chairman, was elected treasurer.

DeLung, who is a member of NSA's National Executive Committee, announced plans to visit every school in the region next year. Other proposals for regional activity included a conference on Aims of Education and the Students' Role in Academic Planning, a monthly newsletter about activities at member schools, and sub-regional conferences about using NSA in student government.

Other students attending from UNC were: Bob Spearman, John Ulfelder, John Dunne, Pete Wales, Bill Bowerman, and David Lester.

Commission At UNC

A bill establishing a commission at UNC to study problems of student governments in the region was passed by the assembly. John Bynum, student body president at N. C. State, introduced the bill, and called it a much needed innovation for assisting smaller schools with problems in student autonomy and violations of students' rights.

The commission will hold five sub-regional seminars on the results of the study, and a workshop at the 1964 spring regional assembly.

Tim Manring, NSA National Affairs Vice-President and past student body president of Washington State University, spoke to the assembly about proposed reforms for NSA. He called for a division of the country into four divisions, each with a full-time program—vice-president who would travel to schools in that area.

Beth Walker Best Senior

By DIANE HILE

Valkyries received and gave honors Monday night as Elizabeth (Beth) Anne Walker, president of the Valkyries, received the Irene F. Lee trophy for the most outstanding senior woman and also awarded the annual Valkyries Sing trophies.

Winners for the Sing, who competed among 18 fraternities, sororities and special groups are: Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority, women's sing division; Kappa Delta, women's skit division; Alpha Tau Omega, men's sing divisions; Delta Upsilon, men's skit division; and Phi Mu Alpha, special division.

Beth Walker, a political science major from Jacksonville, Fla., played the dual role as narrator for the Sing and recipient of the award presented by Dean Katherine K. Carmichael.

Miss Walker has held a prominent role of serving in activities and organizations on campus. During the current year she has served as president of the Valkyries, vice-president of the Panhellenic Council, secretary of the senior class and secretary of the Model U. N. Assembly.

A transfer student from Hollins College her junior year, she was elected secretary of her class, vice-president and activities chairman of Chi Omega sorority and secretary of the Model U. N. Assembly.

A committee composed of students representing campus organizations and selected members of the administration chose Miss Walker as recipient of the cup. The award has been given annually since to the UNC woman judged most outstanding in charcter, leadership and scholarship.

Kappa Kappa Gamma, winners of the women's sing division, competed with five other sororities with their "Sound of Tar Heel Voices." In a lively medley of songs they traved the musical history of Carolina's coed beginning at the turn of the century and continuing to the present day. The group, under the direction of Peggy Stephenson, tied the medley songs together with a narrator, Kay Covington. The Kappas won the trophy two years ago.
